The inhabitants of this country are a fine hardy race, and particularly in the eastern part of the promontory we found men of immense stature. They are also comparatively frank and simple-minded, and seem more accessible and impressible than the Chinese generally. I may add that they have a wide reputation for integrity among their own countrymen, which the inhabitants of the western part of the province do not possess. Though they everywhere thronged us, as the people do in other parts, hardly giving us time to eat or sleep, they were always respectful, and listened to the preaching of the gospel with unusual interest. The most of the places through which we passed had never before been visited by foreigners. We were, however, in no instance, received with suspicion, and a few words of introduction and explanation invariably gained for us a hearty welcome. Besides preaching to the crowds which gathered round us in the streets, we endeavoured to gather evening audiences of the intelligent and influential inhabitants of the cities and villages through which we passed, for the sake of more personal and direct conversation on Christian topics. Many of these interviews were full of interest and encouragement, and not a few seemed forcibly impressed by the power of divine truth. We hope to hear from many of them again.

Chinese Officers.

We were not only cordially received by the people, but also by the officers. We purposely avoided having much to do with this class, but in the only places where we had interviews with them, they were the ones to make the first advances. We were treated with special civility by the magistrate of the beautiful city of Lai-yiang. On entering the city towards evening, we noticed a beautiful new marble tablet by the road-side, and learned, on inquiry, that it was erected by the people in honour of this officer, who last year led out a company of soldiers in person and drove back the rebels on three successive occasions. When we arrived at this place, not being well, I was unable to proceed further on horseback, and, as we could not get a mule litter in any other way, we sent a servant to procure one through the ya-mun. The officer took immediate steps to provide us with a conveyance, and asked the servant a great many questions about us, and his connection with us. He then proposed to call on us, but the servant took the liberty of declining the call as we were weary and ill, and had no suitable place to receive him. As we were about sitting down to our simple supper, two servants came from the ya-mun, bringing the officer's card, and an immense basket, containing seventeen dishes of food, all quite palatable. We sent back word, that after such an expression of kindness, we should ask the privilege of calling on him at half-past eight in the evening, to thank him in person. He sent back word that he hoped we would not do so, as we must be very tired, and it was already late. We went, however, and were very cordially received. This officer is a young man about thirty, of very modest and unassuming manners He ascribed all his success last fall in his engagements with the rebels to the loyalty and efficiency of the people. Hearing the gun fired for shutting the city gates, we withdrew. The officer proposed to return our call immediately, as he knew that we were expecting to leave the next morning, but we insisted on his not doing so. However, a few moments after our return to the inn, he came with his retinue, and made a long call, during which we had a good opportunity of conversing much on the subject of Christianity.

The Rebels.

Wherever we went, we were never out of sight of the fearful ravages of the rebels who visited this country last year. Hardly a town but suffered more or less, and some were almost entirely destroyed. The suburbs of Kiao-cheo were burned close to the walls, and the rebels had the impudence to come frequently to the foot of the wall to demand ransom money, and the people were too cowardly to fire on them. An immense amount of money and labour are being expended in anticipation of another incursion of these banditti. The inhabitants are surrounding nearly all the larger villages with mud walls. These walls are generally about twenty or twenty-five feet high, with a deep moat outside of them. We generally passed about twenty of these walled villages in a day's journey. I am glad to add that there is now great reason to hope that the people will not have occasion to make use of these defences, as the rebels have been meeting with a succession of defeats, and we trust may soon be exterminated We certainly have little to fear from them at present, if indeed we ever hear from them again.

The work before us.

You will see from the statements now made the extent and importance of the field before us. The richest and most populous part of the province in the west, which we have not yet visited, is equally open to us, and we may go everywhere preaching the gospel without let or hinderance. God has answered our prayers for the opening of this field, and left almost nothing, so far as outward advantages are concerned, to be desired. Not only this province, containing a population of twenty-seven millions, but the adjoining provinces of the north, are also open to us; and how very few are the labourers! The Romanists are taking early advantage of the new treaties, and are everywhere entering these inviting fields.

The comparative importance of the North.

It seems to me that there are special reasons why the church should devote a great share of her means and energies to the north of China. These reasons resolve themselves into two; the healthfulness of the climate, and the prevalence of a uniform dialect. There are few places where health is so essential to extensive usefulness and efficiency as in this field. The language being a difficult one, to gain a thorough knowledge of it, spoken and written, requires years of hard study. In the southern parts of China generally, it must be admitted, that the climate is very trying to most foreign constitutions. Not a small proportion of missionaries are taken from the field by sickness or death, before the means for reaching the people is acquired; and many, in view of the difficult task before them, set for themselves a low standard, and are content with moderate acquisitions. The tables which give the average of missionary life in China, present facts which should not be disregarded. Far be it from me to encourage an unchristian timidity in avoiding dangers and risks, in making known Christ's name to the heathen. In this work there can be no sacrifice of life and health which should not be cheerfully and thankfully borne, if necessary; but is it not the duty of the church to adopt those plans for the propagation of the gospel which promise to be the most effective to attain the object desired, with the least sacrifice? As far as we can judge from observation and experience, this is one of the most healthful climates in the world, and a foreigner may have a reasonable prospect of working hard and living as long here as at home. We must remember, too, that every year added to a missionary's life is increased in value, as compared to previous years, on account of his constantly increasing knowledge and influence. Again, a missionary, in acquiring the northern or mandarin dialect, has a far wider sphere of usefulness open before him than a missionary in the south; and can at any time change his station, if circumstances make it desirable, without the interruption of learning a new dialect. His dialect will be invaluable to him wherever he may go, even though it may be to the south of China. It seems to me, then, that it is the clear policy of the Board, while sustaining well all the old stations, and greatly extending their influence by native agencies, to send a larger number of new men to the northern provinces. This seems to be the most favourable place for putting in the leaven which is to work through the whole mass. It seems to us that this is a place peculiarly favourable for establishing schools, and especially a theological seminary for training young men for the ministry from all parts of China. But I will write you more at length on this subject in a future letter.

Tungchow as a Mission field.

We have come to the conclusion, after a careful survey of this promontory, that no other place is so well fitted for our first mission station in Shantung, as the one to which we have been in the providence of God directed. While the whole of the promontory has a dry, healthful climate, we think the climate of Tungchow peculiarly good. Being situated on a point, or spur, which runs out for several miles into the sea, it has peculiar advantages for pure sea air, the winds blowing on it from the sea from three points of the compass. It is situated, (which is a very rare thing in China,) on the sea shore, and fifteen minutes walk from our houses brings us to a beautiful beach, while high hills rise immediately back of the city. When trade increases, there will proably be constant communication with Yin-tai (Chefoo) by coasting vessels, the distance being only thirty miles by sea. So much for Tungchow as a sanatarium, which we have long needed in China. With reference to its importance as a missionary station, it is the largest of the thirteen walled cities of the promontory, and exercises jurisdiction over the most of them, being the Fu city of a very large district. Indeed, most of the promontory belongs to it, and all the scholars collect here at the examinations. We feel that it is preëminently the place for the first station in the east of the province; and that new stations should be formed as soon as possible along the highway to Pekin, and in the capital of the province of Tsi-nan. It is difficult to determine now just what places will be most suited for new stations, or to anticipate in this era of change what will be the state of things in China a year or two hence. There will, however, be nothing lost in any number of missionaries coming here at once, learning the language, and entering into any of the new fields of the north, as circumstances and their own choice may determine.

Mr. Danforth's illness.

It has been our intention for some time to write you a joint letter, to treat more at length of some subjects referred to in this. A very sad event, however, with a recital of which I must close this letter, has rendered it impossible to confer either with Mr. Gayley or Mr. Danforth, though I am sure that this letter expresses their sentiments as well as my own. You have, no doubt, heard, by previous letters, that Mr. Danforth had an attack of pleurisy about two months since, and was taken to Yin-tai for medical treatment. When brother Gayley and I started out on our trip, he was daily improving, and we hoped to find him at home on our return. On reaching home, however, last Tuesday, we learned that his disease had taken an unfavourable turn, and that our wives in our absence had gone to Yin-tai to be with him, fearing that he would survive but a few days. Hearing this startling news, we left the same evening for this place. Brother Danforth is now much better, but still in a very critical state. Brother Gayley has returned to Tungchow, and I and my wife are staying here with him. We trust he will soon be well enough to return to Tungchow.

Yours, very truly,
JOHN L. NEVIUS.

AFRICA—CORISCO MISSION.

Death of the Rev. William Clemens.

We insert here the narrative of this sad event, which was drawn up by the Rev. C. De Heer, one of his missionary associates, and his companion on the voyage. Mr. De Heer arrived at New York on the 22d of August.

Dear Sir—It becomes my very painful duty to communicate to you the sad event of the death of the Rev. William Clemens, who departed this life on the 24th of June, on Board the bark "Greyhound," at sea.

On the 20th of May, at 11 o'clock at night, we started from Corisco in the mission boat for the Gaboon, to be in time for the vessel which was to sail within two days for the United States. Our boat's crew consisted of native Christians, the fruits of our labour, the missionary's joy. Promising ourselves a speedy passage, we bid farewell to the dear island, in hope that, if consistent with the divine counsels, we might be restored to it again. It was not long, however, before we were overtaken by a thunder-storm, which lasted for some time; indeed our situation became more and more dangerous. The roaring of the sea below, and that of the thunder above us, with no light to guide us except what proceeded from an angry sky, and which came so near us, were sufficient to make the stoutest heart to tremble. The rain lasted nearly all night, and when daylight appeared we perceived that we were much out of the way in an opposite direction, the consequence of which was, that we were obliged to spend another whole day and night at sea before we could reach the place of our destination; we were, however, favoured with better weather until we arrived at the vessel at twelve o'clock the next day. The captain now informed us that he was not ready to sail that day. Most agreeably with our wishes, we left our baggage on board the vessel, and crossed the river to visit the brethren at the Gaboon, [of the American Board mission.] As usual, we were received with a very hearty welcome: we remained with them till the 28th. At seven o'clock, A. M., we parted with them, and started for the vessel. Immediately after our arrival, the vessel set sail, and within an hour we were on our way, bound to St. Thomas. St. Thomas is about one hundred and eighty miles from the Gaboon river, in a westward direction; but, having so much calm weather, it was not before the 10th of June that we arrived there. The vessel being detained at the island until the 13th, we had an opportunity of going ashore, and visiting the place once or twice, for a few hours at a time.

During all the time from our leaving Gaboon we both suffered more or less from sea-sickness, besides slight attacks of fever; sometimes we were confined to our state-rooms for a whole day. (The writer was by far the greatest sufferer.) Still, we were both under the impression, that the longer we were at sea, the better it would be for the benefit of our health. Yet in this we were both disappointed. On the 17th Mr. Clemens was again taken with fever, and kept his room all that day. The next day he did not seem to be any better. Being well acquainted with the nature of African fever, and also with the proper treatment, he took more quinine that day, so as to break up the fever. On the third day the fever had not yielded. . . .

[Mr. De Heer then describes the progress of the fever and the measures made use of to arrest it. Such constant and faithful services as he could render, being himself feeble, and the kind offices of the captain and supercargo, were continued—the captain giving up to Mr. Clemens his own state-room, in order to make him more comfortable. Expectations of his recovery were indulged, both by Mr. Clemens and the friends around him, but at length the course of the disease became so marked as to leave no room for hope. At half-past five, before day-light, on the 24th of June, he breathed his last.]

. . . None of the men were turned to, and no work was done during the day. At half-past one o'clock, P. M., all hands assembled in the cabin, except the man at the wheel, to attend to the funeral services, after which all went on deck, the vessel was hove to, and after a few remarks, the corpse was launched solemnly into the sea. Benediction was then pronounced, and the service closed. At noon that day we were in lat. 2° of S., 6° 27′ W. long.

Again is our dear mission plunged into deep sorrow by the loss of one of its most able and laborious members. Answerable to his high calling as a missionary of the cross, our sainted brother executed his office in season and out of season; indeed, by night and by day, on the land and on the sea, the mountain top and the valley, the chapel, as well as the poor African hut; in short, he was the missionary everywhere. It was for Africa, long despised and neglected Africa, that his noble Christián heart bled. Honoured with the privilege of becoming a servant to "the servant of servants," he sacrificed his all to win them for Christ. To be the means of educating these outcasts of the earth, he took his life into his hand, went forward from tribe to tribe, planting the standard of the cross, proclaiming peace through the blood of the Lamb, liberty to the captives.

Once it seemed that this soldier of Jesus had almost fallen a victim to his deadly foes, yet in that decisive hour the Captain of his salvation was near at hand; he was led to view the glory of the other world for a moment, but not permitted to enter then; his work then was not finished. He was brought back from before the gates of death, retired for a while from the field of action only to renew his strength. Once more he came up to the help of the Lord; once more he approached the field of battle, went onward by sea and by land, conquering in every direction, and returning with the spoils. Now Ham, degraded Ham, shall no longer be a servant of servants unto his brethren, for Jehovah shall be his God, and the God of his seed after him.

Again it seemed that infinite wisdom had directed his path towards his native land. "God moves in a mysterious way" He started, taking with him a part of the arduous work he had undertaken, so as to give the scattering tribes another important part of the Sacred Book in their own tongue; yet, before he was halfway on his voyage home, in an hour not known unto him the Master called him, to come up thither; and the sanctified spirit left its frail bark and landed on the golden coast of the heavenly land; and while the writer was left to mourn the loss of his dear associate, tossed by the billows, he was already safe into the harbour. In that great and marvellous day, when the dead shall be called to life again, then shall the sea give up the dead that are therein; and when all the servants of the Lord at last shall appear before him, Paul at the head of all missionaries, then, too, shall our brother come forward, followed by converts out of different tribes, from Africa's shore; and when all shall receive their reward, then shall it be pronounced of him, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

Yours truly, C. De Heer.

MISSION AMONG ROMANISTS.

Progress of the Gospel in Belgium.

Among the missionary efforts of our European brethren, which have received aid to some extent from our churches through the Board, none deserve to be regarded with greater sympathy than those of the Belgian Missionary Church. That the preaching of the gospel in Belgium has not been in vain, the following letter clearly shows. It was written by the Rev. L. Anet, of Brussels, June 3, 1862. We take it from the Scotch U. P. Record.

I have much pleasure in furnishing you with the details you wished to have about the state and the work of the "Missionary Christian Church" of Belgium.

The work is divided into five branches or schemes: the regular preaching of the gospel, or congregations and stations; the schools; the colportage; the publications; and the book shop and depots. It is only of the first that I can here speak.

Congregations and Stations.

We have now nineteen congregations and stations, six of which have, by the blessing of God, been established within the last five years; and in five of them congregations of communicants have been formed, and in all of them many hearers attend the public meetings for worship. The members and the hearers are entirely composed of converts from Rome, except in the case of one congregation, that of Antwerp. In this last city, since we had a chapel, which is twenty months ago, more than five thousand Romanists have heard the good tidings of salvation; but the regular attendants are Protestants from Holland, among whom a great deal of good is done by the ministry of our missionary. It was not for the Dutch Protestants residing in Antwerp that we placed a missionary in that city; but as they have no other opportunity to hear the preaching of the truth, we consider our work there as important as if the audience was composed of Romanists. I repeat that, in the five other stations of which I speak, the communicants are all converts from Rome, and the hearers are Romanists. For example, in the station of Houdeng, situated about twenty-four miles from Brussels, and established two years and a half ago, there are more than forty communicants, all converts from Rome, and between two and three hundred hearers, of whom not a single one was born Protestant. And these communicants have given proof that they are—so far as man can judge—truly converted to God. Such a result in the space of less than three years is, I think, a great blessing. Generally speaking, I may say that the work advances in all our congregations and stations without cessation, and that many conversions have taken place during the last year.

Little flocks of Believers.

Besides these congregations, there are many groups of converts situated in different parts of the kingdom, who are too far from any chapel to be able to attend public worship. These groups have been formed by various instruments and circumstances; some by the reading of the New Testament and of tracts, and some by other means. I will give but one example taken from many. Little more than two years ago, a young man, engaged in a manufactory at Brussels, said to several of his fellow-workmen that he had bought a New Testament; but not being able to understand it, he was very desirous to get somebody who would give to him the right meaning. A young man who was present answered, "I know a Protestant chapel in which every Monday the gospel is expounded; I will take you there if you like." "Most happy shall I be to go," replied the other. So they went, and after a very few months, this young man who was so anxious to understand the gospel was convinced of the errors of Rome, of the state of sin, and of the atonement made for his sins by the shed blood of our blessed Lord Jesus Christ. He obtained hope and peace by the assurance of his reconciliation with God through the mediation of his Son. After that he went back to his village, situated about twenty miles from Brussels, and gave to his family an account of his change. His poor parents were terrified at hearing that he had left the Romish church, and become a Protestant. Warm discussions took place: the priest of the parish was called in, and every effort was made to bring back that young man to the Pope's church; but all was in vain. So far from being brought back to his father's religion, he succeeded, under the blessing of God, to bring to the knowledge of Christ all his family. So his father and mother, his brother and his three sisters, have been converted, and, we have reason to believe, truly converted to God. As soon as they enjoyed the comfort of a divine hope, they felt the desire to render their neighbours partakers of like privileges. And now, in that village, twenty-five persons have left the Papist religion, and are seriously engaged in the way of salvation. The chief means have been the reading of the New Testament and religious tracts, and the blessing has been given by the Holy Spirit They assemble together every Lord's day, to read the Bible, pray, and exhort one another; and a minister visits them from time to time. Thus, besides our nineteen stations, we have many such little flocks of believers spread throughout the kingdom, and they are torches in the darkness of superstition and unbelief.

Deaf and Dumb Evangelist.

We have engaged in the work a kind of evangelist unknown, I think, in Scotland—namely, an evangelist who is deaf and dumb. He was brought out from the church of Rome about twenty years ago, and for these four or five years he has felt anxious to bring to the knowledge of the gospel his fellow-sufferers; and he has been the instrument, in the merciful hands of God, for the conversion of eleven of them, who were all born and brought up Romanists. They have been carefully examined with regard to their faith and religious convictions, by a minister and an elder, and after that admitted to our Lord's Supper. Now we employ that dear friend to visit, in Brussels and in many other towns, his fellow-sufferers, and teach them the way of salvation. He also presides over the meetings of the deaf and dumb in Brussels, every Sabbath when worship is observed.

State of the Funds.

I shall defer to another opportunity to speak of our other schemes; allow me only to add two or three sentences about our present financial circumstances. Our budget of expenditures is about £4400 a year. Our financial year will end on the last day of June, and to clear up our accounts at that date, we want at this moment more than £900. We earnestly crave the assistance of those of your friends who truly love the Lord.

OUR PRESENT WORK.

The missionary part of the Board's work in past years, has been chiefly performed through the instrumentality of colporteurs, each of whom occupied a particular territory, and who went from house to house, giving away religious tracts, disposing of religious volumes by gift and sale, and conversing and praying with individuals, as Providence might open the way.

During the past year, the Board has been largely called by God's providence to engage in another field of operations. Hundreds of thousands of soldiers and sailors have claimed our Christian sympathies, and have called upon us to supply them with religious reading while away from their homes. While, from want of available means, the number of our regular colporteurs has been diminished for the time, in this latter work the Board is now engaged to the utmost of its ability. Up to the 1st of May last, about 300,000 of our soldiers and sailors had received from the Board, through various channels, religious books and tracts.

Of late, two classes of soldiers have been receiving a large share of our attention. They are; firstly, the sick and wounded in the military hospitals in every part of the land; and secondly, the prisoners captured by our armies. Large numbers of these classes, both east and west, have been visited, and supplied with suitable reading. Our readers will find in this number of the Record two letters in regard to this work. It is deeply interesting, it is solemnly momentous, and ought to enlist the cordial and liberal coöperation of every patriot, as well as every Christian. It only remains to say again, that the money received by the Board is used as fast as it comes, and that we have by no means enough to supply the immense quantities of books and tracts solicited for this use.

HOSPITAL DISTRIBUTIONS.

Military Hospital, Keokuk, Iowa,
August, 1862.

At this pleasant and healthy location, on the Mississippi, two hundred miles above St. Louis, four large buildings are used as hospitals. At the present time they contain sixteen hundred inmates. I have the satisfaction of saying, that every occupied bed in these hospitals has been visited—every man has been furnished with some one of our publications suitable to his condition. Nine hundred and fifty Soldier's Pocket-Books have been here distributed. I am aware that this is a more liberal distribution than we can generally afford, but it is not beyond what we ought to have the means of making. This little book is a "permanent document." It is such a welcome messenger among the soldiers, it is so attentively read, so highly prized, and so carefully preserved, that it ought to be in the hands of every soldier.

Next to the "Soldier's Pocket-Book," our "Sheet-Music" is warmly welcomed by the singing soldiers, of whom I find a very large number. The dull eye fairly sparkles, and the pale countenance is wonderfully lighted up, as I place upon the bed a selection of these little sheets, and such a pleasant sunlight seems cast upon their pathways, as little groups collect and sing, with cheerful voices, these sweet songs of Zion, that one feels abundantly repaid for all his labour.

I need not repeat the old story of books and tracts received gratefully, and read attentively. I have been received with such uniform kindness, and the men have been so free to converse upon religious subjects, that the work has been unusually encouraging. Sixteen hundred hearts have been made glad, and much precious seed has been sown, which, God's promise for it, will yield its harvest in his own good time.

These hospitals have now a chaplain, a New-school brother, the Rev. C. A. Williams. He has a judiciously arranged hospital library, to which it was my privilege to make a small donation of our books. These men must have religious reading, and this their chaplain cannot furnish, except as he is himself supplied. With his consent, I made my own distributions.

"But all this amounts to nothing—this work has no apparent fruits," says the objector. Are you sure of that, sir? When did your vision penetrate far enough into the eternal secrets to ascertain this fact, and discover that God is false to his promises? But you are mistaken. The objection is untrue. In our camps and hospitals there are hundreds, aye, thousands, of living witnesses, who, thanks to abounding grace, can stand up to-day and testify to its untruthfulness. I find the experience of Chaplain Williams coincides with my own, when he declares that "hopeful conversions in camps and hospitals are by no means uncommon." Will not these facts encourage our churches and Sabbath-schools to aid us in this noble work?

"But soldiers destroy their books." Do they? Allow me, with no limited experience, to tell you that they do not. I have found scores who have carried their books and tracts in their pockets for months. Here, as I stand on the sidewalk, near the entrance to the hospital, a young soldier crosses the street and approaches me. He is an invalid. I hand him a Soldier's Pocket-Book, asking him to accept it as a gift. He says, "I would, sir, very thankfully, for it is a nice book, but I already have one." "Where did you get it?" "Months ago, sir, at Pittsburg Landing." Passing through a ward, I find a German copy of the Pocket-Book lying upon the bed of a man who has just stepped out. "Where did this man get this book?" I ask of the man on the next bed. "At Crump's Landing, sir, last spring," was the reply. "Does he read it?" Oh yes; he reads more or less of it every day." "Does he ever pray?" "Yes, he is a praying man." Nor these alone. I have found at least fifteen men who have taken from under their pillows books and tracts given them by me up the Tennessee river, at Cairo, Paducah, or in the St. Louis hospitals. Be encouraged, then, ye who have generously aided us.

But let me recount briefly a few of the many interesting incidents I have witnessed here. I will try not to be tedious. Here is a man just recovering from a long and dangerous illness. With a trembling voice, and tearful eyes, he tells me of a faithful and praying wife. I tell him of God's mercy in sparing him, a barren fig-tree, and ask him if he is resolved hereafter to faithfully serve the Lord. "Indeed I am," is the prompt reply. He is reminded that, under similar circumstances, thousands have made such resolutions, only to cast them to the winds with returning health. Will he follow their example? He says, "God helping me, I will not."

Here is a very intelligent young man from K———, Iowa. His parents, and most of his immediate relations, are members of our church there, under the pastoral charge of the Rev. Mr. J——. But he has never unbarred his heart to the patiently knocking Saviour. Just now the knock has been unusually loud. I ask him if he is sure it is not the last knock. Will he not now arise and open the door? He seems deeply impressed with the importance of an early attention to eternal things, and, after putting suitable books and tracts into his hands, I leave him with the prayer, that God may lead him into the paths of righteousness.

Here is one who has quite lately realized the preciousness of atoning blood. He thinks that while lying upon this very bed, Jesus has said to him, "Son, be of good cheer; thy sins be forgiven thee." He may not linger long amid these scenes of time, but he is ready to depart and be with Christ, which is far better.

Here is another earnestly inquiring "What must I do to be saved?" He feels that he needs salvation—needs to go to Christ. I give him, with other things, the Sheet Hymn "Just as I am," and try to tell him how to go to Jesus. He is too weak for much exertion, so I tell him to read but a verse at a time, and try to adopt the sentiments. Every day while here I have visited him, and other apparently earnest inquirers, and hope that this poor man has found peace in believing.

Here a poor man is dying, perhaps, unprepared. Contrary to what I have seen in other hospitals, a crowd of fellow-soldiers surround his bed, looking on in almost breathless silence, and apparently sympathizing in his sufferings. The occasion seems auspicious, and so I address a few monitory words to the attentive crowd. I feel, as I look into their faces, that I do not speak in vain.

I could relate these incidents by the hour, but I must close. I cannot do so, however, without speaking of the little meeting last evening in one of the hospitals. It was a prayer and conference meeting of such as were able to attend, and was held in the hospital dining-room. About fifty were present, several of whom made no profession of faith in Christ. It was a meeting long to be remembered, for the Spirit was manifestly present in the plenitude of his power. Broken hearts bowed there before the mercy-seat. Past unfaithfulness was deplored, and solemn vows of increased faithfulness were humbly uttered before God; and one stood up in that little assembly, a stricken, convicted sinner, and asked an interest in the prayers of all God's people. Was not this encouraging? S.

DISTRIBUTIONS AMONG THE SOUTHERN PRISONERS.

Military Prison, Alton, Ill.

All who pray for and aid the great work of our Board of Publication among soldiers and sailors, will rejoice to learn that the captives have not been neglected—that every prisoner here has just been furnished with suitable religious reading. Colonel Farrar, the Provost Marshal General, and Captain Washington, the officer in command, kindly furnished us with passes upon ascertaining the purpose of our visit. Safely passing the flashing bayonets of the sentinels at the prison gates, I at once directed my steps, with a well-filled basket of books and tracts on my arm, to the large and crowded hospital. These sick, suffering, and dying ones shall be first visited, conversed with, and supplied. I cannot tell you of the unfeigned gratitude with which these men looked up into my face from their lonely beds as I passed among them, conversing with them, not of temporal, but of eternal things, and leaving behind me our acceptable books and tracts. Such visitors were rare at those bedsides. That these men are sincere in their expressions of gratitude, that reliable witness, the tear-moistened eye sufficiently attests. As I pass from bed to bed, telling of the Balm and the Great Physician in Gilead, there are many expressions of a resolution to go to Him and be healed.

Our books, tracts, and papers are most thankfully received. Strange as it may appear, I did not find a man who seemed offended at the patriotic and loyal sentiments expressed in the "Soldier's Pocket-Book." All seemed to be thinking of something "beyond the flight of time—beyond the reign of death." Said a man to whom I had given one of those little books not half an hour before, and who had read the address to soldiers on the first twelve pages, "I would cheerfully give five dollars if the Federal Government would allow me to send this little book to my two sons in the Confederate army." What an attestation to the worth of that book! "Fas est ab hoste doceri"—it is right to be taught by an enemy, and I was taught, and strengthened, and encouraged. Why, sir, I had rather be the author of the "Soldier's Pocket-Book" than wear the laurels of a Napoleon—aye, of a Washington. Shall such a book be put into the hands of our soldiers? Answer, ye Sabbath-schools and churches, and individual followers of Jesus Christ, the Lord.

In one corner of the room lies a youth of scarcely seventeen summers. He has but a few days to live, and of this he seems fully conscious. He has been reared in the Sabbath-school; he has been faithfully taught from God's blessed word; yet, knowing his duty, he has neglected to perform it. He feels that he deserves the "many stripes," and he now cries, "Sir, we would see Jesus," with more earnestness than did "certain Greeks," for he would look with an eye of faith upon Him whom he has pierced. After talking with him, and committing him to the Saviour's care, I was compelled to leave him.

On another bed, at a window overlooking the broad, free river, rolling gulfwards, lies one just recovering from a severe and dangerous illness. He feels that the life which God's compassion has spared should be devoted to God's service. He has a pious wife, who often, in his distant home, has besought him to be reconciled to God. He knows that she prayed for him then; he believes that she has followed him with tears and prayers; and that, in answer to her wrestling supplications, God has lifted him from the grave's dark portals. Learning these facts from his own lips, I sit beside him, and try to guide his uncertain footsteps into that new and living way to the mercy-seat, through the rent vail of the Saviour's flesh.

Amid such hopeful seed-sowing the hours pass away. It is a blessed privilege thus to labour, for we feel that the "Great Day, for which all other days were made," will surely reveal a most precious harvest. After thoroughly canvassing and supplying the hospital, we directed our attention to the hundreds without. Suffice it to say, that, with such pertinent and kindly admonitions as we could give, all were supplied with such religious reading as their circumstances would require. By every one it was eagerly and thankfully received, and if followed, as it surely should be, with the earnest prayers of God's people, it will not be without its glorious fruits of immortality. Never have I found such a demand for sheet hymns and sheet music; and that they were given to those who could use them, was abundantly shown by the cheerful notes of song which ascended from many a bed, and many a group of singers in that old prison hospital.

Another noticeable thing is the large proportion of professors of religion which is found among these prisoners. Many of them have, since their connection with the army, followed the Saviour at a distance. Some, alas! have turned away from him entirely. It is a cheering indication that, as I go from bed to bed, I find very many of these wanderers returning from the dark mountains to the arms of the faithful Shepherd and Bishop of their souls. They have been afflictively, but, they hope, wisely taught.

My labours here and in the St. Louis hospitals are ended. May God raise up many friends for our brave soldiers, and to our captives too. May many be found ready and able to help the Board of Publication to carry on this blessed work of distribution, both among friends and foes.

GONE TO THE WAR

The terrible struggle which convulses our land, bears heavily on our houseless churches. The general prostration of business, the low price of most kinds of produce, and the drain of men for the war, greatly diminish the ability of our already feeble churches. Scarcely an application has reached us for some time that does not refer to the war as greatly increasing the need of aid. Especially does the drain of men tell upon the houseless churches of the West, where little accumulated property is in the hands of the people, and their chief wealth is in land, and their own labour that tills it Thus far, this year, more than two dollars have been asked for by needy congregations, for every dollar we have received.

LIGHTNING RODS.

A few days ago we read, in an article on Climatology, in the Patent-office Report for 1854, some interesting and apparently reliable statements respecting the destructive effects of lightning on churches. The subject is one that should engage the attention of the trustees of all our feeble churches. The danger to life in crowded churches during thunder-storms ought to be guarded against, and the loss of property from neglect to protect sanctuaries will now be found peculiarly difficult to replace. Especially in the prairie regions of the West is the subject a practical one, and the peril to churches from this source worthy of attention. We therefore lay the following extracts from the article already mentioned before our readers. The writer, speaking of the destruction of life and property in churches, says:

"In Boston, the same steeple has been struck repeatedly. In 1763 the steeple of Antrasme was struck twice during the same storm. On the 25th of April, 1760, the lightning fell three times in twenty minutes on the buildings of Notre Dame de Ham. On the night of the 14th of April, 1718, twenty-four steeples were struck along the coast of Brittany, and on the 11th of January, 1815, twelve steeples suffered a similar fate in the Rhenish provinces. In 1783, a German antiquarian in this province of meteorology found that within the period of thirty-three years three hundred and eighty-six steeples had been struck, and one hundred and twenty-one ringers killed. * * * On the 18th of February, 1770, all the inhabitants of Keverne, in Cornwall, who were in church, were thrown to the ground.

* * * In estimating the destruction by lightning, property, as well as life, must be taken into the account. In 1417 the steeple of St. Mark, in Venice, was struck by lightning and burned. It was rebuilt, and again reduced to ashes on the 12th of August, 1489. It was afterwards built of stone, and was struck again on the 23d of April, 1745. The repairs this time cost eight thousand ducats. On the 27th of July, 1759, lightning burned all the wood-work of the cathedral at Strasburg. It was proposed to place conductors upon it, but there was some objectors, on account of the expense. On the 14th of August, 1833, it was struck three times within a quarter of an hour, and so much damaged that the repairs cost $6,000,000. There was still some hesitation in regard to lightning-rods, when it was struck once more on the 19th of July, 1834. Rods were placed upon it in 1835, at an expense of only $3000. On the 10th of July, 1843, it was struck twice, but the rods saved it.

In reference to the protection of buildings, the same writer says: "As to the capacity of the rod, it has been decided by common consent, that the sectional area of one composed of copper should vary from a circle one half of an inch to three-fourths of an inch in diameter, the larger area being for very tall conductors, and the smaller for shorter ones. In respect to the form of rods, it is quite immaterial whether they be square, round, or flat; but let it be remembered, that in all cases each conductor should be as entire and as straight as possible, presenting a single point to the clouds, with the apex tipped with palladium, the most powerful of all known conductors of electricity. Of all considerations, the most important is a good connection with the earth, which is so very essential, that without this all other precautions will be in vain. It is not enough that the conductor enter the earth; for it must penetrate it to some depth, in fact, till it reaches the subsoil, where it is well impregnated with water. In order to reduce the destructive action of this moisture, (the oxydation of the metal,) and at the same time to give the buried portion of the conductor every facility for dissipating its charge, it is better that the rod should terminate by several branches in a sunken bed of well-burnt charcoal, wood-ashes, or spent tan-bark. Another important point to be considered is the situation and position in which the rods are to be placed after they are put up. In all cases they should be elevated above every other point of attraction at least four times the diameter of the area to be protected; say, in a common-sized house from ten to fifteen feet above the top of the highest chimney, or other object extending above the roof. And, as before intimated, the integrity and upright position of the rods should be maintained as far as practicable, avoiding, also, all abrupt angles, and short turns. If a house, barn, church, factory, &c., be located in the immediate neighbourhood of each other, and only one of them be protected, the danger of all the others will thereby be increased.

"The question now presents itself, How are the rods to be affixed to the building, by conducting or by insulating staples? The unequivocal reply would be, by conducting staples—not those covered with copal varnish, or insulated by necks of glass bottles, as has often been recommended by writers on this subject; for let it be remembered that the flash which may have forced its way through many yards of air, would find no difficulty in passing so slight obstacles as these, if such a direction formed a part of the lightning's path previously prepared or felt out. It is a well established truth, that if a conductor pass near a mass of metal in tolerable connection with the earth, the flash will sometimes divide itself between the two channels, one portion of it continuing its course down the rod, and the other portion leaving it to pursue a side path. Therefore, in order to alleviate this lateral discharge, or deviation from the main channel, all suspected vicinal electrified bodies should be united to the conductor itself by means of metallic wires or bands."

SIGNS OF ENCOURAGEMENT.

Kansas.

Dear Sir—Since my last report, six months ago, I have felt more encouraged with reference to our little church in B——. Though many from the village and its vicinity are absent in the army, our congregations, as to size, are unchanged, except for the better. The members, resident for the most part from two to four miles in the country, are not remiss in their attendance upon public worship, but are generally present, morning and night. The ruling elders are good men, and energetic in the discharge of duty, seeming to desire the advancement of our cause. They have secured and seated for church purposes the largest room in the village. Through their efforts a handsome copy of the Bible has recently been placed upon the stand, behind which somebody's old trunk, upon which I have been endeavouring to accustom myself to a graceful sitting, has given place to a nice arm-chair. A grant of hymn books has been secured from our Board of Publication, so that the praises of the sanctuary, conducted by a company of excellent singers, the whole congregation uniting with them, are much improved. Our members, though few, command a leading influence in political and social life, as well as in the affairs of the church. The spirit of religion seems to be evinced by them in many ways, and not the least I have noticed as an encouragement in my work, is their cordial welcome and kindly intercourse extended to me as often as I am among them; and this gives tone to the treatment shown me by others, whether of other denominations or of the world. The missionary feels some hope of doing good, when his own people show that they have "taken stock" in him, and especially if he sees them trying to keep the stock at or "above par." He cannot but feel and show a deeper interest in them, and the people generally, and labour with increasing zeal and delight for the spiritual welfare of all. Nor is its influence valueless with reference to his own development.

Another Christian disposition has been shown in regard to ministerial support. Until now, I might have said to them, as did Paul to the Corinthians, "I myself was not burdensome to you, forgive me this wrong." And it is a "wrong" more difficult to remedy than prevent. In this I have erred, but I now feel that the missionary should, from the first, be thus burdensome to those to whom he ministers, at least so far as is necessary to cultivate within them a sense of both the privilege and the duty, and permit them to feel that they are "not inferior" to others who try to approximate the gospel standard in the exercise of this grace; and this, however few and feeble they may be, and notwithstanding the kind disposition of our Board of Missions to send the means of grace to the destitute; for the smallest and feeblest band of Christians are not too poor to give unitedly a "mite." And whatever the amount, if given with a will, it serves as an encouragement to the missionary in his work, and an endearment between him and his flock. I now see that by inattention to the cultivation of this grace our cause here has sustained injury. But it was from sympathy with the people in their poverty. At both points there is now some disposition to aid in my support. The amount will be very small, and not in money, but it will be a commencement, and no doubt lead to better things in future.

During the month of December we were blessed with quite an awakening in B——. It began in the Thursday evening prayer-meeting. There happened an unusually large attendance, with some religious interest. A prayer-meeting for every night was resolved on. It was soon evident that the Spirit of God was there. The social religious exercises gave way to public service, which continued two or three weeks. As a result, five have been added to our communion, and the number, we have reason to believe, will be increased, for others are still inquiring.

The church there are taking measures to erect a house of worship next summer. A subscription has been circulated to some extent, and generous sums have been placed upon it. With some help from the Extension Board, they will succeed.

In regard to my work in Auburn, I hardly know what to say. We have been so worn down by the famine, and scattered, that those who remain are much disheartened. We have been so long talking of a house of worship, that the citizens generally have lost confidence in us, and we in ourselves. We were ready to enclose the house last fall, but too late to begin. I still feel that the church will prosper if the work goes on. We have lost, by removal and otherwise, not less than one-half of our church members, and it seems unnecessary for the number that remains to erect so large a building as has been contemplated.

It is clear that the events of the last eighteen months have not "worked together for the moral and spiritual good" of society here. Demoralization has progressed under the very influences which should have tended to the advancement of the people morally and religiously. About one-half of our church members are usually absent from God's house on his holy day. It is so in all the churches. There seems to be no sense of responsibility. This was not the case formerly. Its effect upon the community is evident. Sabbath desecration is common, and there is a widespread irreverence towards sacred things, and all this while our Sabbath congregations have never been larger. The war spirit is rife and raging, and nightly do our citizens, in town and country, gather together to rekindle it over the latest news. Spiritual things are neglected. "All this is come upon us," while but few can say, "Yet have we not forgotten Thee, neither dealt falsely in thy covenant."

I have laboured more, and preached more during the last six months than usual. I shall be compelled to devote one of the two Sabbaths of the month, thus far spent here, to other points, until we can have a house of our own. This is likely to prejudice our interests here for the time, but it cannot be avoided.

Forget us not in your prayers, for the destitute places depending on you for a preached gospel.

SIGNS OF REVIVAL.

New York.

Rev. and very dear Brother—I rejoice in any encouraging indications which I may be able to communicate to your noble Board, to repay them in any way, though poorly it may be, for their laborious efforts to send spiritual blessings among these destitute neighbourhoods. I may have reported to you, in my last, that a work of grace was in progress in Damascus Union church. I think not, however, as my last commission was out before it commenced. Last spring a series of meetings were commenced in the church, (which we occupy jointly with two other denominations, Methodists and Baptists,) by the Methodists, and was carried on by us in connection with them. It was soon evident that we were not working alone. The Spirit of God gave us a grateful visit, pouring solemnity on the whole community. Christians were strengthened and reinvigorated. Sinners were convicted, and many of the most trifling and vain among the young became deeply thoughtful on their eternal concerns. Penitential tears were commonest from eyes least used to weep for sin; and a precious harvest of souls was gathered for the three denominations, chiefly among the young. Six of these converts have joined our church in Damascus, and I expect others to join. The interest still seems to continue in a good degree, and all results, so far, seem very encouraging. At our last communion here (Cochecton) two persons joined on profession of their faith, and others still I am expecting to come forward.

It seems impossible to tell whether the religious interest here has deepened or not. Sometimes I almost expect to see Christ's brighter day dawn on us; and then the darkness deepens—darker than ever. Our congregations keep on an encouraging footing as to numbers; and this year our Sabbath-school numbers eighty scholars, which, in a small sparse neighbourhood like this, is quite a fair proportion of the children. We are gradually getting into the way of more frequent collections, especially for your Board, and endeavouring to hasten the prospect of self-support in these churches. I feel that we should do so as quickly as possible, considering the great outlay you are compelled to make. My only hope, however, for this ability, is, that God will convert the chief men here, and give them larger hearts towards the languishing church of Christ.

This outline, dear sir, I beg leave respectfully to present to you, and through you to the Board, as my report of the religious prospects of the churches of Cochecton and Damascus, for the quarter ending August 1st, 1862.

Very respectfully, &c.

A VOICE FROM THE FAR WEST.

Minnesota.

Dear Brother—My quarterly report, due yesterday, may be short, as the last three months have not furnished anything special in my field of labour. The attendance on our Sabbath services, and at our prayer-meetings, has been larger than usual lately, and I have thought there was an awakened interest among our church-members. I trust, indeed, it is so. Since my last report, three persons have united with the church. I have kept up my regular appointments.

There is a movement in emigration that is beginning to be felt in various parts of Minnesota. The Homestead Bill is directing many to seek homes in this State, and I feel that the Board will soon be called upon to meet the wants of new settlements. They will mainly settle on our unoccupied farming lands, many of which are very desirable, and always when the tide sets in, villages also receive a portion. For various reasons, I feel that Minnesota will become one of our most important missionary fields, and if population again sets westward, this State will perhaps receive a larger proportion than any other, and mainly from the fact that we have millions of choice lands still unoccupied, and free from the blight of the land-warrant system. But perhaps it is not wise to be sanguine until our national difficulties are settled, and the fearful cloud now hanging over us passes away. May God, in his mercy and overruling providence, hasten the day! Anxiety in regard to our national interests seems to absorb all others, and I apprehend the church generally feels the waning of religious interests before the events now transpiring.

Call for Labourers.

At the last meeting of the Presbytery of Owatonna I was requested, as Chairman of the Committee of Missions, to correspond with ministers, and also with the Board, in reference to securing a missionary for the churches of Okaman, and East Pararee and Farabault. There are two small churches in this field, and one or two families of Presbyterians at Farabault. The last place has a population of about fifteen or eighteen hundred, and lies between the two churches now formed. Some of our ministers think we ought to have a minister at this point. The reason it has not been occupied, is owing, perhaps, mainly, to the fact that the Episcopalians have made special efforts to control the population. The bishop resides there, and they have their schools and college in operation there. There is also a Congregational church. It will afford a good field for a good man, with a wide and fine country surrounding it, where points of preaching could be established. The two little churches could probably raise about $200 for a minister, a good part of it to be paid in provisions, as the church-members are mostly farmers.

Now, dear brother, would you be so kind as to direct some one seeking a field of labour to this point; or, if you know any persons looking westward, request them to correspond with me; or, if I had the names of any, I would at once open a correspondence with them. We very much need two or three good men in this part of Minnesota; but, as I occupy the outpost in this direction, I never see personally those seeking locations in this State. I trust you will be able to do something for us.

Yours truly.

THINGS ON THE BORDER.

Missouri.

Dear Sir—The funds and clothing which you have sent to us have been thankfully received, and have added greatly towards relieving our present wants. And please tell those dear Christian ladies in the East, who are caring for and seeing to the wants of their missionaries in the far West, that they ever have our prayers and kindest regards, and that they cannot estimate the amount of good they are accomplishing—the many hearts they are gladdening by their kind favours. The clothing came just in time, was just what we needed, and was highly appreciated. Every thing of this sort had been taken out of the country; and had not the Board, in their benevolence, sent to our necessity, we should have been compelled to abandon the field; and this I should have regretted much to have done, for a brother at Springfield and myself are the only Presbyterian ministers that have been labouring in all this southwestern Missouri during all these troubles.

I hope the Lord will bless you in your arduous labours, and that you may lift up your voice like a trumpet; that you will cry aloud and spare not, calling upon the churches to rally; to come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty; to replenish at once our Boards, that from thence streams may flow to gladden the city of our God.

Notwithstanding our many and great troubles through which we have passed, we have went along and tried to preach faithfully the word of God. Our people have been punctual in their attendance upon the means of grace. Prayer-meetings are well attended every Thursday night, and in the afternoon of Sabbath. Yet we have, dear brother, one privilege denied us here—we cannot pray in public for our government. We must not pray for the President of the United States and his Cabinet. We must not pray for the commander-in-chief of our armies, and for those patriotic soldiers who are willing to give their all to sustain and perpetuate the best government that God ever gave to man. Now, I have always been taught, that it was our duty to pray for those in authority. And does not the Bible teach, that it is our privilege, at all times, and under all circumstances, to pray for all men, and for all in authority? Yet we cannot pray for civil rulers, and for our armies, and the integrity and perpetuity of the government, without throwing ourselves liable to rebukes and censures of many among us, and exposing ourselves to many dangers. We hope the day will soon come when we shall not be so trammelled, and when we shall enjoy all our former privileges.

Yours fraternally.

CHRISTIAN PATRIOTISM.

Indiana.

Dear Brother—Absence from home prevented me from rendering my report last week, as I ought, for this quarter. God has again mercifully permitted me to labour for him another three months with very little interruption.

I have preached every two weeks at Kendallville, besides keeping up our weekly prayer-meeting, and I think God causes some of the seed sown to fall into good ground. The war excitement just now seems to divide the minds of many, but I trust God will bring good out of this evil. The rush after the world needed a check. Men needed a hand on the rein that they could feel. Our nation—church and state—must be humbled. There must be more humble faith, humble prayer, and trust in God and more humble acknowledgment of God's ruling providence in all our affairs. These chastisements of our Heavenly Father may make our backs sore, may tighten our burdens instead of lightening them, may oblige our weak churches to strain every nerve, to curtail every expenditure; may oblige us to live on the bare necessaries of food, clothing, and furniture; but such tests will do us good, and no harm. It will purify the gold. "He shall sit as a refiner and as a purifier of silver, and he shall purify the sons of Levi"—his spiritual Levi. Is this not the meaning of this war? Is not the silver and the gold now in the crucible?

I believe it is doing our little creeping churches good out here. If the Lord will work, I am content to let him work in his own way, even though it be by war and bloodshed. I have three sons in the army, and two of them were in the army of Virginia, and in General Prince's brigade. They are probably with him prisoners in Richmond. The will of the Lord be done! I want to have no will of my own. Oh! to be able to say always with Jesus, "I came not to do mine own will, but the will of Him that sent me"! None of them are natives of this country; they were all born in the Sandwich Islands; but I am willing they should sacrifice their lives, if God call them, for the flag that protected us sixteen years in a heathen land. We know the value of that flag. To be able to say, "I am under the protection of the flag of the United States," was our glory in a foreign land, and no less is it our glory now. May God sustain it!

I have preached every fourth Sabbath at Albion, and our little church there feels encouraged. Also every fourth Sabbath at Hopewell, which is a growing little church. During the year five have united by profession and one by letter. May God largely pour out his Spirit on this community!

Very truly yours in Christ.

PERILS FROM THE HEATHEN.

Dear Brother—On the 6th of this month there was a general stampede of the inhabitants of Cole and Clay counties, in Dakota territory. Please recollect that Vermillion is the county-seat of Clay county, and Cole is the county between it and Sioux City, Iowa.

Some four or five hundred Sauntee Sioux Indians made hostile demonstrations. They killed Judge Armidon and his son, a youth about twenty years of age. It was thought they intended to do to the settlers in Dakota territory what was done in Minnesota. The fright was fearful. A panic seized the people. Women and children fled in the greatest consternation. Seventy-five families came to the Big Sioux crossing in one night, and among them was all my congregation. This ferry is four miles from Sioux City. Teams were rushing there during the entire night, conveying the panic-stricken to the fort which was being erected in Sioux City Three hundred soldiers marched, with all possible dispatch, to the latter place, and this caused the panic to measurably subside.

What is to be our fate here this fall and winter is known only to Omniscience. Should the different tribes bury their tribal animosities, and thus be able to act in concert, we must expect to witness bloody scenes. Our Presbytery was to meet at Vermillion on the 12th instant, but the Rev. D. S. McComb, of Kossuth county, (without whom we could have no quorum,) has failed to make his appearance. The settlers along the route he proposed to travel have all fled to the nearest villages. I suppose he felt that he would fall a victim to savage barbarity should he attempt to make his way to Presbytery. Possibly, Dakota territory, as a missionary field, will have to be abandoned. As events ripen I will keep you informed as to our condition. O Lord! may an honourable peace soon bless our bleeding land! Pray for us.

Yours in Christ.

PLEASANT NEWS.

Illinois.

Dear Sir—I find the report due the first of the month has not been sent. The only reason I can give is, that I have been busily employed in my field, and have been more intent upon work than wages.

I find here a very interesting field. The church is free of debt, and entered cheerfully with me upon the work of extension. A Sabbath-school was organized, under the care of the session. I make a report to them this week Seventy-five scholars have been in attendance, and nine teachers, and some thirty dollars expended in books. The war has had a great influence in keeping the church in working order. We have tried to keep all our sails unfurled, in order to be ready for the Master's will.

Ten miles west of this, where I have been preaching in the afternoon of every other Sabbath, I organized a church last week, and it was taken under the care of Presbytery. They have a Sabbath-school, and the Sabbath I am not with them they have meeting for prayer. The church was organized with thirteen members. Ten were added, by examination, on Sabbath last, making twenty-three members. It is in the midst of a growing population, and, I hope, will be of great service in moulding the community in which it is. The church at this place has resolved to adopt the Plan of Systematic Beneficence recommended by the General Assembly. So far as I now see, all things are working to the well-being of the church.

Your brother in Christ.

RESPONSIBILITY—ON WHOM DOES IT REST?

It is believed that great misapprehensions prevail among the members of our churches in relation to the duties which are incumbent on the Board in sustaining the candidates under its care. The Board is organized by the Assembly merely to carry out its will. It originates no plans, no rules, no laws, and exercises no jurisdiction but as prescribed by the Assembly itself, and can be held to no responsibility but a faithful discharge of the duties designated by the Assembly, whose servant and agent it is.

Cannot the Board, however, be held responsible for funds? Only so far as to employ all lawful means, and to urge all proper motives to induce presbyteries and sessions to carry into execution the plan of Systematic Benevolence as devised and enjoined by the Assembly. Hence, every pledge and obligation for the sustentation of our candidates originates with the Assembly, and not with the Board; and there can be no failure to fulfil any pledge that the Assembly has given, without a failure on the part of the ministry and membership of our church to perform that which they have promised. Will not, then, the guilt of unfaithfulness be greatly aggravated at a period like this, when God is visiting with sore judgments our church and land?

DUTY OF SYSTEMATIC CONTRIBUTION.

A Christian church is a union of Christian men and women to learn the truth, and, having learned it themselves, to diffuse the life and light they possess, wherever that life and light are not. Whatever work any church takes up, every individual connected with that church is, by his connection, identified with it; our mission work is not the minister's work, as, from observations we hear sometimes made, we might suppose it to be; missionary work is spoken of and regarded by some—most erroneously—as though it were a matter regarding which ministers alone should have any interest. The amount of the contributions, the success of the work, are regarded as ministers' matters; nay, so far does this delusion sometimes go, that it is supposed by some that a marked personal slight is inflicted or favour conferred upon a minister when support is given or withheld.

We need not say to any person of intelligence how gross is the misapprehension when contributions to missionary effort are so regarded. Our mission work is the work of the church, and, being the work of the church, it is, of necessity, the work of every member of the church. It is the joint effort of ministers and members to spread Christian truth—the united dedication of substance to advancing in the world the cause of God; and wherever there is a right and intelligent apprehension of its character, every member of the church should feel that, personally and individually, they have cause for gratification or regret, when its missions prosper or the reverse. Each individual should feel that it is a matter in which they have a personal interest and concern—an interest and concern not less than the minister has. Every member of our church must feel this, if we are to have a healthy missionary feeling, and an enlightened missionary spirit among us, and if the work is to be distributed and supported as it should. It is in the growth, and influence, and power of such a spirit as this, that we look for the true apprehension of responsibility, and that conscious identification with our mission work, from which there will be given to it, by all our members, a generous, sustained, and systematic support.

And as it is with individuals, so is it with parishes and congregations. The contribution of the congregation is the joint offering to the Lord. It is what, throughout the year, the congregation consecrates of its substance to the work of God. Each parish and each church have thus a specific duty and responsibility not less than each individual. Congregations, not less than individuals, should remember that they are possessed of distinctive spiritual blessings, and that they have been associated by God as an organized body for various reasons, but not least for the living active diffusion of the blessings which they themselves possess. They have, among the divinely ordained institutions of the country, a corporate character, and receive blessings from God as a corporate body; and so there is a corresponding obligation that, in their corporate capacity, they give proof of their recognition and appreciation of the privileges they themselves enjoy.

Every congregation should set before it, then, as its effort and its aim, that it shall do a given work—raise a given sum. Whether it be £20, £50, £100, or £200, let it be a work and a sum that shall bear proportion to the numbers, the means, the opportunities of its members. This is a matter to which each congregation must look, and in which each member of the congregation must take a personal interest, if our missions are really to be wrought with the efficiency that God, for our privileges, justly requires of us; and if our parishes and our people, as should be the case, are equally to share the work that is to be done, and the anxiety that, in advancing and sustaining our missionary efforts, has to be borne. But keeping this before us, let us ask our readers to look at the sums they and their congregations have contributed during the past year, such sums as £6, £8, £12, or £20. Now, we ask them with all urgency, and yet with all kindness, is this anything like their proportion of the work of the Lord in our church? Is this what God may rightly expect as their contributions to his service? We do earnestly ask our congregations whether they really expect that God will bless them when so little evidence is shown of regard for him and his work. We ask ministers and people if congregational prosperity is really deserved, themselves being judges; if, with the possession of wealth and numbers, we hand back to him such mites and crumbs from the abundance which he showers down upon us? But further, we request parishes and congregations to examine and compare their contributions with those of others not better circumstanced, not wealthier, not more populous than their own, and they will find how very marked and painful is the discrepancy. They will find that parishes, in no way abler than they are, are contributing double and treble the sum that they are doing.

We call attention to such parishes, not that they may relax in their efforts, but that they may afford a model and encouragement to others. Not one of us has exceeded—not one of us has reached—that liberality to which we are certain we shall yet attain. But many are far behind. They have not seriously, or in any systematic manner, contemplated their duty in regard to the missions of the church. Let such remember that now, with the entrance upon another year of missionary exertion, is the time to resolve that the deficiencies of the past shall no longer stand recorded as a reproach against them. Whether as individuals or as congregations, we should each and all of us feel that a duty rests upon us to contribute cordially, and liberally, and systematically, to all the mission work that the church has set before it.

We can do anything we really take up with a determination that we shall do it. If, as one man, every member of the church and every congregation were to resolve that our contributions shall henceforth be doubled, or trebled, or even quadrupled, there would not be the slightest difficulty, were the work only equally distributed, and earnestly set about. We have wealth, and numbers, and Christian willingness among us, to accomplish it; all that is wanted is just to place it before us as an object to be realized, and not to desist from our efforts till it is done. Let the contributions to the missionary enterprises of the church be a matter on which, before God, all make up their mind faithfully and systematically to do their part, and not merely a thing to which there is a probability they may give something, if they should happen to be at the church on the day the collection is made, and if they should happen to be that day in the mood for giving. Let this be the case, and what we contend for will, before next Assembly, be accomplished.

The advantage of distributed, systematic, equally-borne contributions, in comparison with irregular and mere impulsive collections, is practically and very well illustrated in the case of our Endowment Scheme. Here we had a great work to be done, and we set ourselves to its accomplishment resolutely and systematically; parishes, and ministers, and people, in north, and south, and west, uniting their exertions and their offerings, and in a very few years we will have raised the sum of £400,000. Had we been frightened by imaginary difficulties from going into the work in earnest, and trusted to the impulses of a fits-and-starts church-door-collection generosity, it would have taken a hundred or a hundred and fifty years to do what has been done in less than one-tenth part of that time.

We cannot close without urging, as the last reason for a systematic and cordial contribution to our Schemes, that it is in this way the great Giver of all our gifts bestows his blessings upon us. It is not by occasional and isolated favours that he gives us of his regard. It is not by now granting and now withholding his mercy and his grace. "His loving-kindness is new to us every morning, and his faithfulness every night." And taught by this, if we are his, such too should be the character of our appreciation and recognition of his regard. Such should be our discharge of the duty, and performance of the Christian work which he has given us to do.—Church of Scotland Home and Foreign Record.

THE INFLUENCE OF ELDERS.

It is to be hoped that the statistics and suggestions which have been or shall be submitted at the meetings of our Synods, shall receive that attention which their importance merits, and that every pastor and elder who votes for the adoption of any commendatory resolutions in aid of the Boards, shall return to their homes with the earnest intention of impressing on their people the duty of renewed efforts in this day of urgent need.

It has already been suggested, that, in the present condition of our national affairs, the temptation before which many people are likely to fall, is the neglect of church duties in order to contribute to military causes. The claims of hospitals, of sons and brothers in the field, must be recognised; but still, as the Lord has evidently brought us into our present disputes, because of our personal and national sins, we have no authorized warrant to expect that his judgments will be averted but by a return to our first love, and the performance of the duties which flow from it. In this work the influence of our elders may be exerted with delightful effect. They are intimately acquainted with the membership of the church; they know the temporal resources of the people; they learn their views, and hear their objections. Let, then, our elders deal affectionately with the flocks over whom they watch, and encourage them in sustaining the good cause. This is a special season, demanding great watchfulness, and the discharge of special duties. Should pastors, through the multitude of their cares, forget any of our Boards, then let the elders, in a kindly spirit, remind them of the oversight, and suggest a suitable season for an appeal to the congregation. Should any pastor fail to present the cause of the Education Board, in consequence of his apprehension that the people, feeling the pressure of the times, may be reluctant to contribute, then let the elders prepare the people for an appeal, by the diffusion of information, and affectionate intercourse, and aid, in securing those means which the King of Zion now asks of his people to sustain his glorious cause.

THE REFORMATION AND POPULAR LITERATURE.

The impulse which the Reformation gave to popular literature in Germany was immense. Whilst in the year 1513 only 35 publications had appeared, and 37 in 1517, the number of books increased with astonishing rapidity after the appearance of Luther's theses. In 1518 we find 71 different works; in 1519, 111; in 1520, 208; in 1521, 211; in 1522, 347; and in 1523, 498. . . . And where were all these published? For the most part in Wittemberg. And who were their authors? Generally, Luther and his friends. In 1522, 130 of the reformer's writings were published; and in the year following, 183. In this same year only 20 Roman Catholic publications appeared. The literature of Germany thus saw the light in the midst of struggles, and contemporaneously with her religion. Already it appeared learned, profound, full of daring and life, as later times have seen it. The national spirit showed itself for the first time, and at the very moment of its birth received the baptism of fire from Christian enthusiasm. What Luther and his friends composed others circulated. Monks, convinced of the unlawfulness of monastic obligations, desirous of exchanging a long life of slothfulness for one of active exertion, but too ignorant to proclaim the word of God, travelled through the provinces, visiting hamlets and cottages, where they sold the books of Luther and his friends. Germany soon swarmed with these bold colporteurs. Printers and booksellers eagerly welcomed every writing in defence of the Reformation; but they rejected the books of the opposite party as generally full of ignorance and barbarism. If any one of them ventured to sell a book in favour of the Papacy, and offered it for sale in the fairs of Frankfort or elsewhere, merchants, purchasers, and men of letters overwhelmed him with ridicule and sarcasm. It was in vain that the emperor and princes had published severe edicts against the writings of the reformers. As soon as an inquisitorial visit was to be paid, the dealers, who had received secret intimation, concealed the books that it was intended to proscribe; ever eager for what is prohibited, immediately bought them up, and read them with the greater avidity. It was not only in Germany that such scenes were passing; Luther's writings were translated into French, Spanish, English, and Italian, and circulated among these nations.

MERCIES AND DUTIES.

While the noise of war is heard in our borders, and rebellion is lifting its hand against the national life, it is a subject of thankfulness that in the Seminaries and Collegiate institutions under the care of the Board, the great interests of education appear to be in a most satisfactory state. The Reports received by the Board respecting the diligence, the progress, and the deportment of her beneficiaries, indicate a healthy condition in these seats of learning, in which the future ministers of our Zion are being trained for the service of the great Master. Gratifying as this intelligence must be to the church, and encouraging as these tokens of the Divine favour are to the Board, the bestowal of such blessings presents a powerful motive for increased effort on the part of the Board and of our people.

Nothing can be more obvious than the truth that our literary institutions are largely dependent on the candidates sustained by the Board for their prosperity. The small number of young men whose circumstances would enable them to obtain the advantages of a literary and theological curriculum without the aid of the church, would not suffice to give full employment to the Faculties of learned Professors whose culture and zeal are now devoted to the interests of education; and unless the students receive the funds which the Board supplies, these institutions would fail in accomplishing the object designed by their establishment.

To meet this want the Board cannot coin money; neither can it gather in funds by agricultural or commercial operations. Just as the members of the church provide funds, so can the Board dispense them. The members of the Board have no power to make one dollar do the work of two. The Assembly has given the pledge that all candidates recommended by Presbyteries shall be sustained, and it is for our churches to meditate on the nature and significancy of this pledge. The Assembly, in the belief that our people comprehend the value of an educated ministry, and desire the extension of our Zion, have, in reliance on the faith, and love, and zeal of the members, given this pledge, and it is obviously the duty of our people then to sustain the Assembly in this noble resolve. The church is possessed of ample means, and all that is required to remove every difficulty out of the way, is merely the active determination of all our pastors and sessions to give an opportunity once a year to the people to sustain this cause.

It is possible that some unreflecting persons, who neglect their duty in this connection, console themselves with the thought, that the Assembly have contracted to see all the beneficiaries sustained; and that, in some way or other, the Board, as an agency of the Assembly, will carry the young men through their studies. The Assembly has made no contract, however, which is not based on the aid of these very negligent defaulters, as well as on the aid of those who, with more thoughtfulness and liberality, are careful to meet their engagements. The Board is but the dispensing agent of the church. No promise has been given, no responsibility has been assumed, but what rests on the covenanted obligations of the people of God.

When Presbyteries recommend young men to the Board, they do so under an implied pledge that they will put forth their best efforts to provide funds for their adequate support, and that the guilt of the failure, if there be one, must rest on them. This pledge implies that the Presbytery will see to it, by a diligent supervision, that every church within its bounds shall obey the injunction of the Assembly to take up an annual collection for this Board. Hence the individual responsibility of each church, because this service cannot be rolled over from one party to another, so as to shift the burden from the negligent or the unwilling to the more thoughtful and obedient disciples of the Lord.

As, then, the Lord is among our Seminaries, our Academies, and our Colleges, with his blessing, then let our people recognise the mercy, and, with grateful hearts, provide the means to sustain the labourers that he has called into his harvest.

DEATH OF A WATERLOO GENERAL AMONG THE VAUDOIS.

The Valdensian pastor, Amedeo Bert, says, writing of the death of a Waterloo veteran, long settled among that people:—"Last week the Valdensians of Pignerolo and its neighbourhood, accompanied to his last dwelling-place, in the burial-ground of Torre Pellice, the English Major-General Charles Beckwith, who had dedicated himself to the work of promoting the religious and intellectual progress of that Alpine people. He did prodigies of charity and personal sacrifice in the Valdensian valleys—established more than a hundred schools; built churches and houses for pastors and masters; urged onward public instruction; raised the condition of the women, by receiving in an institution, long maintained by himself alone, the Valdensian girls, who, on their return to their families, carried back and imparted to them knowledge, order, and sincere piety—in a word, consecrated thirty-four years of his life to protecting, benefiting, and directing to worthy ends, a population who will for ever call him their regenerator and father. He took a wife from among his beloved villagers, that he might be more closely united to them. The wooden leg which supplied the place of that which he had lost at Waterloo, did not prevent him from climbing the highest Valdensian peaks, that he might personally inspect the schools he had founded. The government bestowed upon him, in 1852, the well-merited cross of St Maurice and St. Lazarus."

PRESBYTERIANISM AND EDUCATION.

The Presbyterian church has always recognised the importance of education among her pastors and members. When John Knox returned to Scotland from Geneva, in the year 1559, and entered on the work of church reform, the subject of education immediately engaged the attention of the leading minds of the church. The movement then commenced, although opposed by the rapacious nobles and reckless politicians of the day, who aimed at grasping the funds of the church, was so successful, that the parishes were provided with the common schools, which have rendered Scotland famous in every land.

When the Presbyterian church was planted in the north of Ireland, by the Scottish settlers who were induced to remove to Ulster, their ministers were chiefly educated in Scotland; yet the schools of philosophy which were established in the large towns of Down, and other parts of the country, showed how deeply seated is the conviction of the Presbyterian mind, that education must be recognised as the handmaid of religion. The Log College of Mr. Tennent, and the Seminaries which the fathers of our Zion instituted, all point in the same direction. When Columba aimed at the conversion of the rude savages of the Isles and Highlands of Scotland, he established a literary centre, whence intelligence should flow forth over the mainland in Scotland. So was it with Didan in the north of England; and in the same manner Dr. Duff, Dr. Wilson, Dr. Anderson, and others, in the chief cities of India, in our own day, without any desire to copy the example of the fathers of a former age, all adopted the plan of reaching the Hindoo mind by training a native ministry, and by using every instrumentality that they could wield, to educate a native ministry, and to enable the masses of the people to read for themselves the message of salvation which God has given in his word. Presbyterianism has never recognised the maxim that "ignorance is the mother of devotion." Ignorance is the nurse of superstition. There can be no progress in the divine life apart from divine light, and hence the Saviour's prayer, in reference to the advancement of his people, "Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth."

DEPUTING INFLUENCE.

How much you have allowed the common-school teacher and the Sabbath-school teacher to do for your children that it belonged to you to do! How blessed a legacy would you have handed down to your child, if you had so mingled yourself with its education—with its reading and writing, and the various sciences in which it has been instructed—that on all sides would be perpetually gleaming out father and mother to its dying day! It is the privilege of every parent to make himself a part of his child's education. Be jealous of the schoolmaster, who will take your child away from you if you do not teach it. Be jealous of the Sunday-school teacher. He has no business to be nearer to your child than you are. Does he make the child cry while narrating the precious story of the cross, while you, its parent, never talk with it of Christ? Does he pray with it, while you never pray with it? Does the child say, "I cannot tell it at home: I love my father and mother; but they do not ask me, and I am afraid to tell them; but, my dear teacher, I can come to you, and talk to you"? Oh, are you not jealous of anybody taking the best part of your child's life away from you? For you are that trunk around about which your children should twine, that, when you are old, they, like vines, may keep you green with their fresh leaves. But you must take care; your children may run away from you.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,
No. 23 Centre Street, New York.
October 13th, 1862.

RECENT INTELLIGENCE.

CHINA.

The latest letters from China are dated at Tungchow, June 23d; Shanghai, July 18th; Canton, July 25th; Ningpo, August 1st.

Dr. McCartee and Mr. Green, with their families, had left Ningpo for the North, to join the new mission at Tungchow. They are reported as having safely arrived at Chefoo, where they were detained by the sudden illness and death, from cholera, on the 14th July, of Mrs. Smith, of the Episcopal mission, at whose house (near Chefoo) Dr. McCartee was stopping.

By the departure of these brethren, and also of Mr. Roberts for Shanghai, the missionary force in Ningpo was reduced to Messrs. Rankin, Morrison, and Dodd, with their assistants. They were expecting, however, to be soon joined by Dr. Martin, on his return from the United States.

Mr. and Mrs. Mills had been called to part with their second child, aged eight months, who died at Shanghai, on the 1st of July, after a very brief illness.

The health of Mr. Mills rendered his transfer to the North expedient, and Mr. Roberts was expecting to be permanently transferred to Shanghai, where he had been for some time, with his family.

At Canton, Mr. Preston is anxious to secure ground for a chapel. Mr. Condit's recent loss by fire had been covered, to within $85, by private contributions. Mr. Preston writes: "Affairs at Fatshan are prospering finely."

INDIA.

A letter from Mr. Caldwell, dated August 16th, at Landour, refers to the necessity from ill-health, of his removal to the hills during the hot weather. We have but two other brief business letters, one from Dr. Janvier, dated August 15th, and one from Mr. Broadhead, dated August 18th.

SIAM.

We have letters from Petchaburi to June 24th; and from Bangkok to July 17th. Messrs. McFarland and McGilvary, at the former station, found no lack of opportunities to preach and distribute books, which were eagerly sought after beyond the means of supply.

With the exception of Mrs. Mattoon, whose health continues feeble, the missionary families at Bangkok were well, and meeting with encouragement in their work. Mrs. Mattoon had, on invitation of the ladies of the king's household, visited them at the royal palace, where she met some of her former pupils in English, who expressed great joy at seeing her.

INDIAN TRIBES.

Mr. Burtt's letter, of September 30th, gives an encouraging view of the Omaha mission, and of the disposition of the Indians to meet for conversation on religious subjects Forty-five children had returned to the school after their vacation.

The Indian difficulties in the Northwest had created much excitement among the Omahas They were loyal to the government, and were obliged to defend their lives and property from the raids of the Sioux.

From the Chippewa mission we have Mr. Porter's letter, dated at Bear River, September 29th. "The attendance at the school was little better than formerly, and religious meetings about as usual." At a late communion, one person was added to the church on profession.

SOUTH AMERICA.

We have letters from the Brazil mission—Mr. Blackford's—dated Rio de Janeiro, August 22d, and Mr. Schneider's, from the interior, dated August 5th. The former writes: "We are in very good health, and our work goes on as usual, save that the attendance on the Portuguese services is smaller for some time past, (20 to 40,) and that on the English is better. There is reason to hope for some good results from the latter."

Mr. Schneider is engaged in regular preaching to the Germans at five different places. The extremes of his field are forty miles apart.

A NEW MISSION ESTABLISHED.

The Executive Committee, at its meeting on the 6th inst., agreed to establish a new mission in the province of Shantung, in the north of China, to be called the Shantung mission. The brethren composing it are the Rev. Messrs. Nevius, Gayley, Mills, Green, and Dr. McCartee. Some of these have occupied this new field for sanitary purposes over a year past, and their favourable reports in regard to the healthiness of the country, and the openings for missionary labour, made the duty of the Committee very clear.

The commencement of a new mission involves, as a matter of course, additional expense. There is immediate necessity for at least two houses and a chapel. In the present state of our finances, this enlargement of the work in China would probably have been postponed, had not the state of their health driven some of our missionaries to the North, and thus created a necessity for the action of the Committee.

TREASURER'S DEPARTMENT.

In the absence of the Editor on official duty, the Treasurer is charged with culling for the "Recent Intelligence" columns of the Record and Foreign Missionary, and takes the occasion to state a few facts connected with his own bureau.

1. The receipts from the churches for the first five months of the present financial year are $14,526, or $4343 less than for the corresponding period last year.

2. The receipts from all ordinary sources for the same time are $31,956, or $4433 less than last year.

3. The receipts from the churches for these five months, are less than for any corresponding period in sixteen years, in which time our missionary force has more than doubled.

4. The expense of providing funds for our missions in India, China, Siam, and Japan, is greater now than ever before in the history of the Board. No other funds can be used in those countries than their own local currency, and we have no means of providing this but by sending out specie, or its equivalent, English sterling bills. The enhanced price of gold or of English bills is therefore the measure of the increased expense of our Eastern missions. Two years ago, we purchased on account of these missions £17,300 sterling, at a cost of $82,346. During last year, we bought for the same purpose £17,336 sterling, for $83,447. The average rate of exchange for the former was 107 1–16, for the latter 108 3–16.

About the same amount of bills will be required for the current year, say £17,300. The rate of exchange on London to-day is 142, or one-third higher than the average of the last two years; and should this be the average for the present financial year of the Board, then the expense of supporting our missions in the East will be increased one-third. Instead of paying $83,000 for our foreign bills, they will cost $110,000. It is about the same thing to say, that we are required to furnish our missions in India, China, Siam, and Japan, during this year, $85,000 in gold.

From the foregoing, it is evident that the Board is running beyond its means with unprecedented celerity. We hope for a fall in the premium on gold, and in the rates of foreign exchange, which moves with it; but we cannot reasonably look for such a decline as will reduce these estimated expenses within $20,000 of what they were in previous years. If our receipts stand the same as last year, (and the foregoing statements show how little reason we have to hope for even this,) the debt of the Board on the 1st of May next cannot be less than $20,000. The writer would feel some relief in the assurance that it was to be no more.

MISSIONS IN INDIA.

Journal of the Rev. J. H. Orbison.

A Native's idea of Paradise.

February 20th.—Huzapore, or Huzara city, is a very large place, containing many thousand inhabitants, Hindoos, Sikhs, and Mohammedans. There are streams of water running through many of the streets, some along each side, and in the chief streets right through the middle. These canals are lined with trees, the willow, mulberry, &c., and the effect is very refreshing in this hot land. There are little grist-mills on some of the principal streams in the middle of the streets, grinding away continually. All very unique, and, spite of dirt, rather pretty, quite coming up to the native's idea of Paradise:

"Agar Firdans bar rue zamin ast Hamin ast, hamin ast, hamin ast."

If there be a Paradise upon earth,
It is this, it is this, it is this.

Morally or spiritually considered, however, we did not find it, by any means, like a Paradise, or the garden of the Lord.

The Gospel preached—A rough reception of the Truth.

As soon as practicable, I went with the Pundit into the centre of the city. We took our stand on a high place, at one of the corners, with our books, and were soon surrounded by multitudes of Hindus and Mohammedans, with their dark bearded faces, and eyes full of every thing but the gospel. The old Scripture-reader commenced with the ten commandments, and succeeded in getting through them and an explanation without much interruption, the people being somewhat restrained by curiosity. Then I endeavoured to preach on the principal doctrines of Christianity, and show the way of salvation; but as soon as I preached Christ as the Son of God, and crucified for sinners, there was considerable clamour, some exclaiming, "Tauba! tauba!" repent! repent! (i. e., repent of these false statements.) Others said, it is blasphemy, "Kufr, kufr," and others cried out, "You lie! it is entirely false, for God is without father, or mother, or wife, or sons!" Others objected, that if Christ was killed, and did not save himself, how could he save us? All these, and many other objections, had to be answered, and the claims of Mohammed exposed, as prudently as possible. Soon a commotion was observed in the crowd, and a big "Hafiz," a blind man, who had committed the whole Koran to memory, was brought forward, with a huge stick in his hand, which he seemed more inclined to use than the cudgels of reason. After some discussion, in which he mingled a good deal of impudence, finding that he could not make much headway, he began to boast that he was ready to die for his faith. His friends, fearing he would get himself and them into trouble, tried to pull him away. The more they tried, the more he professed his willingness to become a "Shalud," or martyr; which meant that he did not care for consequences, and was ready to do something desperate. He was finally taken away, but the minds of the people were too much disturbed to listen longer quietly. So after endeavouring to soothe and quiet them, and leave with them a word or two of the gospel, we left our position, in order to return to the tent; but we did not get away without a storm of clapping of hands, which is the Indian mode of hissing any one whom they may wish to insult.

Quiet Labours in the Evening—A singular Sect.

In the evening many of the people came to the tent and asked for books, and so the day passed away well. We felt very thankful we were able to preach and distribute books, without injury, in one of the strongholds of the enemy, where the people are noted for their turbulence, and where no missionary had preached before, as far as could be ascertained. We remained till Tuesday, four days in all, and almost all the time there was a great crowd in waiting, to hear, and debate, and receive books. It was evidently a novelty, and the whole city was moved. As the tent was pitched in an open place, within the old mud walls of the city, and near one of the principal streets, the people had not far to come; and as soon as we took our seats, with our books ready, we were surrounded by a large crowd, which it was sometimes rather difficult to manage. The big Hafiz came once, but gave no trouble. The old Christian Pundit, who seemed quite rejuvenanted by the excitement, talked and laboured till he was quite exhausted. Both of us, indeed, had to quit, from sheer fatigue.

A singular sect of natives, who called themselves "Nicholsayuees," had its origin here not many years ago. They took their name from General Nicholson, a brave and dashing English officer, whom they fancied to be an avatar, or incarnation of the divinity, and to whom they paid divine honours. It is said, at one time they came to his tent to worship him, and he ordered them to be removed. They then began to beat themselves, and mourn, because they supposed their divinity to be angry with them, and hoped thus to propitiate him, and make themselves better followers. They adopted the English hat as the emblem of their sect, and had some other strange foolish customs. When Nicholson was killed before Delhi, the Gooroo, or leader of the sect, declared he could no longer live in the world where there was no Nicholsain, and then killed himself in order to follow him. This example was also followed by another chela, or disciple. There were but few disciples; of these, two became Christians, and one went mad, or was crazy from the first. Thus the sect has disappeared. I made inquiries at Huzara, but could not find one disciple left. Altogether, the existence of such a sect was a very singular moral phenomenon, scarcely credible in a Christian country.

THE MISSIONARY WORK AT ALLAHABAD IN 1861.

The Rev. Messrs. J. J. Walsh and B. D. Wikoff, and their wives, and four native Christian assistants, are stationed at Allahabad. This city is at the junction of the Ganges and Jumna rivers, about five hundred miles above Calcutta. Mr. Walsh is the writer of the following report, which he has drawn up under the heads of the Missionary, the Native Christian, and the Heathen—thus giving variety to the topics contained in it. We make large extracts from this interesting paper.

The Missionary.

At the time the last report was written, there were present as missionaries at this station Messrs. Williams, Owen, and Walsh. A month and a half later Messrs. Wikoff and Johnson arrived. In January, Mr. Williams left for America, and in March, Mr. Owen for Agra. In consequence of Gopeenath's sudden death, on the 11th of May, Mr. Johnson was sent to Futtehpore, to occupy that station. The only two then left were Messrs. Walsh and Wikoff. The Annual Meeting appointed Mr. Wikoff to remain here, and prosecute the study of the languages. Accordingly he has given his whole time to this duty, and I am happy to add, as I am able to testify, that he has combined diligence with fervour of spirit in his studies. The commencement of missionary life is a very trying period, and no one is able to realize it, who has not been called to its performance The dry study of words and phrases, and the perpetual use of a grammar and dictionary, month after month, and then, after the lapse of months, to find yourself incompetent to making yourself understood with ease, is very discouraging. It is, however, a discipline, that is needed, perhaps, in the mission work in India, as, by the time the language is acquired, and the missionary fitted for work, his mind has had time to form new and more just views of the nature of the work in which he is to be engaged. . . .

I may as well say here, what must be added in some place, that both Mr. Wikoff and myself have aided Mr. Williamson, our esteemed Scotch chaplain at this station, in English preaching occasionally, and regularly, in our turn, in the weekly lecture at the kirk. These labours have been a great pleasure, and we feel that we are favoured above most of our brethren, in having so many opportunities of enjoying English services, particularly the delightful exercises of the weekly union prayer-meetings.

I regret that I am not able to report favourably of my own work, as two or three months were occupied with rebuilding our mission houses, and five months of sickness, and consequent weakness, incapacitated me from doing much in the bazar. With this exception, I have been enabled to keep up my two Sabbath services, and the weekly one, also, without very much interruption. The meetings of the Bible Society's Committee also occupy some of our time. With a pretty good staff of native helpers, I have been enabled to superintend the different schools, and the wide field of miscellaneous work which every mission calls into being. I suppose that it is almost impossible to give our home friends any proper idea of this department; and yet some judgment may be formed, when I state that a missionary is expected to act in his own little community the part of a doctor, judge, and peacemaker, and on behalf of his mission, the part of architect, mason, carpenter, and general merchant. Allahabad being the head of river navigation, and possessing other facilities as the capital of the northwest provinces, some portion of my time has been employed in acting as a general agent for our missions. . . .

I have been hesitating whether to say any thing about the feelings of the missionary, as concerning his joys and sorrows, but the theme is so prolific, perhaps the subject may be omitted, though the feelings remain. Like every thing else in this life, they are joined, and the missionary has both in good measure. No one can have much to do with converts from heathenism without a good deal of sorrow, and yet there are some who give much occasion for joy, too. . . . Perhaps I am running into the second head unconsciously; I will therefore take up—

The Native Christian.

Under this caption I will speak of our church and the orphan children. There are forty-five persons in membership with our church, who are nearly equally divided between the Kutha and Jumna mission premises. I have preached regularly, as my health would allow, to those at the Jumna; and Babu Harri, our ruling elder and licentiate, has ministered to those at the Kutha. Those living at the latter place are mostly connected with the press, which is entirely in the hands of the native Christians. They seem anxious to try the experiment of independence and self-support, and we are very much disposed to let the experiment be fully tried. Their internal and external affairs have all been left to themselves, and hitherto every thing has gone on satisfactorily. For baptisms, marriages, and burials, they are dependent on me; but in every other respect they have been able to manage without any control or influence on our part. This I consider a matter of congratulation, as thereby a great burden has been removed and annoyance obviated. Perhaps one of the most discouraging influences wrought upon the missionary, is the effect produced by the recital of all the petty quarrels of families and individuals, interlarded, as it usually is, with native terms of abuse. This is too common in most native Christian communities. . . .

Three have been dismissed to other churches, one, Joseph Emerson, to the Lodiana church, and he has been employed to take charge of the press at that station. Two have gone to Bareilly, Caleb and his wife, he to take charge of the Methodist Mission press at that station. As health was the cause of their leaving us, we hope to have them rejoin us after a year or two. Besides these dismissals, three others are not with us, one having been excommunicated for immoral conduct. The church has gained by his loss. Another is Mohammed Taki, of whose death and burial you have been informed by our monthly communications. The old man is happy now in Jesus' presence, I trust, away from human disturbers. The mode of his burial caused us much grief, but to him it was a matter of no concern. Belonging to one of the first and oldest families of this place, his relatives, who are all Mohammedans, could not endure the stigma of the old man's dying in the Christian faith, and so stole his body for burial. The old man was apprehensive of this, and I urged him to come and spend his last days in the mission compound, but was unsuccessful. I had no thought, however, that such an act could be committed, and had it not been that his son was an actor in the business, the parties would have been severely punished by the magistrate. As it was, nothing could be done. The other party referred to has been absent for more than a year, and until lately his place of residence was unknown.

We have been privileged to receive during the year into the church eight members, four on certificate, and four on examination. Two more have been received, but they will be accounted for in our next report. Of the eight received, four are males, and four females. Of these forty-five members, forty are natives. The attendance during the year has been very good, and the congregation has increased.

With reference to the orphan children, I have not much to say. During the year I have adopted the plan of placing one or two in the different families of our native Christians, with the view of bringing the orphans up as their own children. I have not been very well satisfied with the arrangement, however. The children of the Sunday-school belonging to the Scotch Kirk support two of the orphans. They are all required to attend school, but I cannot report very favourably of their progress and diligence. They seem very stupid, and regard their lessons with so much irksomeness that on this account two or three have run away. They, however, have a good deal of religious knowledge, and are familiar with the Testament and Catechism. During the year two boys and one girl, sent by the magistrate, have died. They have been remarkably healthy on the whole. The present number is nine, of whom one is the child of Christian parents. The remaining subject is

The Heathen.

Our preaching efforts, including the mela, as well as the bazar, and the different schools, should here be noticed. Most of the bazar preaching has been done by the catechists and readers. They have gone every day regularly, with the exception of the Sabbath. The attendance has been fair, and there has been very little disputation. Since the erection of our new chapel, on the corner of the main road, this has been the place of our usual resort. I have been anxious to give Tuesday and Friday to this work, but have not been able to accomplish it.

The mela this year was very well attended, and we had the pleasure of having with us the Rev. Messrs. Parsons and Heinig, of Benares, Baptist missionaries, and the Rev. Mr. Macombie, of Dinapore, in Mr. Start's employ, and our old friend Rev. Mr. Ziemann, of Gazeepore. I had two tents pitched, and these were usually crowded during the day. All these brethren are very good preachers, but Mr Macombie, having been born in India, speaks the language like a native, and having mastered the study of the Ramayan, was peculiarly acceptable to the people. Preaching was continued for about fifteen or twenty days, but without any apparent results. The other small melas in the neighbourhood have been attended by the catechists.

This year an effort was made to sell our tracts and Scriptures, and very few copies were given away, but the sale was very limited. These are the efforts made to reach the adult population.

For the youth of the lower class we have had four bazar schools in operation, and for the higher class, the high-school. Of the bazar schools I can only report, that they have gone on as usual, learning to read the Bible and commit to memory the Catechism, without stating any thing particularly encouraging. I cannot but think that the influence wrought for good by them far outweighs the small amount required for their support. The high-school has given good satisfaction. The attendance has been very good and increasing. The whole average for the year is about 350 boys in daily attendance, and some months it has reached about 430. For the past two months this has been the average in attendance, and not merely on the rolls. My duty in connection with the school has been that of superintendent, seeing that every thing is properly done, and throwing my whole influence in the religious department of the school. It is only for this purpose that the school is desirable, and secular knowledge is a means to this end. There is a good staff of teachers. The conduct of the scholars has been good, and some of them, it is hoped, have been made to feel the power of the truth.

MISSION IN CHINA.

Canton, China, July 8, 1862.

We have been called thus early to mourn the death of the most hopeful of our recent converts. Mr. Hung, the teacher of the Backus day-school, died on the 22d of May, after several weeks' sickness, aged twenty-three years. He left with us the most comfortable hope that he died in peace. I have thought a few lines of obituary would be interesting to your readers. This young man first came under the sound of the gospel a little more than two years ago, when he was engaged as a teacher of a day-school. He was an earnest student, and had a good prospect of attaining to a literary degree. He, from the first, commended himself to me by his amiable and gentle disposition, and, very soon, much more by the earnestness with which he studied the Scriptures. I never knew any one in a heathen land manifest such an avidity in reading both the Old and New Testaments. He sought commentaries to enable him to understand the word of God He was a regular attendant upon the Sabbath evening and week-day evening lecture and prayer-meeting. I often conversed with him on his personal need of a Saviour. From the first, he admired the purity and excellency of the principles and doctrines of Jesus. At first he felt that his own upright and moral life was a ground of hope; but when the Spirit of God enlightened his mind in the knowledge of God's law, and sin, and of the plan of salvation, he saw and felt that he was a sinner in the sight of God, and I trust he was enabled "to receive and rest upon Christ alone for salvation." He often expressed a desire to be received into the church. After much and careful instruction, and after full conference with him, his desire was granted, and on the last Sabbath of 1861, he, with three others, made a public profession of their faith in Christ.

After the recess of the school he returned to the duties of the schoolroom with increased earnestness. The number of pupils was greatly increased. This awakened increased ardour in his mind. In March I noticed he was looking feeble, and gave him assistance in the duties of the school. As his debility appeared to increase, I urged him to go home for a season and recuperate, but he did not think it was necessary, and declined to go. But by the middle of April he felt the necessity of relaxation, and went home. He came back the first of May to resume his duties, but he looked so feeble, I told him that his strength was not sufficient, and that he must give up all anxiety about the school, and go where he could be best attended to. I then spoke to him of his hope in Jesus. He said his mind was in peace—that he trusted in Jesus. He then went home again, where his wife, and mother, and father could minister to him, and I saw him no more. The care of a sick neighbour, who died on the same day, and the feeling that there was no danger of immediate death, prevented my visiting him. He gradually declined, without any apparent disease. He retained the use of his mental faculties till the last. On the morning of the day of his death he appeared a little stronger, and asked to be dressed. He wished to sit up on a chair; but his friends bolstered him up on his bed, and at twelve o'clock he gently fell asleep. After death his countenance assumed a most placid expression.

I had hoped that God would use him as an instrument for disseminating the gospel. His talents and acquirements gave promise of great usefulness. But God had other purposes. Holy and righteous is his will. We mourn his early death, but rejoice in the hope of a glorious immortality. This is the first-fruits of those who have received Jesus. May Jesus, at the last day, bring a great multitude of those who have been washed in the blood of the Lamb!

MISCELLANY.

On Missionary Periodicals.

"Have you ever seen a subscriber to a political journal pushing it back when it was brought to him, or negligently throwing it aside? From habit, it is with a degree of eagerness that he seizes it, and informs himself of the latest news; he does not complain that his newspaper comes every morning; he does not regret the time that he devotes to reading it; on the contrary, he thinks that it is good to keep himself acquainted with all that concerns his country or the world, and he counts it needful to read long and diffuse articles, correspondence badly edited, and reports often contradictory.

"Do we see the same eagerness when we receive, not a secular newspaper, but a missionary Report? Do we commonly hasten to open and examine its pages? Do we inquire with interest what it contains that is new? How, for example, will this Bulletin be welcomed? With what feelings will it be received? How many readers, and especially sympathizing readers, will it find? How many will snatch from other kinds of reading the time needed for examining this to its last page?

"Let us not forget that God has his kingdom on the earth, and our Reports, if modest, as they should be, are nothing else than news of the progress of this adorable kingdom. We report to you the progress, the trials, the victories, the defeats of the army of Jesus Christ. . . . Shall it be said that, while in the world curiosity stimulates without ceasing, moving the heart and the passions, news of the kingdom of God has little interest for his people? Shall it be said that, in order to excite their interest, extraordinary and exceptional facts must be presented? We hope for better things of you, dear reader, and if you have given us your kind attention thus far, we venture to think that we can hold it for all that we have now to say to you."

In this lively way the quarterly periodical of a French Missionary Society, which lately reached us, begins its story. We have translated it for the sake of the principle which underlies it. The secret of being interested in our missionary periodicals and reports lies, mainly, in the heartfelt interest of the reader in the subject. Something may depend on the ability of the writers, but far more on the sympathy, the earnest interest of the reader. The news of the war we read with interest for this reason; so does a merchant scan eagerly commercial reports; even so dry a newspaper as "The —— Shipping List," finds its list of deeply interested readers. Why then should not the Record and the Foreign Missionary be read with interest by thousands of the people of God? We believe, indeed, they are so read, by very many. And one of the best ways of answering objections to them, and of leading our Christian friends to regard them with more interest, is to deepen their concern for the welfare of the cause of Christ. We would not plead for poorly written, or poorly edited papers, though allowance must sometimes be made for the circumstances under which the articles in our columns are prepared. But considering how many writers favour us with their communications, and how often they seem to be compelled to write in haste, we are struck with the high average excellence of their papers. We often see some of them reprinted, both in American and European missionary journals. Various classes of readers can hardly fail, during the year, to find articles of special interest to them, and sometimes these articles are intensely interesting to all who read them.

MISSIONS OF THE AMERICAN BAPTIST MISSIONARY UNION.

When last year we gave some account of the labours of our American brethren, it was anticipated that the war, then threatening to involve the government and people of the United States, would curtail the receipts, and constrain a limitation of the missions they have for some years so successfully carried on. Already a heavy debt weighed down their hands, and it was deemed prudent, by a vigorous reduction of expenditures, to meet the crisis that was feared. It was resolved to limit their expenditures to a sum a little less than £17,000. To divide this among the missions was a work of difficulty; the process was as follows: provision was first made for the payment in full of the salaries of all the missionaries in Asia, with a moderate allowance for repairs, rents, and buildings. Special donations were of course faithfully remitted to the persons designated by the donors. As the labourers in Germany and France were living among their own countrymen, and therefore with fair opportunities of obtaining assistance from friends, their allowances were reduced one-half. Returned missionaries were requested to seek pastoral or other engagements, and in this way were able to provide for their own wants, with one or two exceptions. The balance remaining after meeting the expenses of home agency, was divided among the stations whose need was most imperative. No new missionaries were to be thought of, no itinerary expenses were allowed. Everything was placed on a "war basis;" only absolute wants were provided for.

The actual receipts of the year exceeded the amount anticipated by a thousand pounds, while the expenditure exceeded the estimated amount by only £230, by so much reducing a debt of £1700 incurred in previous years.

In spite of diminished resources, the work of God has not been stayed. Indeed, the Executive Committee are able to say, "What has been wanting in human appliances, has been more than supplied by the presence and power of a divine energy and a divine working."

Besides the missions in continental Europe, our American brethren sustain labourers in China, Siam, and Southern India. The most important and extensive missions are among the Burmans and Karens.

From Germany they report 120 ministers, preaching at 976 stations and sub-stations, in Denmark, Poland, and Switzerland, as well as Germany. Over eighteen hundred new converts have been baptized, and the present membership of the churches exceeds ten thousand persons, showing a net increase of more than a thousand individuals. "The past year," says Mr. Oncken, "has been rich with blessings, the glorious gospel has been clothed with irresistible power. But what demands our loudest praise to the triune Jehovah, is our entrance into Russia and Poland. In Courland nearly two hundred converts have been baptized; and in the Crimea the first secession from the Russian government church has actually taken place. In Poland we have formed two churches and twenty-four preaching stations. The brethren there, as might be anticipated, suffer much from imprisonment."

The six churches in France have been partially assisted by contributions from this country. They have all enjoyed some tokens of the Lord's presence among them, baptisms having added a few new converts to each. The entire number of church-members is 319.

The China mission is confined to Swatow and Ningpo, and to ten small out-stations near at hand. Seven ministers, with nine native assistants, labour in these places. Four churches have been formed, containing ninety-nine members, including the twenty-four new converts baptized during the year. Notwithstanding the jealousy shown at Swatow against foreigners, and the inroads of the insurgents in the district around Ningpo, and finally the taking of that city, the work of God has made encouraging progress. A considerable quantity of Scriptures has also been printed and circulated among the people.

Although the Siam mission has been carried on for a quarter of a century, the results have not been, by any means, so encouraging as was hoped. In the church which has been formed, consisting of forty-three persons, the major part are Chinese, of which nation great numbers are found throughout all Eastern Asia. During the year a separation of the Chinese from the Siamese portion of the church has been carried into effect, with the hope of increased advantage to both sections of labour. Only two missionaries are engaged in this field, by whom six persons have been baptized in the last year.

The Telugu mission in Southern India is also a small mission, employing two missionaries only. It calls for no particular remark. This is also the case with the Assam mission. We pass on to the valuable and greatly blessed mission in Burmah.

The labours of the nineteen missionaries settled in Burmah cover nearly the whole of the region under British sway, from the sea-coast to the borders of the kingdom of Ava. Not less than three hundred and eleven out-stations are provided for, besides ten principal stations, by a noble band of four hundred and seventeen native preachers and assistants. They serve three hundred and forty-two churches, containing a membership of seventeen thousand six hundred persons. The baptisms last year alone reached the number of twelve hundred and twenty-three. By far the larger proportion of these converts from paganism are Karens; but of late among the apathetic Burmans a spiritual movement of much power has manifested itself, especially under the self-denying and energetic labours of Mrs. Ingalls, who is known to many friends in this country.

The report of the Committee makes the following general remarks.

"Among the Karens, the converts have been increased by scores, and even hundreds. The desire and efforts of the Karen churches to establish schools, not only for the training of native preachers and teachers, but in all their villages, for the general instruction and elevation of their people, and especially of the females, indicates a marked growth, and in a direction that promises to yield permanent and abundant fruit. The retrenchments which the condition of our treasury called for, appeared to frustrate the plans of our missionaries, and to disappoint many fondly cherished hopes; but the willingness shown by the native churches out of their deep poverty to abound in liberality, and the aid which European friends have rendered, have been most cheering, and should awaken profound gratitude to God. Under the indefatigable labours of Dr. Binney, and other missionaries engaged in the work, a company of native preachers and teachers are being raised up, who appear to be girding on the armour of God, and are already not only leading the converts and churches up to higher attainments and greater efficiency, but are carrying the gospel to their benighted countrymen in 'the regions beyond.' The Karens are yet, in many respects, weak and faint, yet they are pursuing; and there was, perhaps, never a time since the introduction of the gospel among them when they needed, more than at present, watch-care, instruction, and aid."

A most interesting mission has been commenced among some new tribes, known by the name of Shans. They appear to be of Siamese origin, and have a language and customs differing from the tribes inhabiting other portions of Burmah. By a remarkable concurrence of providential circumstances, at the time a missionary was being appointed, and arrangements were made to visit them in their native mountains, which are under the dominion of the king of Ava, oppressions exercised upon them by their Burman masters had led the Shans to resolve to seek a settlement in the British territory of Pegu. Thus some ten thousand Shan emigrants met the missionary at a spot most favourable for a settlement, and the mission is established among them, with the most hopeful appearances, under the protection of the British flag.

Thus, on a review of the year, our brethren have to sing both of mercy and of judgment. Their labours, if in some directions curtailed by the painful events passing in the United States, have yet enjoyed in the mission field the marked blessing of God. We cannot better close this brief account of their missions than in their own words.

"A year ago many of us were desponding, and felt that if, in this day of darkness and calamity, we could retain what had been acquired, it was all that we could reasonably expect; but God, as though he would shame us for our misgiving, and show us that our extremity was his opportunity, has smiled on the crippled efforts of our missionaries, and given to their labours and his own truth unwonted efficacy and success."

Thus does our Divine Master win for himself the glory, and sustain his people in the darkest hour.—English Baptist Missionary Herald, September, 1862.

INCIDENTS OF MISSIONARY LIFE IN JESSORE.

I am working away with diligence, and striving to make the preachers do so too. The rains have partially stopped our out-door work, but I am employing them partly in efforts at self-improvement. It is surprising how ill-informed they are, except in relation to the surface truths of God's word. They must become more intelligent, or they will be no manner of use, except just among the very lowest orders of the people. Each one of them is now writing out two sermons in full monthly; some of them think the exercise exceedingly irksome. During the past month their united journals give the following figures:—Nine preachers spent in preaching, &c., 971 hours; addressed 7029 persons; distributed gratuitously 302 tracts; sold gospels, &c., to the value of 14s. This is less than some previous months, but it is not to be expected they will go far from home during the rains, or go out when it is raining. To-morrow (D. V.) I baptize four out of the five candidates. The other is prevented from being baptized at present by the recent bad conduct of her husband.

Respectable Hindoos, and a few Mohammedans, continue to come for conversation and instruction. Two or three pleasing instances have occurred, which show that the divine word preached is not all lost. Case 1:—A young Brahmin, from Dacca, was passing through Jessore on his way to Calcutta. He heard Madhob (of Jessore) preach the doctrine of Christian substitution. He was exceedingly struck by the reasonableness of the doctrine, and being in a great measure free from that carping curiosity which demands the explanation of a hundred irrelevant questions before receiving anything as truth, he entered into a long conversation with Madhob, and finally came to me, and listened for hours with the greatest meekness whilst I endeavoured briefly but consecutively to unfold the truths of religion.

Now and then he asked a question, which indicated great intelligence and breadth of view, and at last proclaimed with earnestnesss, "Sir, this, this is the true religion. I cannot see any fault in it." He mingled freely with our Christians, went to the bazar, and declared his new-found convictions; and if I had exercised the smallest pressure upon him, I could easily have induced him to break his caste. The Papist priest here would have snapped at such a tempting bait. But I have seen too much of the evil of introducing people into Christianity before evidence of genuine conversion, that I durst not use any undue influence to sever him from his caste. He stayed three days, and had many inward strugglings. His parents, he said, were hanging upon him for support, and if he became a Christian they would curse him. He wished almost he had no parents, for his own soul's sake. At last he took his leave, blessing God that he had met with us, and promising to inquire more carefully and earnestly into all these matters after his arrival at Calcutta. He took with him a set of Gospels. May God bless the young man!

Case 2:—I was sitting at my table, reading a chapter in the Bengali Bible, when, upon looking up, I saw a respectably dressed young Hindoo standing at my side. The following conversation, as near as I can recollect, ensued:—Missionary—"Salaam, what is your wish?" Brahmin—"I desire to converse with you about salvation." M.—What do you mean by salvation? You Hindoos attach such strange notions to the word; do you mean absorption into Brahma?" B.—No, I mean by the word what you mean by it—deliverance from sin, and the fruit of sin, and that you may the more easily understand my motives, I will at once confess that I am in heart a Christian. I have read your New Testament, or at least parts of it. I feel myself a wicked person, deserving of hell. I love Jesus Christ better than anybody, and I desire to know more about him that I may love him more. For this reason I have come to see you. Some parts of the New Testament are very hard to understand; I cannot at all guess what the words allude to. Such phrases are not at all common among us; kindly teach me." For more than an hour he listened with rivetted attention, his eyes occasionally sparkling with joy as some new light dawned upon his mind. He was very retiring in his manner, and I could see that it had cost him a terrible effort to pay me this inquiring visit. At length he stopped me in my attempts to instruct him, by saying, "Kindly cease, sir; I have heard now more than I can well remember. I will go home and think about it, and try to do all you have told me. But I have one favour to ask of you—do grant it—I want to hear you pray. I tell God every day how I feel, and what I wish to become; but I am afraid I do not ask for the right things, or if I do, I fear I do not ask in the right way." We retired to my bedroom, and I prayed. When I ceased he began; but after a time his feelings overcame him, and he could pray no more. He went away, telling me he hoped to come again soon. A few days ago he paid me another visit, in company with another Brahmin, who professed to be anxious about his soul. We conversed pleasantly for a long time, but as they neither of them made any signs of retiring, I asked them if they had anything else to say to me. Whereupon the first-mentioned Brahmin said, with great meekness, "Sir, we desire to be baptized, and become Christians." My heart bounded within me to hear such a resolution; but fearing lest he might have adopted his resolution hastily, and having suspicions that his companion was more influenced by enthusiasm than grace, I proceeded to lay before them all the hinderances they would probably meet with from the world, the flesh, and the devil, and pointed out to them how sad it would be to mistake excitement for piety. I spoke of the hate of relatives, the loss of social standing among their countrymen, the poverty and worldly ignorance of most of our Christians; and asked them to seriously consider if they were prepared to endure all these for a saving Christ and a true religion. They confessed they had not thoroughly pondered all these things, and requested a month's delay, that they might take a comprehensive survey of the whole subject, and weigh every thought and feeling by which they imagine themselves to be prompted. I prayed with them, lent them "Doddridge's Rise," &c., and exhorted them to be faithful to truth and conscience, and now await the result with interest.

These two young men are Kulin Brahmins, that is, Brahmins of the highest grade, belonging to the Mookerjea and Banerjea families, and, should God give them grace to decide aright, their baptism will make a profound sensation in Jessore. I have strong hopes relative to one of them only.—Rev. W. A. Hobbs. Ibid.

ISAAC ABRAHAM, A HINDU CLERGYMAN.

Isaac Abraham, and his wife Rachel, are two native teachers in Tinnevelly, who adorn the doctrine of Christ their Saviour by their holy and useful lives.

He told his own history from his childhood, to a clergyman in Madras, from whom we have received this account. His father belonged to the Maravers, or thief-caste, a bold, daring, reckless set of men, always ready for any mischief; a fine race, but desperately and notoriously wicked.

A huge image of Pulliar, the elephant-headed god, the god of sagacity, the god of the schoolmaster and of the schoolboy, was a very conspicuous object in his native village, and to this idol he was taught in his childhood to present his offerings and to pray. His father possessed some little property, consisting principally of cattle—cows, buffaloes, and goats; and these the little Maraver boy, as soon as he was able, had daily to conduct to the jungle, that there they might graze. The path to the jungle which he had to pass along led him every morning by the little church at the time when the native teacher was assembling the people for service. Boy-like, he must needs watch the proceedings. From morning to morning he would stand at the door for a few minutes, to listen to what was going on within. He became more and more interested. He soon felt a great desire to learn to read; and one day he asked the catechist to teach him. The good man encouraged and helped him. A New Testament was given him in his own language, the Tamil, which became his constant companion in the jungle. Whilst the animals under his care were grazing around, the Good Shepherd was thus leading this little lamb into "the green pastures," and "beside the still waters." He was quite charmed by the contents of his book. The portion which attracted him most was the Gospel of St. John. He said to himself, as he read it, "Here is a God of marvellous love! but this God of love will judge the world at the great day; he will be my Judge. I could not bear the thought of being condemned by a God of love!" This led him to yield himself unto God. He so believed God's love in Jesus Christ, as to tremble at the thought of being condemned by such a God.

In due course, the way was opened for him into the Church Missionary Society's Training Institution for native teachers, at Palamcotta There he established a very high character; and when he left it to go to work in the mission, the Principal said to a friend in the district to which he went, "Keep your eye upon Isaac: I have never seen more English conscientiousness in any native than in him." The deceit of the natives, alas! is proverbial. They have all of them, by nature, far more pleasure in telling a lie than in speaking the truth; so that a truly conscientious native becomes a very precious character. Such is Isaac Abraham.

The friend from whom we gleaned these particulars once said to a party of men from his village, who knew him well, "If I had 5000 rupees at my disposal, I would trust them all as soon to the hands of Abraham as to those of my own wife." They remarked, "You might safely do that; nothing would ever induce Abraham to take any thing that was not his own." Yet Abraham's caste, be it remembered, is the thief-caste! O what a triumph of grace is here!

On one occasion, a large girls' school, or rather, we should say, a school of large girls, about seventy in number, who were well taught, were manifesting a spirit which was far from becoming. Their master was dismissed, and they were committed to the charge of Isaac. In a short time the painful symptoms vanished; and after a while, when his services were required elsewhere, the whole school presented an earnest petition that he might still be their teacher, because he explained the Scriptures to them so clearly, and in such an affectionate manner.

As a preacher, Isaac is highly esteemed. We have seen one of his sermons, beautifully written, and have been assured by one who could read Tamil, that its contents were such as any faithful minister in England would be happy to preach; not that he uses any manuscript when addressing the people, but he writes sermons in order to improve in composition, and that his statements of divine truth may be more clear and accurate.

With regard to his wife, we have reason to believe that the work of the Holy Spirit in her heart is as manifest as in his. Rachel was once a rude, wild-looking girl, but now "the meekness of wisdom" appears in her countenance, and she is quite lady-like in her manners. A large class of native women meet her regularly for instruction in the things of God, by whom her services are highly valued.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest to send forth" a multitude of such "labourers into his harvest."—Juvenile Missionary Instructor, September, 1862.

THE SOUTH SEA CONVERT.

A messenger, says a missionary, came to say that Kaisara was drawing near to his end. I went directly to see him, and found him very weak, scarcely able to speak.

"Well, brother," I said, "how is it now, on the borders of Jordan?"

"My ship," he replied, "is moored; the anchor is within the vail; all is well, there will be no shipwreck; all is calm."

Calm, indeed, it was. Not a ruffle was on the surface of his soul; not a doubt of safety was expressed. We spoke together of the labours of past years, and talked of the great love of God to the South Sea Islanders. It was a soul-cheering visit to one just entering the unseen state.

"What shall I say to the church, after you are gone?"

"Tell them," he replied, "to hold fast their confidence to the end—that faith in Christ is necessary to salvation;" and then, as strength would allow, his quivering lips repeated John iii. 36.

"This may, perhaps, be our last meeting below."

"Well," said he, "ere long we shall meet again in the far brighter world above, to dwell for ever with the Lord, there to 'see the King in his beauty,' and that land," pointing to the heavens, "which is afar off."

I prayed with him, and left his humble cottage.

Just as I was going to the out-station, a little after this, I was again sent for to see our dying friend.

"You will soon leave us," I said.

"Yes, the chariot is at the door. The body is the clog which keeps back my spirit; but soon the thread will be cut; then shall I fly away."

"Have you any fear in the prospect of leaving us?"

"None at all."

"What is the reason of this peace of mind, as death approaches?"

"Christ is mine. To him I have committed my soul—why should I fear?"

"Is your trust entirely in Christ?"

"In Christ alone I trust for salvation. He is the true foundation—the way—the door."

As I prayed with him, and asked the Divine presence with his soul, he joined with much feeling. I then took my leave. Next day his son came to say that he was near death. I went. His pulse was scarcely to be felt; his breathing was short.

"How is it with you?" I asked.

He replied, "With Christ is my soul."

"Entirely?"

"Yes, entirely."

"No fear?"

"None at all."

"This is the hour of your death."

He was unable to speak, but pressed my hand. After a while he revived, and opened his eyes.

"You will, I trust, soon be with Christ," I said.

"Yes, I shall."

"To-morrow," I said, "is the Sabbath."

He said, "I shall be in heaven."

"How great the love of God in not leaving you in the ignorance of your heathen state!"

Raising his eyes upward, he said, "Great! great!"

With his son-in-law and daughter I then conversed on the difference between the death of a saint and sinner, all of which he heard and understood, as a reply he made fully showed. I left him for a little; but ere I could return, his spirit had fled to be with Him who had redeemed him with his precious blood.

Thus died Kaisara, a good man, a consistent follower of Christ, who was born a heathen, but died a Christian.

WHAT IS YOUR HOPE FOR ETERNITY?

Some time since, as a Christian missionary was travelling in India, he came to a retired spot, where, at some distance before him, he saw a man lying on the ground, apparently asleep. At first sight, he supposed that the individual was one of those religious devotees, so frequently to be met with in India, who, wearied with the fatigues of his pilgrimage, had lain him down to rest. As he approached nearer, however, he thought that the man appeared to be in pain, and on reaching the place where he lay, he discovered that he was in the agonies of death. Anxious, if possible, to afford some consolation to a fellow-mortal in the hour of his extremity, the missionary knelt by the side of the sufferer, and addressing him in the native language, said, "Brother, what is your hope for eternity?" The dying man opened his eyes with an expression of surprise and pleasure, and faintly whispered, "The blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth from all sin." He could say no more, for the tide of life was fast ebbing, and in a few moments the spirit of that poor and lonely wanderer was before the throne of God. As the missionary gazed upon the lifeless corpse, his eye rested on a piece of paper which the dying man had kept firmly grasped in his hand, and on examination he found that it was a single leaf of the Bengalee New Testament, containing the verse which the expiring Hindoo had repeated as the confession of his faith. The mingled feelings of joy and sadness which filled the heart of the missionary, as he pursued his journey, may be more easily imagined than described.

Young reader! what is your hope for eternity? You have not a leaf of the Bible only, but the whole Bible; will your answer be as ready and beautiful as his?

THE LITTLE MISSIONARY IN HEART.

A little boy in Paris, who attended a missionary meeting, was very deeply affected with the accounts he heard of the state of the poor heathen children. His mother was a poor widow, and he was her great comfort. She loved the Scriptures, and had taught him to love them too. The next morning after the meeting, this little boy collected together all the money he possessed, (only thirty-six sous,) and took it to the minister, saying, "I hope, sir, the people will soon be converted to God." The minister told him that there was a great deal to do, and he feared it would be a long while before the work would be all done. "I hope, sir," he added, "it will be finished before I am a man." The minister expressed his fear that it would not. "Well, sir," said the boy, "I prayed to God, when I went home from the missionary meeting last night, that if it was not done before I grew up, he would make me a missionary, and permit me to be useful in this work." Is there not such a desire as this in the heart of some of our young friends?

THE SYNOD OF ILLINOIS.

The Corresponding Secretary of the Board attended the recent meeting of the Synod of Illinois at Jacksonville, in that State. He was most cordially received, and addressed the Synod on the great and important work of the Board. So also did Mr. C. O. Waters, the Board's District Superintendent of Colportage for Illinois. After which the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

"The Synod having listened to the very interesting and forcible addresses of the Rev. Dr. Schenck, and Mr. C. O. Waters, in relation to the several Boards of our church, and particularly in behalf of the Board of Publication, expresses, hereby, its entire confidence in them personally, and the important cause of Christian benevolence which they represent, and would most emphatically commend this cause, along with all the other great branches of Christian effort, to the liberal and zealous attention and efforts of all the churches under the care of the Synod.

"The Synod is also glad to seize upon this occasion to enjoin it upon all our ministers and church sessions to explain and urge the high claims of this Board, as most happily adapted to supply the choicest religious reading to all the vast multitudes that are engaged in military operations in this country.

ROBERT JOHNSTON, Stated Clerk."

COLPORTAGE IN ILLINOIS.

For some months past a colporteur of the Board has been labouring within the bounds of the Presbytery of Sangamon very usefully. At a recent meeting a report was made respecting his work, from which the following extract is published by request of that Presbytery.

"I received a commission last March, and was directed to commence operations in the town of Auburn and in its vicinity, in the southern part of Sangamon county. Upon my arrival in this field, I found a number of Presbyterian families, who were once members of a large and prosperous church, of long standing, located a short distance north-east of Auburn, but now entirely broken up, from change of circumstances, by death and by removal. The last sad blow ending its existence, was given by the only remaining ruling elder, who not only deserted his post at a time when most needed, but declared in favour of the Universalist doctrine. In the town of Auburn I found but one man who professed to love the cause of Christ, but in the neighbourhood, there were brethren who were willing to coöperate with me in the organization of a Sunday-school, and we hope a foundation was laid for the accomplishment of that object. I commenced labouring in the country lying south-west of Auburn, visiting the members of this old church, conversing and praying with them, and reminding them of the days "when they sat together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus," when they enjoyed the ordinances of God's house, holding sweet communion with the Saviour, and with one another, and comparing those joyful days and seasons with their present deplorable condition, and the fearful effects and influences upon their children, and upon the community in which they lived. They expressed a wish for a re-organization of the church, and, as an evidence of their earnestness in this matter, they revived, or hastened forward, a plan they had in contemplation, of removing their old church building to a more eligible situation; this was promptly decided upon, and a site selected for its location. A prayer-meeting was also established in this neighbourhood, which was well attended, and considerable interest manifested, and at the close of the services, a resolution was passed to organize a Sunday-school. I now entered upon a field of labour south-east of Auburn, where I visited many families, conversed and prayed with them, endeavouring to direct their attention to religion, and the importance of Sunday-schools and prayer-meetings, and left, hoping that the children in this neighbourhood would soon be blessed with Sabbath-school instruction, and their parents favoured with the advantage of a prayer-meeting. We next found a field in which to labour north-west of Auburn. Here we found kind friends, who were anxious to assist in the organization of a Sabbath-school, and no doubt these brethren, after we left, carried on this benevolent work, until a prayer-meeting and Sabbath-school were in successful operation. Here my work closed in this section of the country, having contracted a disease of the throat by exposure to rains and wading through water. I thought it best to return to Decatur, and remain until the rains should cease, the roads settle, and order a supply of books from the Board of Publication.

"I resumed my work in Decatur and vicinity about the first of May, and after weeks of toil in the destitute and neglected parts of the city, succeeded in the organization of three Sunday-schools, embracing about one hundred and twenty children, and one prayer-meeting, where it was greatly needed. These schools and prayer-meetings are now in a very prosperous condition, and will no doubt become the birth-places of many souls unto God, from which will ascend songs of redeeming love from these little ones, gathered into these schools from the poor and humble families living in the outskirts of our city. My last labour performed in behalf of the churches was the organization of a Sunday-school about twelve or fifteen miles north-west of Decatur on last Sunday; it was a solemn and interesting scene, and one I shall long remember. It was a new settlement, in which no one had ever preached the gospel of Christ. There was no prayer-meeting or Sunday-school; I stood before them in their first religious meeting, offered the first prayer, and heard the first song of praise ever raised from an assembly convened in this neighbourhood. Here these plain and honest fathers, mothers, and children, were organized into a Sabbath-school, and thus a work began, the glorious and happy results of which will in all probability, not only extend throughout all coming time, but will be the theme upon which many hearts will delight to dwell in the world to come.

"In review, and in conclusion, I would say, that during the time I have been employed, I have visited upwards of two hundred families, a large proportion of whom I conversed and prayed with; circulated upwards of one thousand pages of tracts; addressed, at different times and in different places, upwards of five hundred children; have organized four Sunday-schools, and established two prayer-meetings, and put in train and progress toward organization, five other Sunday-schools and prayer-meetings.

"A much larger amount of labour might have been performed had it not been for the rains, stormy weather, and extremely bad state of the roads. N. W. S."

P. S. It was also stated in the last meeting of this Presbytery, that largely through the labours of this colporteur an old and once useful church, which had become almost extinct, had been resuscitated.

HOSPITALS AT ST. LOUIS.

Save about two months, while supplying the pulpit of an absent pastor, the chief portion of my time, since last October, has been spent in visiting the sick and wounded soldiers in our military hospitals. There are five chaplains for our ten hospitals, and about three thousand patients. The number of inmates, however, fluctuates. Many are discharged every week; some restored to health, and report to their regiments for duty, some are permanently disabled for military service. Others, meantime, come in, and supply their places, some but slightly ill, and temporarily exhausted by duty in an oppressive climate; some with wounds, and fatal camp diseases. The proportion of severe cases and deaths is not very large in comparison with the number who have been ordered to the hospitals, apparently to rest, and recuperate their strength.

With this constant coming and going, the labour of the chaplain, like that of the physician, never ends or remits. The same variety of classes, and in about equal numbers, though not the same individuals, save in cases of protracted disease and severe wounds, are constantly present, and to be served; the convalescent to be gathered for stated religious worship; the bedridden to be visited, and conversed with at their bedsides; and the dying to be guided to an immediate faith in Him "who hath abolished death, and brought life and immortality to light." It is an arduous work; but to be absorbingly occupied in the offer of the efficacious gospel directly to the relief of human distress, and to witness the obvious acceptance, and even craving, with which, in such circumstances, it is generally received, makes it a most interesting labour of love.

Our Sanitary Commission and Surgical Corps consists of gentlemen of pious character, who appreciate religious consolation for their patients, and have afforded me every facility, and, in some instances, their personal coöperation, in the discharge of my duties. In two of the hospitals I have Sabbath religious services for the convalescent, largely attended by the inmates, including physicians, stewards, ward-masters, and nurses. The exercises consist of reading the Scriptures, singing, prayer, and an address or exhortation. The deceased of the previous week are commemorated, and their sorrowing friends commended in prayer to "the God of all comfort."

In no instance have I met with repulse or rudeness from a soldier in affliction, but, on the contrary, the utmost respect and cordial welcome; and this notwithstanding that many of them differ with me in their religious views, and some are prisoners from the enemy. My custom is, to go to all alike, and offer them the same gospel grace, which every sinner needs, and more or less appreciates in time of trouble. If controversy chance to arise, care is taken so to conduct and end it, that when we meet again we shall be better friends than before. Thus, perhaps, in hearts softened by affliction, and minds awakened by pleasant conflict of opinion, words of truth may be lodged, as living seed, to bear immortal fruit.

Our excellent and earnest brother, the Rev. Dr. Waters, your General Agent for Colportage in the West, sent me, last month, a box of well-selected issues of your Board, and soon after joined me in the work of their distribution. Soon the "Soldier's Pocket-Book," soldier's tracts, and sheet-music, were in thousands of hands. The sheet-music I have since used very acceptably in general worship. But the Pocket-Book is a great and universal favourite. Soldiers discharged to duty have taken it into camp; those discharged from duty have taken it home. Many have been taken, with the sheet-music, on to our hospital boats, and, like bread cast upon the waters, float upon the great rivers of the Mississippi Valley, and, in due time, assuredly the fruit will be gathered.

Here permit me to acknowledge the receipt of another box, of improved variety. To-day I opened it, and, while I write, "Devotions for the Sick," and "Divine Guidance," are speaking silently sweet words of comfort and instruction to many a wounded and bedridden hero, and new songs are sung by the convalescents in Good Samaritan hospital; and next Sabbath the "Social Psalmodist" will enrich our worship in the Good Samaritan and Marine.

Some of our soldiers in sickness and suffering betray a pardonable impatience of the service. To this there are heroic exceptions. A young man from Kentucky was shot through the jaws at Fort Donelson. For a great while he was speechless, and his wound was threatening his life. I addressed him words of comfort and cheer, and corresponded with his father. At length he recovered, and, meeting him on the street, I said, "Now, James, you will go home and show your good father that his son which was dead is alive again." "Well," said he, "I reckon I'll go to my regiment first." My vision became misty as I took him by the hand, and said, "God bless you, my brave fellow!" Another was pierced by several bullets, and his leg was shattered by a piece of shell. Seeing him in his agony, a lady exclaimed in his presence, "O dear! is the country worth all this?" "Yes, madam," said he, promptly, "and a great deal more."

Not being sent to baptize, but to preach the gospel, I do not administer that rite so often as I might, if I urged it as a matter of vital importance to a dying man. Circumcision is nothing, nor uncircumcision, but a new creation. A rebel prisoner, however, badly wounded, and in prospect of death, gave good evidence, in the judgment of charity, of fitness for the rite, and desired to be baptized. I fixed the next day for the sacrament. I called, and, to my surprise, he hesitated. "Very well," said I; "It was because you desired me that I came for the purpose; it is not essential, if you are baptized by the Spirit." "But I am better," said he, "and if I get well, I want to join the church of my father, who is a Baptist, in which case I shall have to be re-baptized." "That is true," said I, "but that will make no difference to me, nor the church of which I am a minister; this form is the only one in which you can be baptized now—immersion would kill you outright; besides, baptism will not constitute you a Presbyterian, but a member of the visible church of Christ. If you survive, you can join whatever form of it you prefer." He was baptized, but he will never be immersed. The Sanitary Commission are grateful for your liberality. J. A. P.

BOARD OF CHURCH EXTENSION.

Corresponding Secretary—Rev. H. I. Coe.
Treasurer—Archibald Gamble, Esq.
No. 88 Market Street, St. Louis, Missouri.

Communications on the subject of Church Extension should be addressed to the Corresponding Secretary, No. 88 Market Street, St. Louis, Mo.

Donations should be sent to Archibald Gamble, Esq., St. Louis, Mo.; or, if more convenient, to J. D. Thorpe, Esq., Cincinnati, Ohio; A. Davidson, Esq., Louisville, Ky.; S. D. Powel, Esq., Treasurer of the Board of Domestic Missions, No. 910 Arch Street, Philadelphia; T. H. Nevin, Esq., Pittsburgh, Pa.; Mr. J. B. Kirtland, Memphis, Tennessee; or to William Rankin, Esq., Treasurer of the Board of Foreign Missions, 23 Centre street, New York.

APPROPRIATIONS FROM THE GENERAL FUND.

No appropriation is made without the recommendation of the Presbytery, or the Church Extension Committee of the Presbytery within whose bounds the church applying for aid is located.

No appropriation is paid until the Board receives a certificate from the Trustees of the church aided, stating that their church lot is properly secured, and that the amount appropriated will complete their house of worship, and leave the whole property free from debt.

Appropriations not called for within two years of the date thereof, are regarded as withdrawn.

THE FIRST SIX MONTHS.

The first six months of the present fiscal year of the Board of Church Extension closed October 1st, 1862. In those six months, forty-five churches have sought aid from the Board, to the amount of $18,000. In the same period, over three hundred churches have contributed to the funds of the Board, and its aggregate receipts from all sources will (judging from the returns already received) exceed $8500.

MEMORIAL CHURCHES.

It was a peculiarly happy thought of our Congregational brethren in England to commemorate the sufferings of the Nonconformist martyrs of 1662 by the erection of at least one hundred new churches. No memorial of those who left their pulpits for conscience' sake can be so appropriate as the opening of new pulpits, where the truths for which they suffered shall be proclaimed. The following statement, from the London Patriot, is a noble record of wise munificence.

"One hundred thousand pounds! The sum is already raised, and the Congregationalists of England and Wales, before the 24th of August, have completed the pecuniary offering by which, as one part only of their memorial of the faith and conscience of the ejected ministers, they resolved this year to testify their gratitude for the religious liberty enjoyed in the land, and the conservation and spread of evangelic truth. We believe that some sixty or seventy of the chapels, out of the one hundred which we are pledged to erect, are already commenced; chapel debts of old standing have been wiped off; new evangelistic agencies have been set on foot; handsome subscriptions have been promised toward the Memorial Hall and the Paris chapel, and help promised to some of the weaker causes in the colonies.

"Noble as are the sums now raised, thousands of our people have, as yet, contributed little or nothing to the Bicentenary Fund. Opportunity, however, will be given next Sunday for making collections, in which our members in humble circumstances may contribute their thank-offering, and those who have not been called upon to subscribe to any of the special objects promoted in particular localities, will be able to give towards the building which is intended to stand as a permanent memorial of the piety and sufferings of the Nonconformists of 1662. On Sunday, we have no doubt a noble commencement will be made towards a second hundred thousand pounds."

DEBT PAID.

We happen to know something of the church concerning which we find the subjoined note in the Presbyterian. It is a church nominally of forty members, while its real present membership will not much exceed thirty. Its pecuniary strength is even less than its number of members would indicate. It may, with great propriety, be called a poor church. Let other embarrassed churches imitate the noble example of self-denial set them at Cedar Rapids.

Cedar Rapids, Iowa, August 18, 1862.

Messrs. Editors—Our little church here has just paid off a debt of about twelve hundred dollars. It was a great work, and noteworthy, both for the spirit of sacrifice it called for, and also for its opportuneness. The time for our weak churches, which are struggling with heavy debts, is emphatically now—before the war shall absorb all interest, or begin to eat up our substance. With them, as with the nation, the solemn and mighty truth is, "now or never!"

Yours truly, D. H. M.

HEAVENLY INVESTMENTS.

He who gives to the Lord, will, in the future state, have returned to him what he gives with princely interest. There is a weight of meaning in the inscription found in the Italian cemetery, "Here lies Etella, who transported a large fortune to heaven in acts of charity, and has gone thither to enjoy it."

THE ROCKY MOUNTAINS.

A correspondent of the Presbyterian writes thus, concerning church affairs in Colorado Territory.

"In these mountains we labour under great disadvantages for the want of churches. Last fall they built log-heaps here, set them on fire, and worshipped by the light in the open night air. Large crowds assembled round to hear. This is still a custom in some places. But now we have rather comfortable houses to worship in at this place. Last Sabbath we transformed a lately vacated gambling and drinking saloon into a place of worship; and last night, we had far the largest congregation I have ever seen in this place. We had a very good attendance when we first came here, nearly three months ago, but it was about twice as large last evening. Our meeting broke up the Sabbath evening auction. At the hour appointed we sounded the trumpet, and the auctioneer rang his bell loud and long, but on finding nobody came, he and his customers all came to church. Thank God, this is as it should be. Thus, you see, we got ahead of the devil once, even in the Rocky Mountains. We had to carry in several more seats, and after all were comfortably seated, we preached a sermon to the young men, on 'Sowing and Reaping'—text, 'Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap.' The meeting was solemn and interesting, and, I trust, profitable. When we thus see saloons becoming houses of prayer, and filled with attentive hearers, we desire to 'thank God and take courage.' The Lord grant that here, away upon the top of the back-bone of the world, right beneath the shade of lofty and craggy peaks, we may soon enjoy a 'time of refreshing.'

"Yours truly,

A. S. B."

MISSIONARY TRIALS.

Wisconsin.

To the Board of Domestic Missions:

Dear Brethren—In the good providence of God I see the close of another quarter's service as your missionary in this field. My appointments have all been filled, and the usual amount of labour performed. The new calls for more troops for our national service excited intense feeling here, and absorbed almost entirely the attention of the people. Our little congregation at ——— contributed very largely to meet the calls. Every able-bodied male member of the church, including one of the two elders, and five out of the eight male members, are now in the armies of the country as volunteers. The congregation has contributed equally as well, perhaps. Most of them go as a religious duty, and I trust will carry their religious principles, and practices too, into the camp.

The departure of our able-bodied men, of course, cripples the churches as to their pecuniary abilities. The minister feels this sensibly, especially as they leave just before the end of our ecclesiastical year, and many of them, after enlisting and providing for their families, were not able to pay their subscriptions for the year. Then the Board are not able to make the quarterly remittances promptly. That for the quarter ending three months ago has not yet arrived. Still, we live—live partly on credit and partly on short allowance—wearing our clothing considerably longer (as to time) than formerly, and re-wearing some we had dismissed from our service years ago. In our salubrious climate we have health, and good appetites, and, thus far, plenty of bread, meat, and potatoes. The number of women and children under our pastoral care is yet on the increase, and they need the means of grace quite as much in the absence of their husbands, sons, and brothers, as they did when their family circles were complete. Unless Providence calls me in another direction, more loudly than heretofore, I propose to stay with them. Whatever privations this may involve I shall bear cheerfully, so far as those privations are rendered necessary by the state of the country and the church. May God pity and deliver our country, and if the church has members who are able to replenish the treasury of the Board, may he make them willing. If none are able, let us all be cheerfully patient and hopeful.

Yours in the Lord.

BEREAVEMENTS AND SORE TRIALS.

Wisconsin.

Dear Brother—Unusual family and ministerial cares, and of late my severe affliction in the loss of my dear wife, have prevented my sending you sooner a report for the quarter ending the 1st inst.

The Lord has laid his hand heavily upon me, but while so severely afflicting, he has given great consolation and peace, and, I hope, sanctifying grace. My wife left me an infant son, eight days old, and four other children. Last Sunday I improved the sudden loss in a sermon to my people, and I pray and hope that her departure may be greatly blessed unto their spiritual good. We have for thirteen years shared the trials and joys of missionary life, and I owe very much of my usefulness to her prudence and piety. For some time past I have had many anxieties concerning worldly support, and have been sinfully solicitous as to the future; but now the Lord, by the removal of my greatest earthly support, is teaching me to trust implicitly in him, and I rejoice that I can so fully trust him for the future, which without faith would be so dark.

Nothing of a peculiar interest has occurred since my last, but this sudden loss. How it will affect my future course I know not. Appearances seem to indicate that it was the Lord's will to use it in binding myself and my dear people more closely and permanently together, and thus, I hope, increase my usefulness among them.

My people have manifested the greatest sympathy and kindness, and I have felt greatly increased desires for their spiritual welfare. The rich experiences of God's mercy and comforting grace, which I have enjoyed in my deep sorrow, will enable me, I hope, to urge more faithfully and earnestly upon my people the reception of Jesus in all his fulness and perfection.

Sincerely yours in Christ.

VOICE FROM NEW ENGLAND.

In my last report, I believe, I spoke of the division which the United Presbyterians had made in our church on the matter of psalmody, &c. I am glad to say that the prospect is, that their places will be filled by others within a year from the time of their secession. Our people are united and happy, and, with all the untoward circumstances they have had to struggle through, still strengthening, externally at least. It is to us a remarkable thing, that with the numbers our United Presbyterian friends took from us, and with their indefatigable efforts to strengthen themselves at our expense, we were enabled to hold our own without application for additional aid from the Board. I am, perhaps, more straitened than ever before; but we shall go through with it, I have no doubt. God is blessing some of my congregation pecuniarily, and through honest labours in these times of trial, and they are always ready to do liberally for the Lord's cause with us.

Spiritually, we have nothing marked, unless it be an increased attendance on the preaching of the gospel, and an earnest attention to the things spoken. Our Sabbath-school is a very interesting part of our work. Our great hope is for coming generations. This people is not the same people we found here; nor, with the blessing of God, will they be the same ten years hence that they are to-day. To establish here an intelligent, substantial, earnest, Old-school Presbyterian church, is not the work of a day or a year, but when established, it will be worth certainly one poor life, if it takes that.

Yours truly.

EFFECTS OF WAR ON OUR MISSION CHURCHES.

Illinois.

Dear Brother—We are feeling more and more the terrible effects of the war. Our little church here, I think, is more affected by it than is common. We have but two elders. One of these has been in the service since last May, and was wounded at the battle of Iuka. The other has been a practising physician in the military hospitals here for more than a year. He is now ordered away. The families of both will in all probability be absent from the city until the close of the war. One of our most prominent (or at least promising) members, a young man, was killed last fall at the battle of Belmont. The superintendent of the Sunday-school is in the army. You can easily see, that being very weak at best, and having but very few male members, our church feels its loss most deeply.

I know not what to tell you now that will differ from what I have said before. Sometimes I have had strong hope that the dawn was near at hand. And still I cling to the hope (I hardly dare call it the belief) that the blessing will come. For the last two weeks I have been holding morning and evening prayer in a new hospital established here. It was begun by the pastor of the First Congregational church. He is now absent, visiting hospitals in the South. At these morning and evening devotions the soldiers have always been very attentive, and many seem really interested. I think it would be a very encouraging field if I only had more time to work in it.

I feel very deeply the Board's financial embarrassment, as I have received nothing from it for two quarters now. This church last spring cut off one hundred dollars of the amount they had been accustomed to ask from the Board, and requested Presbytery to apply for two hundred dollars. Presbytery by mistake only requested one hundred dollars. I felt then it would be very hard for me to get along with that amount in a place where all necessaries are held at high city prices. God has, however, provided for me, so that we have not been in want. But I fear debt, the very thought of it makes me shudder. I fear I will be involved in it, unless I get the amount from the Board. I hope you will not regard what I have said as a complaint. I know you cannot supply me unless the Board have the funds. But when my amount has been already cut down so much, I do hope it will not be diminished any more, if it be possible to prevent it. The appropriation now asked is only one-third of what was granted two years ago. Indeed, I do think all God's people ought to pray more and more earnestly for the return of peace. His cause seems to be more than ever taking the back ground. He will no doubt bring good out of all the evil. And I do hope we will come from the struggle purified as a nation, and more devoted to him as individuals. "The Lord reigns," and it is a precious thought.

I fear I have indulged my pen in a way a little out of place, but I hope it will not draw much upon your precious time.

Yours truly, J. A. P.

CHURCH BUILT.

Indiana.

Rev. and dear Sir—I ought by this time to drop you another line, although having not much, I fear, to communicate which can interest you. To hear that a missionary is well, however, and prosecuting his work as usual, striving and hoping to do good, will be a matter of some interest to the Secretary of the Board, and indeed it ought to be to all Christians.

My health has been uninterruptedly good since writing you last—have not lost an hour by sickness. My family has also, for the most part, enjoyed good health. Were I a Methodist preacher, instead of an Old-school Presbyterian, I suppose I should be entitled to an increase of salary now, as the number of my dependents is one greater than when I wrote you last. We have now four little ones to nurture for immortal life. By the grace of God we hope to do it.

You have been informed in my former letters of our new church enterprise. We all saw we must become extinct as a church unless we had a new and better house of worship. Very few, however, had any confidence that such a work could be done. But we are now strongly in hope that we shall, before winter sets in, have a neat, new, and comfortable house of our own, in which to worship God. The walls are now up, the timbers for the roofing are on, and the work of late has progressed satisfactorily. The rains have delayed us, and yesterday came near doing us considerable damage. Fortunately, however, no great injury was done. The building is to be thirty-six by fifty feet, besides the porch, which is to stand out nine by twenty in front. Cost, probably about $2200. To raise the subscription and collect it, to do the running, the writing, the begging, &c, is something of a task, as all will readily bear witness who have ever tried it. Then to see some of the very ablest in the church not giving a dime, or lifting a finger to help in the work, is truly trying. But so it is, and has been, and will be, until a good many professing Christians are converted. Alas! that the world has such an argument against us. But it is sometimes a very difficult thing to separate the wheat and tares, &c.

I have preached regularly at Rolling Prairie half the time since I wrote you, as we could have no place of worship here in the forenoon. I have a Bible-class also there, and visit the people as much as I can, consistently with my duties here as preacher, church-builder, &c. The people there hoped to have obtained some little aid from the Board, but have heard nothing.

I suppose the application for a renewal of my commission has been received by you before this, as it was probably forwarded several days ago.

The people here are most culpably and cruelly remiss in regard to the little sum they promised to pay me ($300) at the beginning of the year. The year is gone, and all they have paid me does not exceed $150. Christians in the West are willing a minister should do the utmost possible for them, if he will do it for nothing. But never has it been my lot to labour for those who seemed (I am sorry to say it) to have so little appreciation of the obligations of a people to coöperate with those who break to them the bread of life. Yet it is a great and glorious work in which the heralds of the cross are engaged. Let us never murmur, nor complain.

I hope in my next quarterly letter to announce to you that we are occupying our new house of worship, and oh that I might add, that we were also enjoying the still greater blessing of the outpouring of the Spirit of God, and that many were turning from death unto life. For this let us not cease to labour and pray.

Yours fraternally.

STILL TRUSTING.

Wisconsin.

Dear Brother—I sit down to render my quarterly report with a light heart, because, although the past is not fruitful of much to cheer, yet the future is full of promise. I am cheerful, though I have no money; for I am trusting a better Promiser than the Board, and one better able to fulfil. And he has promised more than an earthly support, namely, a blessing upon all who engage heartily in his good work—a double blessing; one for our own oft-anxious hearts, and another for the vineyard upon which our toil is expended. The former I have; the latter I pray for and expect, and in some measure receive.

I am of those who believe that gospel work is never in vain. Some souls are ever feeding, line upon line, precept upon precept. Some are thus being ever reproved, their consciences bearing witness to the truth. This must needs be, for God would have them warned, and did we accomplish nothing more, it would be worth our labour. "Go unto this people, and say, Hearing ye shall hear and shall not understand," &c., Acts xxviii. 26.

But we have among us evidences of the Lord's presence with the word, and as our little band of praying ones is more than usually stirred up, I am hoping to behold some good fruit gathered.

I have plans projected of multiplying my labours, and calling in a brother to assist, and may my sanguine hopes not outrun my prayers and duties, for I am looking that God will revive his work in all our coasts.

Our county company, quartered here for instruction, has just departed to join its regiment. Among them were some who sought our guidance in the search after divine truth. To them all we distributed Testaments, which were gladly received; and the captain responded, in behalf of all, that they would preserve and read them. On the morning of departure one Christian soldier came running after me to get twenty "Soldier's Pocket-Books;" but alas! I could sell him none, and he returned sadly, for many had looked with pleasure at the red-covered specimen I had given him, and wanted the same.

Hard times checked our church-building project, and another year I must labour at a disadvantage; but "the word of God is not bound." I behold by faith its triumph in all this Western country. Its fair fields will yet echo to hallelujahs. God's judgments routed German heathenism at New Ulm and on the frontier, and now his gospel will enter conquering and to conquer. I think that every member of the Synod of St. Paul returned from its late meeting more or less encouraged in view of what (however little) progress we have made, and what a good work lies before us. All we want is stronger faith. May Jesus, our Lord, bestow it upon us, and revive his work in these troublous times!

Truly yours in gospel bonds.

TRIALS AND THEIR RESULTS.

Michigan.

Dear Sir—To the calamity of civil war in our land, there has for some time past been added in our vicinity, the scourge of malarious diseases; and both have had some influence on our congregations. During part of the last quarter, I have myself been considerably unwell; and still more recently I have felt the presence of the pestilence which walketh in darkness, and for two Sabbaths together have been unable to fulfil my appointments. All the members of our family, and many of the members of our congregations, have been sick by turns; and though some are yet feeble, all seem to be recovering, especially since the late autumnal chill.

Although so far from the place of battles, yet the effects of the war come nearer and nearer, and are more and more afflictive. Our dear absent ones do not come home again to us; and, as so many of them are reported as among the slain and wounded, the intelligence makes the heart sad. And this is but little relieved by the results obtained, the chief progress reported in our papers being the progress of disease, and of the destruction of life and limb on both sides, as if the sacrifice and hardship and bloodshed were destined to be of no avail. But God has his designs in all this; and we begin to feel more and more that he has a controversy with our nation, and, perhaps with the church herself; and that He alone can bring deliverance.

I mention these things because of their influence upon the field of our labours. I believe that men are beginning to think more rationally, as they certainly do more soberly; and that as there is less of "carnal security," so there is less of scepticism and irreverence. That the mind is more intensely occupied by concerns of the outer world, is true. Still, God is more seen and acknowledged in external providences than was formerly the case. That the word of God is often heard with fixed attention is manifest, and that the thoughts are soon called away by those exciting topics which are everywhere around us, is equally clear. Yet may we not hope that some of the precious seed will take root and grow, and be found unto praise and honour in the day of the Lord Jesus? For certainly the seed sown is now being watered with "strong crying and tears" more abundantly. I do not believe there will be any falling off from our usual contributions to the Boards of the Church during the present year, but rather an increase in them, though the aggregate be comparatively small.

We feel for the Board of Domestic Missions in particular. We feel the liveliest sympathy for them in their very arduous and important work. When we think of your painful and perplexed condition in the very responsible post you occupy, we are fully aware that the missionaries in your commission are not the only ones called to endure hardness in these trying times; and we can well imagine how much easier some of our physical inconvenience and hardship than "that which comes upon you daily"—"the care of all our feeble churches."

We not only pray God that he may fortify you with grace sufficient, but that you may live to see the day when the church, having passed through this ordeal, will come forth as gold.

Our two Sabbath-schools, which take The Visitor, are sustained with interest. The third, a union school, where, of course, The Visitor is not taken, drags. Not but there are other causes of this difference; still, I think, the one mentioned a principal one. I fear that this little paper is not sufficiently valued in our church. The attention which is drawn to the precious word of God by those questions upon Old Testament themes, and in the solution of the Enigmas, is beginning to develope a growing acquaintance with that which maketh wise unto salvation. The other reading is admirable for its adaptation. Happy faculty, to win so many of the youth, and draw them thus toward life, and excellence, and joy. Go on, ye fishers of men. The present results are good, but the end is not yet. Your works will follow you beyond the flood of Jordan.

COLLECTIONS IN CHURCH.

In our plans of systematic beneficence we may need some caution, lest we too easily discard the ordinary collection box or plate in our churches as a relic of former inefficiency. Indeed, we know that in some minds—from what source we need not stop to discuss—a settled distaste for this long-established usage, in itself considered, has arisen, and, from the best of motives, may unconsciously prejudice, rather than honour, the cause of religious giving.

One reason, no doubt, for this distaste, is the small results associated with ordinary Sabbath collections. But either the bulk of needed funds may be contributed otherwise, and the Sabbath collection, for whatever object, stand simply as a symbolical act; or an amount may be fixed for the congregation, and individuals and families encouraged to determine their shares by some general subscription.

Another reason, perhaps, is the appearance of the religious cause going a begging. But if the people have already determined, as they ought, according to the apostolic rule, to lay by them so much every Lord's day, it is rather they themselves, who ask the privilege of depositing their contributions in the very house of the Lord, for their own satisfaction and edification.

Again, the church collection, at least in a scheme of weekly or monthly self-taxation, might be thought to open too easy a door to neglect of payment. But few, who would give in earnest in any way, would forget or neglect to bring to the church what they know themselves voluntarily committed to the church to pay. At all events, the effort to remember this obligation would be a most useful discipline, especially for children; and some such free mode of collection is most needful just with a system of subscription to avoid the cold rigour of a mere financial operation, and keep the genial freedom of evangelical beneficence. For even with such family subscriptions as are employed in some of our congregations for more efficient benevolent collections, the obligation should not be viewed as merely legal or financial, like an ordinary debt, but as a strictly religious one, like the sacramental engagement to keep all the commandments of Christ. Such debts to the Lord we must feel as strictly bound to pay as any we owe to a neighbour, yet upon them we must by some means put the sign and seal of a free and elevated religious character. Though all dues to the public are dues to the Lord, as the Jewish system shows, and large classes of them are paid by public taxation, yet for this very reason is it the more necessary to maintain in our churches the form of specifically religious contribution for a solemn standing testimony that all our giving is in the Lord.

This meets also the last objection we shall name as likely to be entertained in sincerity against collections of money in the public service of the Lord's day, viz., the unfitness of any matter of money to appear among our exercises of worship. The great object of a Sabbath collection is to forestall the error of considering any of our giving a mere matter of money. We bring our money into the Lord's house, that it may be sanctified, and be no longer mere money, but an offering to him. Hence some act of pecuniary contribution has always formed an integral part of the solemn worship of God. The reason is obvious: our benevolence needs to be represented and sanctified in public worship, as well as our faith, our repentance, our thanksgiving, our reception of the divine word and benediction. We might as well adopt the principle, that all our religion is a mere matter of reason, and every-day life, as that our benevolence is a mere matter of finance. As we have our Sabbath worship to prevent our religion from falling into general secularization, so we should represent our beneficence in our worship, to help us prevent its becoming a mere cold business affair, and to give it a foothold in the house of God. The entire omission, therefore, of the act of pecuniary contribution in connection with our public worship, would leave the order of worship defective. The true storehouse for all our tithes is the house of God.

Such defensive suggestions alone, to say nothing of the many positive arguments in favour of the church collection, when properly observed by a congregation, must be enough to show, that we cannot treat this sacred institution lightly, much less be offended with it, without sinning against ourselves; and that it may be most needed and useful just in connection with the most vigorous and efficient system of self-taxation in a congregation for charitable purposes.

REPLENISH THE MINISTRY.

While the distractions and distresses of the present war exist, no doubt unusual earnestness should be employed in urging the duty of systematic giving to the treasury of the Lord. And it is surely gratifying to all who love the Lord Jesus Christ and his kingdom more than luxuries and money, to know, that God's servants having this particular department of the church's service in charge are not slack to press this duty, perhaps, even more closely than heretofore. It is also equally gratifying to know, that so many Synods have presented the subject in unwonted terms of appeal to their people. At these facts every lover of Christ and our race must rejoice.

But there is another aspect of the duty of giving, which I do not remember to have seen or heard so faithfully and fully urged as the foregoing, nor as its importance demands. That is, the duty of consecrating more of our sons and daughters to the work of carrying the gospel to the destitute, at home and abroad. In this war many of the acting ministry will sink for ever out of favourable sight, acceptability, and usefulness. Many will lose their influence for good, through their complicity, either in sympathy or fact, with this wicked rebellion. Others will die nobly, or ignobly, (we refer to the whole country in these remarks,) on the field of strife; and still others will become so broken in health, from labours and exposure, as to unfit them, for a season at least, for those high activities which will be more than ever demanded by the exigencies of the times, when God, in his mercy, shall again give us peace in this broad land. And when we add to the foregoing the fact, that many a brave young man, who had already consecrated himself to the ministry, but who, on the threshold of his preparation therefor, burning with that patriotic ardour which belongs to a great philanthropic heart, has given himself to his country, shall sleep the sleep of death, we shall see enough to stir the soul to earnestness in pressing the claims of God to our other children not already given to our country.

This year the Colleges of our land sent out fewer men than last year. Of those, many may, and doubtless some will, fall in the field. Next year they will send out still fewer, and the year following, perhaps, less still. Abate the losses already named, and those which accrue from this last reason, and you have the data upon which to found your calculations of the number of young men to be licensed in the alleged prophetic years of 1865 and 1866.

Amid the excitements of the times, we are apt to overlook these reasonable consequences of present facts. But does it not behoove the church of Christ to gird herself anew for this work, and all the more energetically to labour and to consecrate both her wealth and her children to her Lord and King, just because she labours in troublous times. Her resources are not exhausted by this war. She is still rich in the dowry of her Lord. Her members live, for the most part, as comfortably as they need have done in times of the profoundest peace. If troublous times develope the nerve and invention of the citizen, ought they not to do the same for the Christian?

At any rate, this is a time for husbanding of resources. It must be so in worldly business; ought it not to be so in the matter of duties, dues, and tithes to the Lord? There is no lion in the way. "There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth."

Are there not many churches in this land who could yet spare a few young men? Has every one actually gone out? Are there none left for the Lord? Let the pastors and sessions of churches look into this matter, and assume the long-neglected work of looking out from among their flocks the young Timothys, having gifts and graces fitting them for usefulness in the churches. Let them bring forward the modest, talented, and pious youth, and assist them to decide the question, "Am I called to preach the gospel?" Let them feel, as is their duty, that this was given of God to them, rather than to the Presbytery; that God hath made them the agency for training in the elementary parts of the work their successors, and that he did not commit this service chiefly or primarily to Boards. They are the overseers of the flock. They nurse the lambs of the flock. They must cherish the budding gifts and graces of the coming ministry, as well as of the coming congregation.

Let them not fear that a ministry thus sought out, thus cherished, and inspired with the simple, grand, scriptural notion of the holy office, with which they are the best able to inspire it, shall ever become too numerous. If we trust for a ministry to the machinery of the church alone, we shall have such an one as the machinery working alone can make—that is all. The machinery is good, but it needs the true power behind it—those normal and legitimate agencies which God has appointed.

Nor need any suppose that the church will be overburdened by such large and liberal consecrations of her sons to her ministry. Her benevolence will increase. The loyal people of this land have sent to the army, not only to fight, but to be clothed, fed, housed, doctored, and transported, many over a million of their sons, brothers, husbands, and fathers. Are they therefore ruined, or even seriously embarrassed in the ordinary avocations of life? They sent after these, tons upon tons of delicacies, car-load upon car-load of clothing and other comforts, besides much cash; are they therefore beggared? Who is suffering therefor? All seem to live and enjoy themselves much as heretofore, bating the sad vacancies around the hearthstone.

Would the church become beggared by like liberalities? Oh! that God's dear people were but awake to the solemn wants and responsibilities of this hour! "How knowest thou but that thou art come to the kingdom for such a time?"

The social struggle through which we are passing is developing vast power, and almost fabulous resources. Oh! that our God would grant that the church may see and feel, in these troublous times, that this is her hour to see and feel the power of her King, and the exhaustless resources of his grace; and that thus she may rise to a proper appreciation of her mission to a dying world! S.

THE CHILDREN OF BELIEVERS RECOGNISED BY AN APOSTLE AS MEMBERS OF THE CHURCH.

"Ought the children of Christian parents to be baptized?" is a question, the answer to which depends upon the relation which such children are to be regarded as sustaining to the church of Christ. If the children of Christian parents are, themselves, to be regarded and treated as Christians, then ought they to bear the name of Christ, and his Father's name, who in him is their Father also, and the name of the Holy Spirit, who hath begotten them into the family and kingdom of God. But if we are not warranted in regarding the children of Christians as being Christians, then, except on the principle that baptism is regenerative, it is manfestly a perversion of the ordinance to apply this seal of the covenant to "little children." It is, therefore, all-important to ascertain what is the recognised standing of these "little ones." This is, of course, to be determined by the word of God. Does the word of God regard and treat as members of the church the children of church-members?

In former articles the attention of the readers of the Record has been called to the fact, that throughout the Old Testament, and in the introduction of the New Dispensation, the children of believers were reckoned as members of the church, until, through their misconduct, they gave such evidence of the contrary as rendered it patent to the eye of man that they were not the children of God.

The object of the present article is to present an argument implied in those passages of Scripture in which the duties of children are inculcated. If it be true that children are addressed as forming a part of a Christian church, and their duties urged upon them, as duties to be rendered in the Lord, and with reference to Christ's authority, then it would seem to be an unavoidable inference, that in the estimate of God's word the children thus addressed are reckoned as members of the church.

Assuming this as a warrantable inference, the attention of the reader is invited to that classification of the members of the church at Ephesus, given in the Epistle to the Ephesians, from chap. v. 21, to chap. vi. 9. The members of that church are distributed under six heads, and the duties of those embraced under each head pointed out and enforced. The enumeration embraces husbands and wives, parents and children, servants and masters.

1. Our first argument rests on the assumption, that in this epistle, as in all his epistles, the apostle addresses none but church members. That we are warranted in this assumption, will be seen by a reference to the address of the epistle. "Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ, by the will of God, to the saints which are at Ephesus, and to the faithful in Christ Jesus." Those addressed are here designated "saints," "faithful in Christ Jesus," and elsewhere described as chosen of God, predestinated to the adoption of children, as sealed by the Holy Spirit, as quickened together with Christ, as embraced in his mystical body, as saved by grace, as the workmanship of God. This language is intended to apply to the entire body of those addressed in the epistle, and is not to be restricted to a particular number or a particular class. When, therefore, in the course and progress of this epistle, introduced by such an address, the apostle, without any intimation that he has ceased to address persons characterized by these terms, proceeds to address children, we are certainly to understand him as embracing the children so addressed in the category of saints, as chosen children and heirs of God, and as forming part of the church at Ephesus.

2. Our second argument is based on the fact, that children are specified in this classification. This is a consideration of great weight; so great, indeed, that he who will deny the membership of the children, must, on the same principle, deny the membership of the parents, of the masters and servants, of the husbands and wives, embraced in the enumeration. If the husbands mentioned in this section are addressed as members of the church, so are the wives; if the servants are addressed as members, so are the masters; and if the parents are addressed as members, so are the children. No one of these several classes can be regarded as members without recognising all the others, and no one class can be excluded from membership without a like exclusion of all the rest.

3. Our third argument is deduced from the character of the motive to obedience with which the command is enforced. The children of the church at Ephesus are urged to obedience by a motive which would have weight with none but Christians. Their obedience is to be rendered in the Lord, that is, in Christ. Whether the phrase "in the Lord" be regarded as intimating the motive to, or indicating the limit of obedience, or as embracing both ideas, it carries with it the implication that those addressed are members of the church. The phrase, wherever it is employed as a qualifying term in the New Testament, expresses the idea of membership. To receive one in the Lord, is to receive him in a Christian manner, and as a Christian; to salute one in the Lord, is to salute him as a Christian, and in a Christian manner. A brother in the Lord, is a Christian brother, and to die in the Lord, is to die as Christians die. When, therefore, children are commanded to obey their parents in the Lord, the implication is, that they are to render obedience in a Christian manner, and to treat their parents as Christians. Throughout the performance of the duty, they are to have regard to the authority of Christ. That a course of obedience rendered in such a spirit, and with reference to such a command, could be rendered only by those who are the children of Christ, is too manifest to require elucidation.

4. The correlative duty enjoined on the parents implies the membership of the children. "And ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath; but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." The treatment here enjoined upon the parents is such as to imply the existence of spiritual life in those who are to be the subjects of it. Nurture warrants the inference of an existing vitality. We do not present food to the dead. This is as true in reference to the spiritual life as in reference to the natural. A dead soul is as unable to receive spiritual nourishment, as a dead body is to receive the bread that perisheth. If, therefore, the command given to these parents, to bring their children up in the nurture of the Lord, means to sustain and strengthen them with the spiritual food which the Lord has provided for his flock, it is manifest that the children are to be treated as lambs of Christ's fold, capable of receiving spiritual nourishment, and, consequently, as possessing spiritual life.

And in confirmation of this view of the former part of the injunction, we refer to the latter. As these little ones are to be strengthened by the nurture of the Lord, so are they to be admonished by his word. The admonition, as well as the nurture, comes from him. They are subjects of Christian discipline, as well as recipients of gospel nourishment. The keys of knowledge and of discipline, committed to the church, for the edification of Christ's mystical body, are to be used by these Ephesian fathers, who are hereby recognised as ministers of God in their respective households, for the promotion of the spiritual growth of their little ones. In both members of the injunction, therefore, the membership of the children is clearly implied.

Here, then, is what our Baptist brethren have so often challenged us to furnish—an unquestionable scriptural recognition of the children of believers as members of the church. As to the question of infant baptism, it is, of course, subordinate to, and dependent upon, the question of infant membership. The Scriptures, in recognising the membership of children, acknowledge their right to the sacrament of baptism. Membership and baptism mutually imply each other.

In the language of the apostle, therefore, we call upon Christian households and Christian householders—upon children and parents—to live as co-heirs of the grace of life. "Children obey your parents in the Lord—fathers provoke not your children to wrath; but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." Let the households of believers present to the world the aspect and characteristics of Christian churches. Let not Christian parents treat their children as heathen, or excommunicated persons, but, in imitation of Abraham, dwell with them as co-heirs of the promise.

FAMILY AND SABBATH-SCHOOL INSTRUCTION.

In the Synod of New Jersey, during its recent sessions, the Rev. Dr. Samuel J. Baird presented a report from a Committee which had been appointed at the last meeting "to inquire and report at the next stated meeting of Synod, whether any measures are necessary and feasible to secure greater faithfulness in family religion, and the spiritual training of our children in the house and the Sabbath-school."

The report points out a number of evils, traceable to "the casual manner in which the Sabbath-school system was introduced into our church, and the consequent neglect formally to ascertain and define its proper relations to the church, its officers, and pre-existing ordinances, and, by a mutual adjustment, to secure harmony and co-operation between the old instrumentalities and the new."

The Synod unanimously appointed a Committee to address an overture to the General Assembly, embodying the propositions contained in the closing paragraphs of the report, which are as follows:

"From the suggestions already made, our view as to the only adequate remedy will be anticipated. We are persuaded that it will not be found in anything short of a careful revision of our Directory for Worship, and readjustment of its provisions to the condition of things involved in the employment of the Sabbath-school. Measures short of this may palliate the inconveniences; but nothing less will effect a radical cure. In conducting such a revision, the following are some of the most important points requiring attention:

"1st. To reclaim the Sabbath afternoon or evening expressly for family instruction, and enforce the duty upon parents.

"2d. To give a distinct constitutional recognition to the Sabbath-school, as a cherished instrumentality of the church for the nurture of her own youth, and the evangelization of others; and provide that the time appropriated be ample, as esteeming this to be a cardinal means of grace.

"3d. To restrict its assemblies, in all ordinary cases, to one part of the day, so as to avoid trenching upon the time appropriated to the paramount duties of parents.

"4th. To secure to the pastor, unequivocally, as the divinely appointed teacher of the lambs of the flock, the prerogative, and hold him to the responsibility, of presidency over the school, with provision for a vice-president or superintendent to serve in the absence of the pastor.

"5th. To recognise the church session as invested with authority, and responsible for the details of the organization, the appointment and removal of teachers, and the whole government of the school.

"6th. To provide for such a system of distinctive instruction as will secure to our youth a thorough training, not only in the doctrines of grace, but in the principles of order which the Scriptures set forth; and keep continually before their minds the burden of baptismal obligations, and the value of covenant privileges, as sealed to the children of God's people.

"The present is, perhaps, not the most fitting time for engaging in such a revision. Nor are we sure that the mind of the church is mature for entering upon it. Investigation, discussion, and comparison of views, may be necessary, to prepare the way for wise and harmonious action. To aid in such investigation, and stimulate discussion, is the design of this report; in the hope that the result may be the adoption of judicious and effectual measures at no distant day. In the meantime, your Committee would respectfully recommend that an overture be transmitted to the General Assembly, for the publication by that body of a pastoral letter on the subject of the present report, embodying such instructions to the churches as in its wisdom may be thought best, to secure greater faithfulness of parents in fulfilment of baptismal vows, a due subordination of Sabbath-schools to the authority of pastors and sessions, and the efficient and harmonious co operation of all the instrumentalities of the church in the training of our youth, the future hope of the church of God, of our country, and the world."

The Committee to whom is entrusted the overture to the General Assembly, consists of the Rev. Drs. Samuel J. Baird, John Hall, and J. H. McIlvaine, and elder George H. Van Gelder, to whom also is recommitted the whole subject, with instructions to report at the next meeting of Synod.

We are rejoiced to find this subject so earnestly and ably discussed, and so judiciously disposed of, by this venerable body. The question is, in our estimation, second in importance to none now before the church, and we are fully persuaded, that the high endorsement unanimously given to the above propositions by the Synod of New Jersey, will insure for the forthcoming overture the most cordial approval of the Assembly, and result in the adoption of such measures by that body as may secure increased fidelity and efficiency on the part of all who hold office in the church of Christ as heads of households, or stewards of the mysteries of God.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,
No. 23 Centre Street, New York.
November 12th, 1862.

A STATEMENT OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

THE CONDITION OF THE MISSIONARY WORK.

One-half of the financial year of the Board has now passed. Most of the churches make their collections for foreign missions in the remaining half of the year, which ends April 30th. These two things make the present a suitable time for asking the attention of our Christian friends to the condition of the cause of missions, as it stood on the 1st of November.

Financially, the report is as follows:—from the churches, legacies, and miscellaneous, $42,183 have reached the mission treasury. In the same months last year the amount was $47,190. From the churches alone, the returns are $21,583 this year; last year, $24,949. Deducting $1728 received last year from churches in the so-called Seceded States, the churches on which the cause now rests gave as much this year as last excepting $1618. This deficiency could, no doubt, easily be made up in the remaining months of the year; but in addition to this will be the increased expense of the missions in the East, on account of the high rate of foreign exchange. This is a very serious and discouraging matter. It is not one that can be ascertained at present with entire certainty, the rate being subject to change, but it will probably call for not less than $20,000 over the usual income of the Board. It is one of those things that cannot be controlled. We may feel sure that it has not been allowed to occur by chance. It will, no doubt, test the faith and liberality of the people of God. We trust that it will show that divine grace will be magnified in them, and by them, in this time of need.

The missionary work is going on well, so far as the Committee can judge. Some discouraging events have, indeed, taken place; chief among which is the death of Mr. Clemens, of the Corisco mission. Another member of this mission has had to return on a visit for health, and a member of the Shantung mission, China, is on his way to this country for the same reason. Considerable loss of mission property occurred at Canton in the terrible typhoon of July, but the lives of the brethren were mercifully preserved. The inability of the Board to send out several approved brethren, who are under appointment as missionaries, and whose services are greatly needed in different fields, must be classed as one of the main discouragements of the last six months. On the other hand, one new missionary has been sent to India, and two others will be sent out, one to China, and the other to Japan—the expenses of these three being met by funds specially contributed. In all, or nearly all, of the missions, there are signs of progress. Not only is the door still open in all, but in some instances it has been opened more widely. At no former period were the schools, the work of the printing press, the preaching-stations, more encouragingly marked by the favour of Providence; and in no former period have there been more signal tokens of the presence of the Holy Spirit at some of the missionary stations. It is indeed one of the bright things in this day of gloom, that God still sets before his people this work of spreading the gospel in the world. Viewed in connection with the promises of sure success, we may well say, both of our country and the church, "If the Lord were pleased to kill us, he would not have received a burnt-offering and a meat-offering at our hands, neither would he have showed us all these things, nor would, as at this time, have told us such things."

As to the six months before us, these are with God and his people. If grace from on high be given to all our Christian brethren, or even to a goodly number of them, as it has been given already to some of them, then we are sure the missionary year will close without embarrassment, so far as pecuniary matters are concerned. For this grace, prayer should be earnestly offered. The Committee must abide the result, whatever it may be. They cannot reduce the expenses of the missions, unless they begin the awful work of breaking them up. Even this would not afford immediate relief, on account of the distance and expense of the journey, if the missionaries were brought home. But this would be every way a disastrous measure. It is one which the Committee will not undertake, unless at the plainest call of Providence, without first laying the subject before the General Assembly. Their faith is, that it will not become necessary to lay such a question before that body. On the contrary, their hope is, that as God is giving his people still his work to do, so he will give them his rich grace for its fulfilment. If all, or even if most, will do what they can, then, by the blessing of God, this work of the church shall be kept from great evil, and it shall become the means of the greatest good to multitudes now sitting in darkness, and in the region and shadow of death. New missionaries will be sent forth, and the whole work of spreading the gospel among the nations be crowned with continued favour from on high.

These brief statements are respectfully and earnestly submitted to the consideration of our ministers and elders, and the members of our churches, by the direction of the Executive Committee.

RECENT INTELLIGENCE.

INDIAN TRIBES.

Our letters of latest date are from Bear River station, Chippewa mission, October 16th; Iowa mission, October 14th; Omaha mission, October 28th. They contain generally good accounts of the progress of the missionary work, and the health of the mission families. Twenty-six scholars were reported in the school at Bear River station for the quarter ending September 30th.

SOUTH AMERICA.

From Brazil we have received advices dated at Rio de Janeiro, September 24th; and from New Granada, after considerable delay, letters have reached us dated at Bogota, from July 15th to September 8th. The latter were written before the decisive success of General Mosquera had been achieved. As the newspapers report the matter, this occurred on the 18th of September, and it is supposed will probably end the war. Not anticipating this result as near at hand, the brethren at Bogota were a good deal discouraged in regard to the prospects of their work. This discouragement, we hope, has now passed away. Quite a number of "Noches con los Romanistos" had been sold, and a few Bibles. Quite a demand was created for the tract prepared by Mr. McLaren, "What is Protestantism?" by its being advertised, and several hundred copies were put in circulation. This caused considerable conversation and inquiry on the subject, and it was understood that one or two replies to the tract would soon be published. Public worship in English was still maintained, and also in Spanish, but not attended by large congregations. Some persons, in connection with the former service, were not far from the kingdom of heaven, as it was hoped; and occasionally conversations of much interest were held with natives of the country. At Rio, Mr. Blackford reports the successful labours of a colporteur, who was employed under the supervision of the missionaries in distributing the Scriptures in the southern part of the empire. It was hoped that one or two persons would be admitted to the church at the communion in October.

AFRICA.

Letters have been received from Corisco, dated to the 19th of August, and from Liberia, to the 4th of September. A journal by Mr. Nassau, of a short tour by Mr. Mackey and himself, will be found on another page. In July Mr. Mackey attempted to make a journey into the Pangwe country, accompanied by a good interpreter. During their absence inland, their boat was seized, and Mr. Mackey himself was afterwards kept virtually as a prisoner for a few days, by people of some of the river towns. This was done to compel a Corisco chief to come and pay the "black mail," which these river people are accustomed to levy on the trade. The proposed tour among the Pangwe people was thus prevented. Mr. Mackey reports all as in usual health at Corisco.

INDIA.

Letters have reached us from Sabathu, September 13th; Dharamsala, September 1st; and from Anatnagh, in Kashmir, August 21st. Mr. Loewenthal writes from the place last mentioned. He was spending a few months in Kashmir, partly for his health, and chiefly in prosecution of missionary work. Extracts from his letter will be given in one of the publications of next month. Mr. Newton has been spending some time at Dharamsala, in the Hills, engaged in his usual duties.

SIAM.

We have received letters dated at Bangkok, August 26th, and at Petchaburi, August 24th. Mr. Mattoon was completing an edition of the Gospels and Acts of the Apostles. The Epistles of John had been printed, and other Epistles would soon be through the press. In the mission work generally and its prospects, little change is reported. It is "emphatically a work of faith," Mr. Mattoon well says; "our trust is in the promise and purpose of God." At the new station of Petchaburi things were going on as usual. Mr. Mc'Gilvary mentions that the Lieutenant-Governor, who has proved a warm and liberal friend of the mission at that place, was taking lessons in English from the missionaries. He is spoken of as a man of fine talents and most kindly disposition, and his high official station gives him great influence with his own people. The missionaries feel a deep interest in him, and desire prayers to be offered that he may become a follower of our Lord.

CHINA.

Our letters from this country of latest dates were written at Canton, August 26th; Ningpo, August 15th; Tungchow, July 26th. These letters report the baptism of two more converts at Tungchow; the expulsion of the rebels from Yuyiaou, and the return of most of the native converts in the Sanpoh district to their homes; the arrival of the Rev. W. A. P. Martin, D. D., and his family, now all in usual health,—he had been very ill on the voyage with fever contracted on the African coast, the ship having spent a few days there for coaling; the occurrence of a most severe typhoon at Canton, on the 27th of July, of which particulars will be found in Mr. Preston's letter on another page. We regret to learn, also, that Mr. Danforth had not received benefit from the journey to Canton, where he was waiting for an opportunity to return to this country.

JAPAN.

Letters have come to hand from Dr. Hepburn, dated to the 8th of July. He was building a house in Yokohama, on ground purchased for the use of the Board. He was expecting to publish a small work which he had prepared, and one which is much needed—a Vocabulary of Japanese and English.

On the 11th instant Mrs. Hepburn embarked on the Ocean Queen, on her return to Japan, going via California. A lady of the Episcopal mission, returning to Shanghai, accompanied her. We would ask for them an interest in the prayers of our readers.

AFFLICTING NEWS FROM CHINA.

The death of the Rev. M. S. Culbertson, D. D., at Shanghai, and of the Rev. S. R. Gayley and his youngest child, at Tungchow, will carry deep sorrow to many hearts. This sad news reaches us while the proofs of the Record are passing through the press, in a Shanghai newspaper of August 30th. Mr. Gayley died of cholera, July 26th. His child, of the same disease, August 5th. The death of Dr. Culbertson must have occurred near the end of August, as we conclude from the terms of a warm tribute paid to his memory by the missionaries of different churches in Shanghai, but the time and other particulars of his death are not therein mentioned. We deeply deplore the early removal of these brethren; and we can only say, "Thy will be done!"

"THE WEEK OF PRAYER."

"O for thousands upon thousands divided into small bands in their respective towns, cities, villages, and neighbourhood, all met at the same time and in the pursuit of one end, offering up their united prayers, like so many ascending clouds of incense before the Most High." This was the utterance of the Rev. John Sutcliff, of Olney, in 1789, for the general spread of religion. What he so earnestly desired, the church has for a long time enjoyed in the Monthly Concert of prayer; but recently, in response to an invitation from one of the outlying kingdoms of heathendom, the church, of every name and in every part of the world, moved by a common impulse and under a deep consciousness of the great power of prayer, has met for days together, crying, with one heart and voice, "thy kingdom come."

As the one continuous longing of the Jewish heart was the Advent, so the great and unquenchable desire of the church is the Kingdom—to crown Jesus Lord of the whole earth. That desire has to be clothed in feeling and in acts, which must glow with heavenly fire for the accomplishment of this end. Its limits is the conversion of the earth, for God hath said, "the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord;" and he hath covenanted that Messiah's honours and rewards shall correspond with his unparalleled and mysterious sufferings. The prayer of faith can then take the broadest sweep, resting, as it does, upon the strongest basis.

This special season is in harmony with the prayer uttered by our Lord, that is not only social in its character, but that brings daily before his church the progress of the kingdom of which he is sovereign, and its destined supremacy on the earth.

It is in sympathy with the great commission which embraces a world in its fold, and which seeks the divine coöperation upon all effort for its speedy execution.

This season of prayer is in accordance with the first and noblest impulses of the renovated heart, which embrace love for man as well as love for God, and devotion taking hold of this affection will give new impetus to efforts for the spiritual well-being of the race.

This call is in harmony with the dependence upon God for success, of every struggling, self-sacrificing believer. There is no impulse so quickening and sustaining as a perfect reliance upon Omnipotence; and this is felt when we ply Jehovah with all the energies of faith and importunate desire for his blessing upon all efforts for the diffusion of his truth, and for the ingathering of souls into the Redeemer's kingdom. As we look at the adaptation of truth to the nature and wants of the human mind and heart, or are engrossed amidst the stirring excitement of appeals and the need of money and labour, we may lose sight of a steady and habitual trust upon God for every thing; but we cannot encircle his throne of grace for days together without reposing on the strength of the Almighty, and declaring that his special agency and presence are needful for the conversion of men. The stronger this entireness of dependence is experienced, the greater the influence of assured success.

This call for united and continuous prayer is in symphony with the widening influence of divine truth. A great preparatory work has been accomplished, and important results gathered in heathen lands; but these are constantly enlarging. Hence every new field occupied, every additional labourer sent out, every increased agency employed, is a new call upon the church for prayer. As more is now done by the combined energies of the church for pagandom than ever before, the more earnest the cry to the Lord of the harvest for his blessing upon all gospel appliances.

This invitation to prayer is in unison with God's own declarations. A happier future, and grander success for Zion, are made known either by distinct affirmation, by actual promises, or by glowing descriptions. But this latter-day glory of the church is associated with prayer. Is Christ to have the heathen for his inheritance? The condition is, Ask of me; and this, Christians, as his representatives, are doing. Is Jerusalem to become a praise in the earth? For this we are to give him no rest. And may not this movement be the prelude of more glorious times, and an evidence that the time to favour Zion is approaching.

But this week of prayer further harmonizes with the financial condition of the Board. From the wants of the mission field, the rates of exchange, and the indications of Providence, more is demanded of our church this year; and yet to these calls there has been but a feeble response. Whilst the nation may be acquiring enlarged ideas of self-sacrifice, the church has not yet manifested them. But as prayer involves corresponding practice, we will not only ask God's blessing, but do something on which that blessing can rest, and that up to the measure of our ability. It is not what we say, but what we feel and do, that is a test of discipleship. Hence our liberality must keep pace with the wants of the age and the blessings of Providence. Encircle the mercy-seat with a burden of souls upon your heart, and benevolence may flow forth in more copious streams, to benefit others and enlarge your own Christian experience.

An additional reason why we should be importunate in prayer, is the fact that God has established an intimate connection between the request and the blessing, "Ask, and ye shall receive." "He will fulfil the desire of them that fear him." "Whatsoever ye ask in my name, believing, ye shall receive." The desire must precede the fulfilment, but there can be no true heaven-born desire until the heart is imbued with the Spirit of Jesus and identified with his cause; and when this takes place there will be a strong desire for the diffusion of the truth, and for the salvation of the perishing. Where this exists there will be a corresponding effort, and thus we believe that he who creates the feeling will gratify it and grant the request.

Let the church then arise to a sense of her might. Prayer rightly offered will bring a blessing. The past is full of it, and the word sparkles with striking illustrations of its truth. Prayer is a power which the Christian can wield; it secures divine help, gathers together resources, and launches them with effect against the consolidated hosts of darkness. Let "the week of prayer" recommended by the General Assembly be kept by the churches with heartfelt confession of sin, for past unfaithfulness and indifference, with strong and earnest cries for the outpouring of the Spirit, and with a higher self-consecration to the work of saving souls, and the bringing glory to the Master.

MISSION IN CHINA.

A Destructive Typhoon at Canton.

The Rev. C. F. Preston sends us the following painful account from Canton, writing on the 8th of August last.

On the 27th of July we experienced one of the most violent and destructive typhoons that has occurred within the memory of men living. Now that it is passed away, it is difficult to realize all the horrors connected with it. We had a prayer-meeting at my house, as usual every Sabbath morning at 9½ o'clock. At that hour there was only a stiff breeze, but it steadily increased, so that at 11½ o'clock I was not able to conduct the Chinese service in the chapel of the hospital. About that time I became convinced that we must prepare for a hard blow, making windows and shutters fast, and bracing some weak points.

The Storm on the River.

About noon the wind was roaring fearfully from the northeast. The prospect on the river was distressing. A multitude of small boats, that had not taken warning in time to escape into the creeks and places of safety, were driven, like flocks of sheep, at the mercy of the wind. After a while, the large boats and junks began to drag anchors, and to fly about like mad demons, crushing and sinking the smaller craft. Nothing seemed able to withstand the fury of the storm. The large fleet of vessels, large and small, which is usually on the river, seemed, for the greater part, to be converted into masses of floating wrecks, with here and there a boatman clinging to spars and pieces of the wrecked vessels. Just opposite my house is a small cove, into which a large quantity of the floating mass was collected. First the small boats, then the larger came drifting in, crushing into wrecks everything before them.

Dwelling-houses in danger—Unseemly Plundering.

After the boats, the houses were in danger. My own house had a narrow escape. The scene beggars description. Then add to this raging of the elements, the unseemly desire for plunder manifested by the people. It is hardly credible, but still a fact, that this heaving, grinding mass of wreck was almost covered by people in search of property. We could see them breaking open trunks, and dividing bedding and clothes, and among other articles, I saw a half-drowned pig pulled out of the raft. A large junk, and a Hong Kong passage-boat of about the same size, were driven ashore close to our house. But while we were providentially preserved, two houses belonging to the Wesleyan Mission, and occupied by the Rev. Messrs. Pierce and Smith, were more than half destroyed. They were very strongly built; but no house could be expected to resist such an unusual attack. Stone walls would be shivered by such battering rams.

Mr. and Mrs. Condit's escape from great peril.

Seeing this destruction, our fears were now excited in regard to the safety of Mr. Condit and family. They were living just beyond, in the house of the Rev. Mr. Bonney, now on a visit to Japan with Mrs. Bonney, who is in feeble health. Mr. Condit, when his residence was burnt about a month ago, consented to take the boarding-school for girls during the absence of Mr. and Mrs. Bonney. The house was in an exposed situation, and was by no means strongly built. Upon sending to inquire, our fears were realized. The house next to it being knocked down, made a fearful breach in the walls of the house occupied by them. All the streets about were overflowed to the depth of three feet. Mr. Condit, with his family, followed by the school girls, waded to a place of safety from their falling house. Coming to the Wesleyan Mission chapel, they found the family of Mr. Smith in a like state with themselves, escaped from a falling house, and still terrified by the howling typhoon, just then, perhaps, at its height. By piling up the seats, they just managed to keep out of the water.

A lull in the Storm—Its renewed violence—A Missionary killed.

About two o'clock there was a lull in the storm for perhaps half an hour, which may be considered proof that we were in the centre of the cyclone. Dr. Kerr and I went at once to the assistance of our neighbours, to endeavour to make some provision against thieves, and to preserve some of the property fallen into the water, and exposed to the rain. But in a few moments we were driven by the storm, which seemed to blow again from the west with redoubled fury, back to our families. Just then a report reached us of some accident to a missionary family down the river. It was not prudent to attempt to go until the fury of the typhoon was broken; but in about an hour after—about three o'clock, P. M.—Dr. Kerr and I started to find out the truth and extent of the accident referred to. Just as we were starting, a gentleman informed us that the Rev. Mr. Gaillard, of the Baptist mission, was killed by the falling of his house. His residence was about half a mile distant, and near to that of the Rev. Dr. Ball. We found the Doctor, who is very feeble, rejoicing over a wonderful escape. A large roof had fallen in, just in a place where they were preparing to go for safety. We found the body of our lamented brother, partly removed from the rubbish. After some difficulty, we succeeded in extricating the corpse from the ruins, and bringing it home with us. I am sorry to say, that in this sad work we could succeed in getting but little assistance from the Chinese. The Doctor and myself were obliged to carry the body some distance ourselves. The wife of a Chinese assistant preacher, with a grandchild, were killed at the same time. We found Mrs. Gaillard, with her little boy, in one of the Chinese houses near by, and brought them home with us. It is to be stated further, to the shame of the Chinese, that the house occupied by Mr. Gaillard was searched by thieves, and many things stolen. Among other things, an iron safe was broken open, and rifled of its contents.

Injury of Mr. Happer's House—Reasons of Thankfulness.

I am glad to say, that, for the main part, the above account completes the accidents which befel our missionary circle at Canton. In the western suburbs, Dr. Happer's house received more damage than any other. A good part will have to be rebuilt. It is a matter of devout thankfulness, that, in so great danger, so many have been mercifully preserved by a superintending Providence.

Loss of Mission House in Fatshan—Immense Destruction of Life and Property.

As a mission, we have to record still further the destruction of the house at Fatshan, nearly completed for Mr. Condit. We shall realize but little from the heap of rubbish that is left. Mr. Condit is truly afflicted. A month ago his residence was burnt, with loss of furniture, bedding, clothing, &c., to the amount of $450. The house belonging Mr. Bonney, falling while occupied by him, was further loss, and added to this, the destruction of the Fatshan house. He is now in the hospital, and living with me.

The destruction of life and property is immense; that of life is estimated at tens of thousands, and I believe without exaggeration. The cyclone, so far as I can learn, commenced some thirty or forty miles to the northwest of us, and then it travelled to Macao, where it was quite severe. All along this path there is great destruction. At Whampoa the tide rose eight feet above the usual mark. The injury to the foreign shipping was considerable. The Bethel, occupied by the Rev. Mr. Schiller, of the Baptist mission, was much injured, and the family was saved by the Bethel, and right alongside of an American ship.

The Chinese regard the typhoon as a visitation of heaven, and the belief is, without doubt, beneficial in many ways. The light which divine revelation throws upon the ways of God, leaves no room for doubt upon the subject. The lessons to be learned have been very emphatically impressed upon our hearts. Our lives, preserved through these dangers, are once more seen to be not our own, but His who made, redeemed, and has preserved us yet again—the living to praise Him. Our lamented brother has been in the mission field about eight years. He had a very strong hold upon the Chinese, and was an earnest preacher of the gospel. In the midst of these losses and dangers, our minds are turned off, in a measure, by another mysterious providence. Mr. —— is here, on the way to the United States. How much more sad to touch the mind with the hand of destruction! We feel that we should pray for the preservation of reason, even more than of life. May God bless to all these sad lessons of his providence!

MISSION IN INDIA.

Baptism of a Sikh at Lahor.

The Rev. C. W. Forman writes as follows, under date of August 23, 1862:

A man about thirty years of age has just come into my room, in company with a native Christian, to ask for baptism. His friends have done all in their power to keep him from taking this step, but without effect. They have cried and begged him to turn back, they have threatened not to let him have a part of his father's estate. On the other hand, after he had broken his caste by eating with Christians, they have offered to restore him to caste by feeding a number of Brahmins. One of this caste told him he was like an old broken shoe, but promised to mend him. A Musulman priest cursed him, and soon after he became ill. This seemed for a time to shake his faith, but soon he recovered from the attack. He seems humble, and willing to conform to the requirements of the church in all things. I asked him if he was willing to cut off his long hair. The Sikhs never cut their hair or beard. He said, "Yes, if it was necessary." He would conform to all our customs. In the course of conversation, he said, "I want to speak to the people about Christ, but I am very ignorant." I hope he is a true convert, and will be a useful man.

August 24th.—This morning I baptized the Sikh in the presence of a number of Christians and pupils from the school. The latter seemed interested in the ceremony.

AFRICA—CORISCO MISSION.

A voyage to Ukaka, to place a Bible reader there.

We insert the greater part of Mr. Nassau's letter, as follows:

Corisco, August 5th, 1862.

After Mr. Clemens had left us, the two remaining members of the "Mainland Visiting Committee" resumed their work on Wednesday, the 4th of June. One of our young men, who had been previously located as a Bible reader on the mainland, but who had been suspended from the mission service for neglecting his appropriate business, and engaging in trade, has been reinstated, and was to be re-located. Ukaka, on the left bank of the Muni, as it debouches into the bay opposite this island, was selected as the desirable place.

A Farewell Missionary Service—Time for Boat Expeditions.

We remembered with solemn pleasure the impressive farewell meetings that were held when we left our American homes, and we thought that similar exercises here would impress on our young men the importance of their business in going out as missionary labourers, and, moreover, would enlist in their behalf the prayers of our other native Christians. So, on the Tuesday evening previous, our audience at the usual evening prayer-meeting at Evangasimba, was enlarged by the presence of the Alongo and Ugobi schools, and the time lengthened by addresses befitting the occasion. Brother Mackey administered a firm and faithful charge to the reinstated Bible reader; and after the latter, standing before the congregation, had promised faithfulness, I spoke to the people on the qualifications requisite in one thus seeking Christ s work, and their duty to uphold those whom we send on such a work.

Our three months' dry season, is, in some respects, favourable for boat expeditions; for, though at that time the sea is apt to be rougher and the wind stronger, there is no danger of being caught in thunder storms. We had, therefore, to wait until the usual time of the full strength of the sea breeze, so that I had room to attend to various little duties about this school before leaving.

Arrangements made—'Off'—Sea Sickness.

By an early rising, breakfast was over, and directions were given that would suffice for my two days' proposed absence. The school-bell was rung at its usual hour, eight o'clock; the customary portion of the Benga Scriptures was read; and with a prayer for God's blessing on the children, I left them under the instruction of one of the older girls, whom I have placed in my chair on several such emergencies, and who presides with becoming propriety, and instructs with a commendable ability for her years. Gathering together a few articles necessary for the trip—a travelling shawl, (invaluable for the purpose,) food, &c., I was at brother Mackey's by nine o'clock. His men were rigging the boat; this operation, the putting in of all the articles, the safe launching, and then the safe putting in of ourselves by native arms, occupied an hour, until, at ten o'clock, we pushed out of the little anchorage at Evangasimba, and, the sails catching the sea-breeze as it came in around Ugovi Point, the boat was turned toward the north end of the island. From this point in the narrative, if I wrote only of what was most obvious and constant, I would write of sea-sickness. I am painfully susceptible to it. Yet of the two members of the expedition, it is well that I should be the one to write, for of it I have been parva pars.

Incidents of the Voyage—Crude India Rubber.

. . . Alongo was rounded, the north side of the island was passed, and we were out in the bay towards Ilobi. The wind failed, and the men had to row. The noon-day sun glared down on the water; and notwithstanding the protection of umbrella and broad-rimmed hat, that glare was painful. My eye is perfectly well on land. The sun's glare on water is peculiar. We were so fortunate as to meet the boat of one of our native friends coming from Ilobi, having with him our anchor, that had been loaned to him some time before. It was a great relief when we neared Ilobi, the tree-tops of which had long before loomed up. There are three islands, Large Ilobi, Mba-Ilobi, and Small Ilobi. The second is just at the northern end of the first, and separated from it by a narrow strait. The third lies nearer to the continent and a little further north than the second; so that, approaching the group in the direction we were coming from Manji, the three islands, overlapping each other, seemed to make but one. On the first is located one of our licentiates, Ibia; the second is unoccupied; on the third is an English trading-post. The hulk of a wrecked vessel is anchored to the shore and used as a factory. We speak of going over to "the Hulk." There brother Mackey was to stop for a little while on pecuniary business. . . . The occupant of the trading-post is a Christian gentleman, and while brother Mackey was transacting his business, I found strength in listening to the chattering and observing the pranks of a dozen caged parrots, and in watching the operation of washing, assorting, and packing rubber—the great article of trade here. The pieces are perfectly white when fresh, growing dark by exposure; are about one foot in length, and look like so many freshly-cut, small cows' tongues.

Arrival at Ukaka—Native Towns, Languages, &c.

About four o'clock, P. M., we re-entered the boat, turning its head southward to the south bank of the Muni, four miles distant, and soon landed at Ukaka's steep bank. This is the name of the promontory at the mouth of the river. On it are some half dozen towns, pretty thickly inhabited, and very much frequented. Mbikos, Balengis, Bondemos, Mpongwes, and other congeners of the Bengas meet there for trade.

The previously formed judgment as to the desirability of having some one there, was increased when we saw these people of slightly varying tongues, who, if they but casually heard some word of Jesus, might, like Philip, carry it back to their people. The ascent of the hill is precipitous; the soil a loam, rich compared with the loose sand of Corisco; a luxuriant vegetation is nourished, that, by its tallness, makes the rude houses look smaller than they really are. A house looks small if grass grows up to its top. The people evidently are inferior in house-building to the Bengas. If you enter a Benga town, every blade of grass has been carefully weeded from the streets. In these Mbiko towns, the grass overruns; there were paths in the street, except in front of the Ikenga, or town hall.

African Reception—Rich Vegetation; "Life on Life."

Here we at once entered, where sits the headman, (or his representative,) pipe in mouth, dignified, silent, except to respond to a salutation, or to throw in an interjection into the conversation of the babblers that there congregate. You enter the Ikenga, take notice of nobody, seat yourself comfortably, look about for a few moments, and say to the people present, "mbolani." This is African custom. You are "mbolo"-d in return, and you respond "ay." Our errand was mentioned in a few words to the head-man, an appointment made for a meeting there an hour later, and after resting awhile, and leaving a request that a fowl be cooked for our supper, (to be compensated for, not paid for,) we rose for a walk among the other towns. I was glad to walk; it helped me to forget my pains from sea-sickness. The vegetation was new. I think Corisco rich, but that ground was vastly more so. There was such a piling up of life; every available spot of ground between the trees covered with bushes; enormous parasites on the trunks of the trees, and depending from their branches fantastic air-plants. It was life on life.

Visit to three Villages.

We went to three other villages. They were all near each other, and within a sick man's pleasant walking distance. The houses in all were poor, compared with those of this island, but there were more people than usually cluster together. There are probably two hundred people in the four villages. In them all we made a hasty stop at the principal house, to bid the people come to the evening meeting. In one village we seated ourselves at the door of a house, and awaited the approach of the head-man, who was at the other end of the town, but who came as soon as he saw us. Low stools were brought, and when salutations were made, and the collecting circle quieted, brother Mackey told his object, and bade the man to the meeting. The man looked with a quicker eye and more intelligent countenance than I often see. He was a Mbiko, and had to be spoken to through an interpreter, so that I had time to watch his face while the message was being transmitted. He said he had "heard these things once before, and had kept them in his heart." It may be faithlessness that lays such expressions always to the charge of duplicity; at least it is pleasant to hope that among some, by some means, some good may be done.

The Gospel preached at Night in an African Village.

It was dark when we returned to the first town. The light of the blazing fires in the houses was cheerful, and the babbling of the collecting people was at least happy—at least they had not yet reached the point of disorder. Brother Mackey and I sat on a low bench, under the eaves of the house, and conversed. What did we talk about? What could come so prominently before us as the present and future condition of the heathen? There they were before us. That very day, twelve years before, brother Mackey had been at that very town. He had never had an uncourteous reception in an African town, and with this encouraging characteristic, we hoped much for Africa. If her sons would but listen, (as those in the town were then waiting to do,) to preach was a joy, and we would not limit the ability of the wonder-working Holy Spirit to work when, or how, or by what means he pleased.

The house was crowding. I went in and reclined on the chief seat, a kind of couch; brother Mackey avoided the tobacco-smoke by sitting near the door-sill. Observing the absence of women, he sent for them. They came, stools in hand, and filled up the space in the inner circle. They were noisy and talkative, requiring a multitude of interjections and "s-s-s" from the men to obtain silence. One poor woman, in sitting so as to face brother Mackey, had her back directly in front, and near to me. She was sternly admonished by an authority at my side, "Don't turn your back to the white man!" She made a painful compromise between the two "tangani's." Another, failing to remove her hat as soon as she was seated, was saluted with "Take off your hat!" Silence being obtained, brother Mackey offered a Benga prayer; the rising and reseating of the company created a titter among the women.

Order being restored, brother Mackey addressed the people on our lost and sinful natural state; that they were like men wandering in the darkness of a forest by night, unable to find the way out; that we had come with light. The good news of salvation was told them, and a warning added for those who should neglect it; for those who desired to love and obey, a few easily remembered directions for belief were given.

No Knowledge of Immortality; "We don't know these things."

When the sermon was ended, permission was given for any one who wished to ask a question, so to do. Mr. Mackey asked what they supposed became of them after death. One man promptly answered, that he thought man died utterly. I was shocked. I had found doubt of the soul's immortality in the refined heathenism of a Cicero, and disbelief of God in a Voltaire's unsanctified knowledge, but I was not looking for this doubt from this heathen's lip. When asked whether he thought man was like the goats and chickens when he died, he promptly accepted the degrading comparison. But he was not trying to doubt; argument, therefore, was not needed—he needed information. When informed of the teachings of God's word, he replied, "Well, we don't know. Here are Bengas, and Mpongwes, and Mbikas, but we don't know these things." He was told that to give them this knowledge we had come; and because we could not stay all the time, we brought with us our friend, the Bible-reader.

They were commended to his instructions, and he to their care. The company dispersed. I don't know what use God may make of his word that was spoken. Even the shouts of revelry, and screams of cruelty, and sharp tones of anger, that afterwards, in the course of the evening, were heard, could not make me believe that God would allow all the seed to be unproductive.

MISSION IN BRAZIL.

Sales of the Scriptures by a Colporteur.

The Rev. A. Blackford, writing at Rio de Janeiro, September 24th, thus speaks of the humble, but very useful labours of a colporteur, employed under the supervision of our brethren.

Our colporteur returned from Sao Paulo the beginning of this month. (This is the one paid by the British and Foreign Bible Society.) He was absent from the city eight months. He reports that he not only met no opposition in his work, but in many instances was received with great cordiality, and generously treated, both by the people and local authorities. In several towns his license to sell was granted free of charge.

In S——, he one day met the vicar of the Matriz, (chief church of the town, to which all others owe a kind of subjection,) who asked him if his Bibles were the prohibited ones. He replied that he had been selling for more than a year, and no one had ever interfered with him. "Neither will I do so," said the vicar, and passed on. This priest afterwards bought a Bible and a New Testament. On his return from the interior, the colporteur called to see him. He inquired of his success in his work. Mr. S. replied that it had been very good, and the vicar said he was very glad to hear it.

In S——a, an interior town, as he was one morning starting out with his books, he met a fazendeiro—planter or farmer—who, as he expressed it, enjoyed so much to hear of the gospel that they talked all day and part of the night.

He went with his books to a villa ten miles from this town. So much were the people pleased, that they begged him to return and tell them more of these things. Accordingly, on a Saturday, the fazendeiro with whom he had lodged came with his animals, and took him to spend the Sabbath with them. In that farm-house the people of this rustic neighbourhood assembled to hear him read and talk about the gospel of Christ. As a mark of his gratitude, this fazendeiro afterwards sent his servant and two mules to carry Mr. S. and his books, free of charge, to another town thirty miles distant. Remembering that Mr. S. is a very illiterate and simple-minded man, these facts show clearly that there are many here and there who are hungering for the word of life. Now and then were instances of individuals mocking at the man and his books. Of this there were some cases among the students in Sao Paulo. Yet in that city he had excellent success in selling books.

During the year ending August 31st, he sold 291 Bibles and 209 New Testaments; making in all 500 copies of the Scriptures thus put in circulation. Sure is the promise of God; and we know that at the last day the angels shall gather fruit of this seed.

I have still the other colporteur employed in the city. I can arrange his salary for yet one month, and perhaps a little more.

MISCELLANY.

Rev. W. Ellis in Madagascar.

The London Missionary Magazine of October contains the following letter of Mr. Ellis, which will be found to possess peculiar interest. Six new missionaries of the London Missionary Society reached Mauritius early in August, on their way to Madagascar.

Antananarivo, July 2d, 1862.

My Dear Friend—The very short notice I have received of an opportunity of sending to Mauritius, will allow me to do little more than inform you of my arrival and prospects here, in the hope of being in a very short time able to send you accounts more ample and not less encouraging.

Departure from Tamatave, and Journey to the Capital.

I left Tamatave for the capital on the 31st of May, our journey occupying fifteen days, three of which were Sabbaths, so that we were twelve days travelling. We had public worship each Sunday, and on the first Sunday in the month I administered the Lord's Supper to six communicants, who formed part of our numerous company.

Met and welcomed by the Native Christians.

Thirty miles from the capital, a large number of Christians from Antananarivo met me near one of the villages of Imerina. As we approached they commenced singing a hymn of praise to God, in which the Christians who were with me joined, till we met and halted. The two pastors who were with them, said they were sent by their brethren and the churches to bid me welcome, assure me of the general joy among them which my arrival would produce, and bear me company to the capital. We travelled together till we reached Ambatomanga, twenty miles from Antananarivo.

The Sabbath observed—Contrast with former times.

Here we rested for the Sunday, where we had large congregations both morning and evening. Shortly before the evening service, seven officers, one of high rank, from the palace, arrived. They said they were sent by the king to meet me, but would not enter upon any arrangements on that day, as it was the Lord's day. In about a quarter of an hour after this they came to our worship, in which they joined with earnest cheerfulness. I had spent Sunday at the same village on my way up in 1856. Then, a few Christians came by stealth, and we met for prayer at night. Now, the chief room in the largest house in the place was opened in broad day, and was thronged with simple and devout worshippers, while numbers crowded around on the outside.

Advance to Antananarivo, and Reception by the King and People.

The next morning the officers delivered a letter from the King, and another from the principal Secretary of State, bidding me welcome, and informing me of the King's wish that I should enter Antananarivo that day. Soon after nine o'clock we set out, quite a large company, for each officer had his palanquin-bearers and attendants, and we were not less than 200 persons. About two we reached the suburbs, and I was greeted by multitudes gathered in their courtyards, and on the walls, as I passed along, till I reached a very comfortable house, which the King had appointed for my residence, not far from the palace. The King and Queen, and the nobles of the court, received me with great friendliness and pleasure at the palace, the next day, and expressed themselves gratified with my communications respecting the friendship of the English, the interest taken in their welfare, and the endeavours the Society were making to aid in extending the blessings of Christianity and education, as the best means of promoting the permanent welfare of the people. Mentioning the number and specific objects of the several missionaries on their way to Madagascar, with the supply of books, school materials, and printing apparatus, which they would bring, both King and Queen thanked me for the communication I had made, and requested me to assure their friends that it was peculiarly gratifying to them. The Prime Minister, the Commander-in-Chief, the first Officer of the Palace, and other high authorities, some of them apparently most earnest Christians, were equally cordial in their welcomes, and in their conferences with me at their own residences, in which I have been their guest.

Visits of the Christians from the Country.

For more than a week my house was continually thronged with Christian friends from different parts of the capital, or from Christian families from the numerous villages in the suburbs, all expressing their joy at my arrival, as an earnest of their again enjoying the advantage of the teaching and assistance of English missionaries, as well as the extension of schools, and the acquisition of the Bible, for which their desire is most urgent.

Urgent need of the Scriptures.

The chief disappointment they feel arises from my having no copies of the Scriptures. They had learned by my letters from Mauritius that I was coming alone, and that the missionaries were to follow; but they expected, and most urgently do they need, the Holy Scriptures. In some entire congregations there is not a copy; and they only hear them read when a minister or friend from the capital comes to them; and yet their faith is simple, scriptural, and firm; no deviation in their teaching or belief from the great essential truths of the gospel; no visionary or erratic opinions on the subject of religion, which seems to be with them a simple, sincere, earnest, personal concern.

Sabbath Congregations and Services.

I have been two Sabbaths in the capital, and have attended two of their places of worship—rustic, temporary buildings—houses enlarged by taking out the ends and forming two or more together, and taking down the front wall, and spreading out a screen of rushes. At Analakely more than 1500 were present, and scarcely fewer at Amparimbé. These places are filled soon after daybreak on Sunday, and continue crowded, with not more than an interval of a couple of hours, till five in the afternoon; not, indeed, with the same audience, but with successive congregations. On each of the Sabbaths I have taken part in these services, reading the Malagasy Scriptures, delivering a short discourse in broken Malagasy, but in which the pastors encourage me by saying they understand it, and the people are glad. I also pray partly in English and partly in Malagasy. No description can convey to you any correct idea of the seriousness, attention, apparent devotion, and deep feeling of these assemblies during the time of worship. Some of the pastors are with me every day; but we have not been able to holda general meeting yet, though they greatly desire it.

Instructions to the King and his Officers.

I am occasionally sent for by the King or some of the high officers, and I have for some short time past attended the King at his house daily, from one to three o'clock, to read English with him. We read together out of a large quarto Bible, on the outside of which is inscribed in gilt letters, "Presented to Radama, King of Madagascar, by the London Missionary Society, 1821." A number of officers, some of them Christians, are generally present, and we frequently converse on what we have read. I have also, every forenoon at my house, eleven or twelve sons of the chief nobles and officers, who come to learn English an hour and a half daily. They will be the future rulers of the country. They accompany me to the chapel, and sometimes to my readings with the King. Last Sunday, with His Majesty's approval, I held divine service at the King's house at three o'clock in the afternoon. His Majesty, some of his high officers, all my pupils, and a number of others, were present. I read in the Old and New Testament; we sang twice, I prayed, partly in English and partly in Malagasy, concluding with the Lord's Prayer in Malagasy, and occupied about a quarter of an hour in an address from 1 Tim. i. 15: "This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners." This was faithfully translated by Ra Haniraka. All were very attentive. I was informed that the King expressed his approval, and I hope to be permitted to continue the service. I have seen nothing yet to diminish the high opinion I had formed of the strength and purity of the religious feeling among the people.

Christians only a Minority of the Population.

We must not conclude that all are genuine converts; but I believe future years will prove that many are walking in newness of life and spiritual fellowship with Christ. The Christians are indeed numerous, for they may be counted by thousands in the land. Still, they are only a minority in the general population, and this probably operates favourably in stimulating them to watchfulness, earnestness, and sincerity in their profession of Christianity. Most fervently do I desire, and most earnestly would I pray, that the brethren on their way may come to them in the fulness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ.

Sites granted for Mission Buildings.

I have applied for, and obtained from the king, the ground on which Mr. Griffith's house and school formerly stood, (both were burnt,) and also the ground on which the printing establishment stood. These are among the most eligible spots in the city; and other arrangements are in progress. I have received no tidings from England since those dated 26th of March, at which time the missionaries had not left; nevertheless, I hope they will soon reach the island. The king has appointed some excellent officers to conduct them to the capital.

Roman Catholic Agents at the Capital.

There are a number of Roman Catholic priests, and some Sisters of Charity, here, and more are very shortly expected; but scarcely any of the people attend their services. The attachment of the people to the BIBLE—their only light, support, and friend, during the long night of persecution which has just passed away, together with the remembrance of former times, when their eyes saw their teachers, are undoubtedly among the chief causes of the strong desire for, and confidence in, the English Protestant missionaries whom they are expecting.

Poverty of the Christians.

The Christians will want much assistance, for the widows and orphans among them are many; and the losses and sufferings of twenty-six years, during parts of which many of them had not where to lay their heads, has not left them many resources, and they anxiously and confidently look to England for help. Four churches must be built over the conspicuous spots on which the martyrs died, and they will be occupied by many who were their companions in the faith and tribulation of the gospel of Christ.

But I have not time now to enlarge on these or any other topics connected with this, the most attractive and important field that ever invited the labours of the Christian missionary. I have only been able to sketch very briefly and slightly the outlines of the prospect which Madagascar presents, with a hasty allusion to my own proceedings thus far. I ask, on behalf of the young but vigorous churches, and the outlying and unconverted multitudes of the Malagasy, the fervent and continued prayers of the churches at home, and beg to remain,

Very faithfully yours,

WILLIAM ELLIS.

THE "REVISED BOOK OF DISCIPLINE."

We have received letters making inquiry as to the last edition of the "Revised Book of Discipline." We deem it well to say, therefore, that the directions of the last General Assembly (see Minutes, page 640,) have been fully carried out. A copy has been sent to each minister who could be reached by the United States mails, and enough copies sent to the Stated Clerk of each Presbytery to supply one to the session of each vacant church, when its post-office is not given in the Minutes.

A JOURNEY IN THE WEST.

The month of October last was mainly spent by the Corresponding Secretary of the Board of Publication in visiting Western Synods, and endeavouring to increase the interest already felt in the work of distributing books and tracts among the soldiers and sailors, especially the sick and wounded in the hospitals, and the Southern prisoners in the hands of our government.

His first visit was made to the Synod of Illinois, holding its sessions in the charming town of Jacksonville, Illinois. Arriving before the time fixed for the opening of the Synod, he found the Presbytery of Sangamon in session, in the Jacksonville church, and accepted a very kind invitation to address it on the subject of colportage. A colporteur of the Board had been labouring with great acceptance and usefulness within the bounds of this Presbytery, and the members were extremely anxious to have him continue his labours. A communication from this colporteur was published in the Home and Foreign Record for last month.

When the Synod of Illinois had been opened, the Secretary was received with a cordiality and kindness he can never forget. Full opportunity was allowed him to plead the cause of all the five Boards of the church, according to an agreement made among their Secretaries, that each should present the cause of all. In regard to the book and tract circulation, the Synod manifested the liveliest interest, and after several earnest addresses had been made by different members, the Synod adopted unanimously the resolutions which were published in the last number of the Record.

The following Sabbath (October 12th) was spent in Springfield, the capital of the State of Illinois, where he addressed the Sabbath-schools of the First and Third Presbyterian churches in the course of the day, and in the evening a very interesting meeting of those two congregations united was held in the Third Church, of which the Rev. G. W. F. Birch is pastor. The house was densely filled. The audience listened with deep and earnest attention for nearly an hour to statements of the Secretary, who explained the plans of the Board, and narrated many facts in reference to the extent and usefulness of its work of distribution among the soldiers and sailors. Prayers were offered in the progress of the meeting by the Rev. W. T. Adams, of the Presbytery of Bloomington, and by the Rev. George W. F. Birch, pastor of the Third Church. The audience was dismissed, after singing the hymn, "Am I a soldier of the cross." Several citizens afterwards proffered liberal contributions towards the good work, and a suggestion was made, which has already been in part carried out, that the Presbyterian congregations in Springfield raise funds enough to supply at once the soldiers, about 6000 in number, now at Camps Butler and Yates, near that place. The meeting was pleasant and profitable, and will not fail to be productive of much good.

On the next Thursday he attended the meeting of the Synod of Northern Indiana at Delhi, Indiana. His interview with the Synod was in every respect delightful. After he had addressed the body, several of its members added pleasing testimonies, from their own knowledge, respecting the usefulness of the Board's distribution among the soldiers. The following resolutions were then unanimously adopted:

Resolved, 1. That we have heard with pleasure the statements of the Rev. Dr. Schenck with reference to the different Boards of the Church, and the various departments of Christian benevolence committed to their charge, and have reason to thank God for the many encouragements to renewed and diligent effort in the work of Christian benevolence.

Resolved, 2. That we are greatly pained to learn that the contributions of our churches have fallen off to such an extent as greatly to cripple the energies of the Boards, and to render it absolutely indispensable that the churches should enlarge their contributions to save our noble schemes of Christian benevolence and the cause of Christ from the most serious and painful disasters.

Resolved, 3. That we most earnestly exhort all our ministers and ruling elders to use their whole influence in bringing every church and every Christian within our bounds to contribute liberally to the Boards of our church, and to pray without ceasing that in these perilous times the faith of God's people may not fail, and the walls of Jerusalem may be built up.

Resolved, 4. That we have been especially gratified with the statements with regard to the work of the Board of Publication among the soldiers and sailors in the service of our government, and the marked blessing of God upon their efforts; and we would exhort our churches to be diligent in furnishing this Board with the means for more enlarged and liberal effort among this interesting class of men, who are perilling their lives in behalf of our beloved and bleeding country.

By dint of travelling all night, the Secretary reached Greensburg, in the southern part of the State, on Saturday morning, and found the Synod of Indiana in session at that place. Arrangements were made to hear him on Saturday evening, and to secure the attendance of the congregation along with the members of Synod.

In the evening, the house was filled with a large and intelligent audience, who listened with close attention to his statements respecting the five Boards, and especially the work of distribution among the soldiers. The Synod immediately afterwards adopted unanimously the following resolutions.

The Synod having heard the Rev. Dr. Schenck in behalf of our benevolent Boards and especially of the Board of Publication:

Resolved, 1. That Synod recommend to our churches, to take up collections for all our Boards, and to carry out the Plan of Systematic Benevolence recommended by the General Assembly, or some other similar plan.—See Minutes, page 864.

Resolved, 2. That the circulation of books and tracts among our soldiers and sailors at the present time, upon which the Board of Publication has so largely entered, is a work of special importance, and we earnestly request all our churches to aid in the work, by their prayers and liberal contributions.

The following day (Sabbath, October 19th,) was spent in Indianapolis, and in the evening he addressed a union-meeting of the Old-school Presbyterian churches, held in the Rev. J. H. Nixon's church, to hear statements in regard to the work of the Board among the soldiers. The audience was large and intelligent, and appeared to be deeply interested in the subject. After the Secretary finished, the Rev. H. M. Bacon, chaplain to one of the Indiana regiments, added his very emphatic testimony respecting the vital importance, and great usefulness of this work. He especially dwelt upon the great excellence and usefulness of the "Soldier's Pocket-Book," published by the Board, and which had been distributed among the men of his regiment. Measures were at once spoken of, which we hope will be carried out, for supplying the thousands of soldiers now in camp near the city of Indianapolis, with the publications of the Board.

The somewhat extensive journey of the Secretary in the states of Illinois, Indiana, and Ohio, was one of the most interesting, agreeable, and, he has reason to believe, one of the most useful, he has ever made in the service of the Board. He was everywhere received with a cordiality and hospitality which could not fail to make it truly delightful to himself, and to place him under the most pleasing obligations to the various kind Christian friends he met with in those States. The lively interest everywhere manifested in the work of the Board, was such as to afford great encouragement to hope that the churches of those Synods will send forward enlarged contributions during the coming months.

A GOOD EXAMPLE FOR SABBATH-SCHOOLS.

At Bayfield, La Pointe county, Wisconsin, on the distant shores of Lake Superior, is a little Presbyterian Sabbath-school of fifteen scholars and two teachers. This Sabbath-school has just sent to the Board of Publication a donation of five dollars and thirty cents—an average of thirty-five cents for each scholar—to aid in furnishing religious books and tracts to our sick and wounded soldiers. How many of our larger and more flourishing schools are doing nothing for this great work, and might learn from the example of this feeble and distant school! How many will "go and do likewise," and thus receive the blessings of hundreds ready to perish? Many—very many—we earnestly hope.

JEREMIAH.

The weeping prophet! He wept because his people were so disobedient to God, and so regardless of the warnings he gave them. He seemed to himself to labour in vain. But what he spake in the name of the Lord he wrote in a book, and that book still lives, and will live while time endures. The book he wrote has done more good than the messages he delivered while alive, and it will do good while the world stands. Jeremiah did not live in vain. Nor do they live in vain who write books and tracts, and leave them behind, to be read by succeeding generations. They live in the books and tracts they write. Nor do they live in vain who give away books and tracts. They may thus reach many, and these books and tracts may do good for many years. Alas, that so few try to do good in this way! If we cannot write books, let us buy and circulate them, and thus do good. W. J. M.

ONE CENT'S WORTH.

A son of one of the mighty chiefs of the mountains in Burmah was converted by a single tract. He could not read. They had no written language till the missionaries came among them. The chief's son came to Rangoon, a distance of two hundred and fifty miles from his own home. A missionary's wife taught him to read, and in forty-eight hours he read the tract through. He was all ecstasy. He wanted to take a lot of tracts home to the mountains. He filled a basket two-thirds full of tracts, covered them with plantain leaves, put sugar on the top of them, and so reached the gates of Ava. The officer of the gates searched the basket, found the books, and the noble chief's son was condemned to be a pagoda slave—the worst kind of slavery, for it is perpetual. At the intercession of the missionaries, at last he was released; but he was determined to have the books, and he smuggled a basket-ful on his way back out of Ava, and reached his home in the mountains, three hundred miles off. He preached the gospel there, and was the means of converting hundreds to Christ. He was a man of influence; the people flocked from all parts of the country to hear him, and in one year 1500 natives were baptized in Arracan, as converts to the Lord. And all this was by the means of one little tract. That tract cost one cent. Oh, whose cent was that? Who gave it? God alone knows. Perhaps it was the mite of some little girl. Perhaps the well-earned penny of some little boy. But it has taught hundreds the knowledge of their Saviour. It has cast down hundreds of idols from poor heathen hearts. Oh, how great the value of even one cent's worth of good, with the blessing of God upon it! Let us take care of the cents, and send them to the Publication Board, that makes tracts of every kind. One dollar would make three hundred tracts.—Selected.

READ ONE BOOK.

Don't read too many books. Dr. Nott, of Union College, observes, that he can always tell the young men in college who are to make their mark in the world, if he can only see them return from a visit to the college library, which is open only once a week. "If," says he, "I saw a man leaving the library with five or six books under his arm, I would say to myself, there goes a mental glutton. He will read, mark, but not inwardly digest; and the consequence is, he is very likely to have mental dyspepsia; the mind, endeavouring to acquire too much, strains itself, and becomes weakened. On the other hand, if I see a young student taking but a small book from the library, and that he does not return there for some time, I am satisfied that he will saturate his mind with the intellect of his author, and not only gain all the knowledge in the book, but sharpen his perceptions, and invigorate every faculty. Nothing makes a man so well as being a little hungry all the time, and nothing improves the mind so much as reading one good book thoroughly, and making the facts your own. The mind is thus never cloyed, nor weakened."

BOARD OF CHURCH EXTENSION.

Corresponding Secretary—Rev. H. I. Coe.
Treasurer—Archibald Gamble, Esq.
No. 88 Market Street, St. Louis, Missouri.

Communications on the subject of Church Extension should be addressed to the Corresponding Secretary, No. 88 Market Street, St. Louis, Mo.

Donations should be sent to Archibald Gamble, Esq., St. Louis, Mo.; or, if more convenient, to J. D. Thorpe, Esq., Cincinnati, Ohio; A. Davidson, Esq., Louisville, Ky.; S. D. Powel, Esq., Treasurer of the Board of Domestic Missions, No. 910 Arch Street, Philadelphia; T. H. Nevin, Esq., Pittsburgh, Pa.; Mr. J. B. Kirtland, Memphis, Tennessee; or to William Rankin, Esq., Treasurer of the Board of Foreign Missions, 23 Centre street, New York.

APPROPRIATIONS FROM THE GENERAL FUND.

No appropriation is made without the recommendation of the Presbytery, or the Church Extension Committee of the Presbytery within whose bounds the church applying for aid is located.

No appropriation is paid until the Board receives a certificate from the Trustees of the church aided, stating that their church lot is properly secured, and that the amount appropriated will complete their house of worship, and leave the whole property free from debt.

Appropriations not called for within two years of the date thereof, are regarded as withdrawn.

THE FRUIT.

The Rev. Sheldon Jackson, of La Crescent, Minnesota, in a recent letter, says: "The late meeting of our Synod, (St. Paul,) at Lake City, very cordially endorsed the Board of Church Extension. It has done great things for me in this little village. Since I have got into our new church, the Sabbath-school has doubled, attendance at worship increased more than one-third, while my support from the people has increased three-fold. There is also a good degree of religious interest among the people."

REVIVAL AND CHURCH-BUILDING.

We have often had occasion to call attention to the fact that revivals of religion frequently succeed the completion of church edifices. The subjoined letter from the Rev. B. H. Charles, the efficient pastor of the church at Chester, Illinois, presents another common fact, viz , that a revival in a church destitute of a sanctuary, usually paves the way for the erection of a house of worship. Brother Charles writes in reference to the church at Liberty, Illinois, ten miles below Chester, Illinois, on the Mississippi River. He says: "For four years past I have been giving one-fourth of my time to the church at Liberty, with but meagre success. The town was a hard river place. I was very much discouraged. The church was weak and lifeless. But a few months ago the Lord poured out his Spirit on the church and town, and greatly strengthened the church. From about thirty, he increased us to about sixty. Not only so, but the work is still progressing. The most hardened and godless have been brought into the church, and many who before cared nothing about preaching, are now regular hearers. This is our present religious state. But we have nothing but a small schoolhouse to worship in. Of a good day, one-third or one-half of my audience have to stand out of doors, and listen through the windows and door. There is a large church-going population in the town and in the neighbourhood. There is no other church organization of any importance near us, and the community is Presbyterian in sentiment. We have raised about $1000, and expect, by hard work, to get the subscription to $1200. We feel called to build this summer. The public mind says, Build. But to build a house large enough will cost us $1500. Can we obtain the $300 difference this fall—say the 1st of October? We can only promise in the future to return as much of it as possible. If you could be on the ground, you could see the importance of this movement at this time."

THE NOBLE DEED OF ONE MAN.

Every man may not be able to build a church, but who that can estimate the fruits and influences of such a work, does not covet the ability and will to perform it? How many souls may be born into Christ's kingdom within it! How many troubled hearts may be comforted! How many children nurtured there for usefulness on earth, and glory in heaven! How many erring, wandering sinners may there find direction into the way of life! What civilizing, elevating influences, may go forth from such a centre into the community around it! Happy is the man to whom God gives the grace and the means to open such a fountain of blessing!

There are many men in the Presbyterian Church who could purchase such happiness and usefulness very cheaply, by parting with a small portion of that wealth which gives them continual anxiety, and threatens to be a curse to their heirs. We commend to them the following example, which we find in a description given in a Buffalo, New York, paper, of a new church in that city.

"The building is an ornament to the city, and, in beauty of location, in architectural design, and in neatness of finish, is not excelled, in our judgment, by any house of worship in Western New York. The whole edifice, with carpets and all other needed furniture, is the generous gift of our excellent townsman, George Palmer, Esq., at whose sole expense, and under whose personal direction, it has been constructed. We are informed, that the only conditions in the deed making over the edifice to the congregation, are, that the house shall be perpetually and exclusively consecrated to the service of Almighty God, and that the society worshipping in it shall raise annually a fund sufficient to keep the house in thorough repair. By the terms of the deed, the society has an ecclesiastical connection with the Old-school branch of the Presbyterian Church; but the probability of a union of the two branches of that church is contemplated, and provided for in the conveyance. The value of the lot, building, and appurtenances, is estimated at $60,000."

CHRISTIAN BENEFICENCE.

The biography of eminently pious and useful men since the Reformation, shows that great numbers of them have recognised the obligation statedly to devote a portion of their income to charitable uses. Lord Chief-justice Hale, Rev. Dr. Hammond, Baxter, Doddridge, and others, regularly gave a tenth; Dr. Watts a fifth; Mrs. Rowe one-half. The Rev. John Wesley, when his income was thirty pounds, lived on twenty-eight, and gave two; and when his income rose to sixty, and afterwards to one hundred and twenty, he still lived on twenty-eight, and gave all the remainder. Mr. Nathaniel R. Cobb, a merchant connected with the Baptist church in Boston, in 1821, at the age of twenty-three, drew up and subscribed the following covenant, to which he faithfully adhered, till, on his death-bed, he praised God that, by acting according to it, he had given in charity more than $40,000.

"By the grace of God, I will never be worth more than $50,000.

"By the grace of God, I will give one-fourth of the net profits of my business to charitable and religious uses.

"If I am ever worth $20,000, I will give one-half of my net profits; and if I am ever worth $30,000, I will give three-fourths; and the whole after $50,000. So help me God, or give to a more faithful steward, and set me aside. N. R. Cobb."

RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

The following action was taken at the General Assembly held in Cincinnati in 1850, in regard to the "Home and Foreign Record."

Resolved, As the action of the last General Assembly has resulted in the establishment of the "Home and Foreign Record," that paper is hereby recommended, and the ministers and churches are urged to exert themselves to place it in every family, as the organ, indirectly, of the church, on many important subjects.

The Assembly held in Philadelphia, 1853,

Resolved, That it be recommended to all our pastors to endeavour to increase the circulation of the "Home and Foreign Record," the organ of the Boards of the church, in order that our churches may be better acquainted with their respective plans and operations, and be induced to contribute more liberally towards their support.

The Assembly held at Nashville, Tennessee, 1855,

Resolved, That our ministers and elders be earnestly exhorted to secure a wider circulation to the "Home and Foreign Record," now published at so reduced a price as to make it accessible to the poorest members of our church.

The Assembly held at New York, in 1856,

Resolved, That while the Assembly finds so much cause for gratitude and encouragement in the prosperity and usefulness of this Board, and so much to commend in the energy and economy with which its affairs have been conducted, it cannot forbear to give utterance to the painful feelings which are caused by the fact that there are still very many churches which have not, as yet, contributed anything to the Colporteur funds of the Board, and that there are still so many families in our church who do not take either the "Home and Foreign Record," or "The Sabbath-School Visitor." The Assembly reiterates its earnest exhortations to our Ministers and Ruling Elders to endeavour to secure a more general circulation of these papers among the members of our church.

The Assembly held at Lexington, Kentucky, in 1857,

Resolved, That while the Assembly is highly gratified at the increasing patronage extended from every part of the church to the "Home and Foreign Record," and the "Sabbath-School Visitor," yet it regrets to learn that there is still a large proportion of its families and members who do not receive these periodicals. The Assembly would therefore earnestly recommend its ministers and sessions to use all practicable means to extend the circulation of these important papers in their respective vicinities.—Minutes, p. 25.

Moreover, on the first Sunday evening of every month, or on other occasions, and from time to time, let the people hear from their minister a detailed account of our various Foreign Missions in succession, with a description of the religious condition of the people, and the beginning and progress of the church's work among them. That to this end our ministers take pains themselves carefully to read the "Home and Foreign Record," and the "Foreign Missionary," so far as to know what is being done by our missionaries; and that they also further the circulation, and encourage the reading of these publications in their congregations. P. 21.

And the Assembly held at Indianapolis, Indiana, in 1859,

Resolved, That the Assembly would especially commend the "Home and Foreign Record," to a more general patronage throughout the church; trusting that in its diligent perusal, members of the communion might catch more of the spirit of missions, and of Christian benevolence so richly pervading its columns. They also recommend the "Sabbath-School Visitor" as a most excellent publication to be circulated through our Sabbath-schools, and among the children of our charge.—Minutes, p. 545.

WILLIAM RANKIN, JR., Mission House, 23 Centre street, New York.

We take great pleasure in publishing the following succinct account of one of our Western Synods, prepared by their authority, and sent for publication. We have studied, through the aid of a State document, the statistics of Minnesota, and they are almost fabulous. The marvels of its resources, to be developed, are immense. Its geographical position, its basin, from which flow the great rivers of the continent—the Mississippi, the St. Lawrence, through the Lakes, and the Red River of the North,—emptying into Hudson's Bay, —all head in this wonderful State. Its climate of unsurpassed salubriousness, its fertility, make it the most interesting State in the West. The appeal is before the churches: Shall we send, or shall we not send? There are those who say, send me. But the Board lacks the means, she struggles to maintain her position, and keep afloat the vessel in which such hopes are embarked. May God give our people grace to measure their responsibility and awake to the privilege. How many could sustain a missionary by individual contributions? How many of those, whom God has prospered, could make this spiritual investment more glorious than any outlay in broad acres or wonderful water-powers?

The present is a most important crisis in the history of our work in this Synod. Shall we be permitted to go forward and enlarge our efforts for the extension of our church in this land? Shall we be able to occupy the many interesting fields that are, from time to time, opening up and inviting us to enter them? Shall we be able to retain the ground already occupied? or, shall we be compelled to retrench? These are questions about which we have all thought. The answer to them will, doubtless, depend very much upon the result of the dark and mysterious dispensation of God's providence, which enshrouds our beloved country, and, especially, a portion of our Synod, in gloom. Much will also depend, on getting the church at large to realize the importance of our Synod as a field for missionary labour, and the necessity of earnest and persevering efforts to occupy it.

Some very prominent ministers in our church, unless we are misinformed, are opposed to extending the work of Domestic Missions, until we have more firmly established the churches already organized. "Let us supply our vacant churches," say they; "erect houses of worship and parsonages, before we add to our church organizations." It is evidently the duty of the church to build up what she has commenced. But shall she stop here? "As the Star of Empire makes its way westward, shall the Presbyterian Church fail to follow her sons and daughters to their new homes, and plant, by them, her glorious banners? If so, she will manifestly not be true to her history; and she will not be doing what she is abundantly able to do. She is able to finish what she has commenced, and, at the same time, extend her labours to the regions beyond." She has the means and the men, and we have charity to believe that she has sufficient love for our blessed Master, and his glorious kingdom, to do all that is required of her, if she can only be made to feel that her men and means are needed. It is most important, therefore, that she should have a knowledge of the importance of our field and our wants. We cannot hope to reach the ear of the church at large by any communication made here only; yet, if we can ourselves be made to feel the importance of this matter by the presentation of facts, something will be gained—and to these we now ask attention.

The Extent of our Territory.

The Synod of St. Paul includes the whole of Minnesota, that part of Dekota Territory situated on the Red River of the North, and the portion of Northwestern Wisconsin, included in the bounds of the Presbyteries of Chippewa and Lake Superior. The State of Minnesota alone contains an area of 86,500 square miles, which is only about 500 square miles less than the States of Pennsylvania and New York united; and this State is only about two-thirds of the extent of our Synod.

The Natural Resources of this Country.

These are such that this land, in a very few years, must become the home of millions. The last three years have made it evident that this is destined to become the great wheat growing region of America. It will be, in a very few years, to this country, what the regions of the Baltic are to Europe. We need no other evidence of this than the statistics of Minnesota, which show an average yield of wheat for one year of 22 bushels per acre, and of another, of 20. And to this, we may add the report of multitudes of individuals of a yield of 30, 40, and even 50 bushels per acre. This article of produce, moreover, is only one of the staples of our most fruitful land. Such, also, is the facility with which our broad prairies are cultivated, that it makes them very desirable for farming purposes. Our immense pineries, which will require centuries to exhaust,—our magnificent rivers—our great Mississippi, to which our land gives birth, with its numerous tributaries, which give us the advantages of navigation in almost every part of our territory,—our countless, pure and crystal lakes, abounding in fish, and feeding multitudes of running brooks,—our great Lake Superior, which, when it is united to the interior by railroad,—and it will not be long till this is done,—will bring us as near the markets of the East as the State of Illinois now is,—our vast water-powers, the Falls of St. Anthony, of the St. Croix, of the Cannon River, of the Zumbro—not to mention multitudes of smaller streams, whose capacity to turn machinery is only limited by the amount of capital that may be employed,—our mineral resources—our iron and copper, which are so very abundant as to lead an eminent geologist, who has explored the regions along the shore of Lake Superior, to remark, that if they were all removed out of their place, the earth would lose its balance,—the unsurpassed beauty of our scenery, the purity of our air,—and last, though not least, the exceeding healthfulness of our climate,—make it evident that our Synod, in a very few years, must become the home of a vast population.

Our Present Population.

In 1849, Minnesota was organized as a territory of the United States. Its population, at that time, was about 5,000. The census of 1860 shows a population, then, of 172,000; and the present population is estimated at 200,000. The Indian troubles on our western border will check, for a time, the tide of emigration. The government has it in its power, and certainly will make such a settlement of these difficulties, that our frontier will be safer than it ever has been. The people of this country demand that this should be done; and when it is done, and confidence restored, emigration will become more rapid than ever, as the "Homestead Bill" offers free homes to emigrants.

The Character of our Population.

We have here representatives not only from every part of our own land, but from almost every land in Christendom. New England has especially poured into our midst her energetic and enterprising sons. Our German population is very numerous. Whole regions, extending often for many miles, are occupied exclusively by Germans; and their industry and thrift are changing the wilderness into fruitful fields. The "Son of Erin" is here, also, in his board shanty. Here, too, are the industrious Swede, and the honest and frugal Norwegian. Multitudes of these have left the "Fatherland," to make their homes with us, and they make noble citizens.

It is a marked characteristic of the population of this country, that a great majority of our people are below the meridian of life; and children are very numerous—almost every cabin is full of them. We have among us almost every variety of religious sentiment. The writer, whilst labouring as an itinerant in Minnesota, met with eighteen different denominations of professing Christians, representing almost every shade of religious belief in Christendom. All the radical errors of the present age are to be found among our people. The Church of Rome has a strong hold upon this land. Her members are numbered by the thousand. Most of our Irish, and a great portion of our German population, are of this faith. A very large portion of our Germans are infidels. It is said that the village of New Ulm, which suffered so sorely by the late Indian raid, was inhabited almost exclusively by German infidels; and that they not only forbade the gospel to be preached among them, but, on a certain occasion, burnt our Saviour in effigy.

But little has been done as yet for our foreign population by the American churches. The Methodist Episcopal Church has done more than any other denomination. There is here opened up for our church a most interesting field for labour, especially among the Swedes and Norwegians, and particularly the latter. These harmonize with our church more nearly than any other in this country, except the Lutheran. They are but poorly supplied with the means of grace; and the work of supplying them with a religious literature should claim the especial attention of our General Assembly and Board of Publication, as well as of this Synod.

Our Church—its Progress, etc.

The first missionary of our church, in the bounds of this Synod, arrived at St Paul, October, 1851. And our first church—the Central Church of St. Paul—was organized September, 1852, with seven members. Our Synod now numbers twenty-four ministers, actively engaged in preaching, (we have dismissed five—who laboured with us for some time—to other Synods,) thirty-three church organizations, with an aggregate membership of over eight hundred. We have erected and paid for, with the exception of a small amount, twelve houses of worship, and three parsonages. Our contributions the past year to the Board of Domestic Missions, amounted to $220; and to all the Boards, $827, or about one dollar per member. This amount is about double the amount contributed by our churches the previous year. If our progress has been slow, we have reason to believe, that what has been done, is of a permanent character. And whilst we readily admit and deplore our unfaithfulness, we would ask that the difficulties we have had to contend with be also considered. These are of two kinds, viz: Those that have stood in the way of the progress of other denominations, in common with us, and those that have operated against us as a church. In the former of these, may be mentioned, the intense excitement about money-making, the rampant spirit of speculation that prevailed through all this region a few years ago, followed by the terrible financial reverses of 1857 and 1858, which unsettled everything; the fluctuating character of our population, often making the removals from our churches equal to the accessions; and our national troubles, which have called away many of our strongest supporters. And in the latter, or hindrances to the progress of our church, the number of Old-school Presbyterians that have emigrated to this country has been small. A great portion of our churches is made up of material gathered up outside of our denomination. Until within the last two years, the position our church was supposed to occupy, in regard to the subject of slavery, operated against us in some parts. The "Broad Church" spirit that is most prevalent in this country has hindered our progress. It is generally understood that Old-school Presbyterians are stiff in their adherence to the old-fashioned doctrines; the masses have "itching ears," "and cannot endure sound doctrine."

The greatest obstacle, however, to the extension of our church in this field, has been the inability of our Board to furnish the means to support the work fully. Could the means have been furnished, we could have added at least one-third to the number of our ministers, and one-half to the number of our church organizations. On the other hand, it is gratifying to know that very few of our organizations have not been sustained through all their trials, and nearly all have been regularly supplied with the means of grace. Our work calls for renewed vigour and energy, on our part as ministers, and more earnest and importunate prayer, on the part of ministers, elders, and members. "In the name of the Lord, let us set up our banners," and go forward to possess the land. And may the great Head of the church, by his Holy Spirit, inspire our church at large, to send forth and support more labourers into this interesting field; "For the harvest truly is great, but the labourers are few." A NEW YEAR.

To the individual, to the family, and to the church, the advent of a new year ought to be an occasion of deep thought and serious reflection. The thousand tongues which proclaim the dawn of the New Year, are, if rightly interpreted, a thousand monitors, announcing one of the most solemn truths which can fall on mortal ears. A New Year! What does the announcement mean? A New Year! Why, is it possible that the old year is dethroned and dead? Yes, not only possible, but actual. The old year is dead, and buried under the shadows of the past, in the great cemetery Time, and a new year is on the throne. How big with import is the announcement! It has lessons for God's people, and lessons for men of the world. To the former, it formally announces, that all the opportunities of serving God afforded during the passage of the past year which have been allowed to pass unimproved, are for ever beyond the reach of improvement. With the old year, these opportunities are for ever gone. The departing year has borne them away back across the threshold of the past eternity, and, folding them in his arms, as he drew around him the dark drapery of an eternal night, he announced, with his expiring breath, no mortal shall bring back again to the theatre of action the captor or his captives. From those arms no mortal hand may reclaim or recover the lost opportunities of the past year. They are beyond, for ever beyond, all possibility of recall or improvement. They cannot be approached through the avenue of like opportunities which the new year may generously tender in their stead. Like opportunities the new year may offer, but the same it cannot bestow. The new opportunities may be seized and improved as they pass, but the labours they demand, or the sacrifices they enjoin, can never be overdone by the performer. When he has done all, and done his best, to meet the claims of the passing hour, he must acknowledge that he has been an unprofitable servant. It is, therefore, an impossibility to make amends for the negligence of the past year by the diligence of the present.

There is, however, one avenue through which the negligence of the old year may be reached. Though we cannot implement the defective service of the past by extra efforts in the present, we may, through the door of repentance, affect the fearful record that is on the book of God's remembrance against us. Our tears cannot blot that record out, nor our repentance counterbalance our guilt, but we may, by drawing nigh to the mercy-seat in the spirit of true repentance, secure the application of that atoning blood which cleanseth us from all sin. That blood alone can erase the record of omission and commission which is treasured up against us in the annals of the departed year. The hand that was nailed on Calvary is the only hand that can draw aside the curtains of the past, and wrest from its custody that account on which it has set its dark and ominous seal. Oh, let us invoke the interposition of that hand, ere the sentence goes forth, and the record be placed beyond the reach of erasure.

Prominent among the sins enumerated on that record stands the sin of illiberality to the cause of Christ. It is the great sin of the church in the present day. Professing Christians do not give to this greatest, noblest of all causes, the amount claimed for it by the Master. The fact is, that there is scarcely an interest, domestic, social, or national, to which the individual church-member gives as little. With a large number of our people, the cause of the Redeemer is the least cause and the last cause. How few there are who take as much thought for the interests of the kingdom of Christ as they do in respect to what they shall eat, and what they shall drink, and wherewithal they shall be clothed! These merely incidental considerations, which should receive attention only as subordinate interests, are elevated into the place which the affairs of the Redeemer's kingdom should hold in the hearts and thoughts of Christ's people. To this there are many honourable exceptions; but the church, as a whole, is very far from grasping the great idea of giving to the cause of the Saviour. She does not give as she ought to give. She does not give in proportion as God has prospered her members. Of this sin the church has to repent, or God will chasten her. The church that stands in view of the harvest-field in these last days, and makes God's judgments for past unfaithfulness an excuse for further sin, is incurring great guilt, and will be made to feel the divine displeasure. For past delinquencies we cannot atone, but we may repent, and seek forgiveness, and resolving upon increased efforts and renewed sacrifices enter upon the New Year. In respect to giving, beloved reader, may we inquire what the record is to be? Will it be $1000 for luxuries and $100 for Christ? Will it be $10 for the current news, and $1 for the great causes of Missions, Publication and Education? Look over the record of the past year, and let its blanks, or its defective contributions, awaken in thy heart the high resolve, that this new year shall witness no blanks, and bear no testimony against thee for stinted liberality.

IMPORTANT SYNODICAL ACTION ON THE SUBJECT OF SYSTEMATIC BENEFICENCE.

Among the many indications of good-will entertained by God toward our church and country, in these days of darkness, the general awakening of His people to a sense of their past unfaithfulness, as stewards of the wealth, which a beneficent Father has lavished upon them, is certainly not the least encouraging. When the Church repents of her sins, we may expect that the divine displeasure, revealed against her because of them, will be turned away, and the divine love, which has yearned over her during her subjection to the rod, will again flow forth, in communications of grace and strength, to qualify her for the discharge of her high commission as the light of the world.

As proof of the church's repentance and endeavour, after new obedience, the following Report on the subject of Systematic Beneficence, adopted by the Synod of St. Paul, at their last meeting, is peculiarly significant. The Synod of St. Paul, as our readers are aware, consists of the Presbyteries of St. Paul, Chippewa, Lake Superior, and Owatonna. Is it not a most significant fact that these Presbyteries, standing, as they do, on the very frontier of civilization, have, during the past year, given to the Boards of our church double the amount contributed by them during the previous year? If, notwithstanding the alarms and distractions incident to the times, and the poverty inseparable from frontier life, these brethren have abounded above the beneficence of the past, so as actually to double their contributions, surely the churches of the East may also put into the treasury of the Lord double the amount of their former annual benefactions. If the Synod, which, of all our Synods, might have sought an excuse in her poverty and affliction, has discovered in her poverty and trials reasons for repenting of past parsimony, and arguments for increased liberality, may we not hope that her sister Synods may be stimulated by her noble example, and blush to plead the national calamities as an apology for retrenchment in their contributions to the cause of Christ.

Report on Systematic Beneficence.

The following Report on Systematic Beneficence was presented by Rev. W. Speer, in behalf of the committee on that subject, and unanimously adopted by Synod, with a view to its circulation among our churches:

"This Synod feels deeply grateful to God, the Author of all good in heart and in practice, for the manifest increase of the spirit of holy charity and beneficence in our churches, as illustrated in the contribution to the Boards of the church, during the past year, of double the amount of money that was given during the previous year.

"The duty of entire consecration of, not only themselves and their offspring, but also of their property, is one we would affectionately and urgently present at this time for special consideration, prayer, and action, on the part of the professed followers of Christ.

"'The judgments of the Lord, (suggests an old writer,) are a good index to our sins.' It becomes us, then, to mark and learn this as the chief lesson from the pouring out of hundreds of millions of our money like water, and the life-blood of tens of thousands of our sons. God's law is very plain on this subject. The demand for the tithe of our increase is nearly as old as that for the seventh of our time, and it is based on the same important principles of God's government over us. Abraham, the father of them that believe, rendered to Melchizedek, the great primitive type of our Divine High Priest, 'the tenth part of all.' (Heb. vii. 2.) It was a deep expression of the faith, the sincerity and the gratitude of the patriarch who wrestled with the Angel of the covenant and prevailed: 'and of all that Thou shalt give me I will surely give the tenth unto Thee.' (Gen. xxviii. 22.) In many heathen countries the word 'tithe' is found in their ancient writings; they universally count by decimals, and reckon the number 'ten' to be specially sacred; and they acknowledge the primeval claim of 'a tenth' of the fruits of their labour for religious objects, just as they do the institution of sacrifices, and hand it down in company with legends of the creation and the deluge. This Divine claim was re-enforced under the Levitical Dispensation, and made a conspicuous feature of it, that Israel might be a pattern to all other lands; nor is the obligation of this claim nullified under the New Dispensation, any more than the necessity of a sacrifice for sin is nullified. It was made imperative by numerous and solemn precepts, warnings, and judgments; particularly as the carnality and worldliness of the nation became more offensive to God in the times of the later prophets. (Mal. iii. 8–10.)

"So in the New Testament. Jesus commands us to freely give. He declares it is more blessed to give than to receive. He even made Himself poor as an ensample. The first Christians illustrated the reality of their profession in their self-denial and charities. Nay, more than this, covetousness is presented, under this Dispensation, as the special sin and offence before God representative of, and equivalent to idolatry itself, as it is exhibited in its nature, its evils, and its punishment, under the Old Dispensation. (Col. iii. 5; Eph. v. 5.)

"The amassing and seclusion of the wealth of the Church has dammed up and obstructed the flow of the waters of life, re-opened in the Great Reformation, which would otherwise before now, as during the first three centuries of the Church, have filled and renewed the earth. It has made Christians sensual in their desires and tastes, and so has cursed families and nations with intemperance, licentiousness, and many kindred destroying plagues. It has been the darling sin of America; the reproach of the Christian profession in this land; the ruin of the hopes, the character, and the souls, of multitudes that started fair as Christians, even of ministers. It sears the conscience. It hardens the heart. It 'eats, as it were, fire,' in the memory. It leaves the child of God in the Judgment Day, not with an edifice of gold, silver, precious stones, that will abide its trying fire; but with wood, hay, stubble, that are consumed. (1 Cor. iii. 12; Mat. vi. 19.) He enters heaven like a pauper and a prodigal, where he should come with welcome and rejoicing. This is the sin that is now hanging like a fetter on the limbs of the several Boards of our beloved branch of the church. It is withholding the tidings of salvation, in an age when the art of printing, the means of transportation, and other instrumentalities, are favourable to an unprecedented degree, from millions of our countrymen, from hundreds of millions of pagans, Mohammedans, and Romanists, who are claimants, as immortal responsible fellow-men, and who will hold us to account in the Great Day.

"This Synod, then, does most affectionately and importunately entreat and urge churches, ministers, elders, communicants, the teachers of Sabbath-schools and the young, and others who exert an influence over the present and rising generation, to do all in their power, by precept, by example, by prayer, to instil the duty of whole consecration to God in the matter of property, and of paying to the Lord that systematic share, at least, which he claims, and as much more as the love to Christ Jesus, and sympathy with the needy and the perishing, may prompt. We suggest, especially, the adoption of the apostolic rule, designed, evidently, to be universal in the church, given by Paul to the churches at Corinth, and Galatia: 'Upon the first day of the week, let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come.' (1 Cor. xvi. 2.)

"The requirement here is, that every Christian shall keep a careful account of his or her income, wages, or salary, and shall confess God to be the giver, and use it for his glory, by setting apart, at the close of each week, a regular proportion, or share of it, as a sacred fund, from which judiciously and prayerfully to divide among the several religious claims that may be presented from the pulpit on the Sabbath, or that may otherwise demand our aid as the servants of God.

"Here is a rule for our employment of property in God's service that it is very important for us to observe. It is of divine appointment. It is designed to honour Christ, whose 'day,' as Creator, and Redeemer, and final Judge, as the Lord of life and all its blessings, is to be honoured by gifts and obligations to him. It glorifies God, by directing the mind and heart upwards to Him who has 'prospered' us with much or little in temporal things, as he judges best for his glory, our souls' good, and our influence around us. It exalts the Sabbath to be a glorious and perpetual festival, worthy of those that were its Levitical types. It proves the sincerity of our worship; we offer not burnt-offerings without cost (1 Chron. xxi. 24.) It fulfils the commandment of God, 'None shall appear before me empty.' (Ex. xxxiv. 20. Deut. xvi. 16.) It promotes economy, accuracy, and diligence, in our worldly business. It procures blessings from heaven upon our households. (Job i. 5.) It gives simplicity, efficiency, and success, to the practical working of the church, and avoids unequal, irregular, stinted, and vexatious 'gatherings' This plan is what is most urgently and earnestly pressed upon your consideration by the General Assembly of our church, in order that we may not withhold the gospel from the weaker and more destitute portions of our own land, and that we may send it abroad to the great empires and nations now eagerly stretching their hands to greet the advancing beams of the glorious Sun of Righteousness. The adoption of the rule of systematic consecration to God's use of the share he claims, is as practicable in America as it was in Judea. Your soul's peace, your eternal welfare, your recompense at the hands of the Lord Jesus, demand your sincere, prayerful consideration of this subject.

"Brethren, sisters, in Christ Jesus! fellow-labourers in his cause, fellow-heirs of the crowns that await those that are faithful! we beseech you, give earnest heed to this matter."

AN ACT WORTHY OF RECORD.

The following note from one of our pastors, in reference to a candidate recently under the care of the Board, will explain itself. We deem it but due to the cause of ministerial education to chronicle the deed. Verily the youth over whose education this Board has been appointed to watch, are worthy of the sustentation and prayers of the church.

Dear Sir—I have just received of J. M., who for a short time was a beneficiary of the Board of Education, under the care of White Water Presbytery, but failed to prosecute his studies—the sum of $20, being part of the moneys he is under obligations to refund to the Board. He is now in the army, and from his first payment has wisely and justly begun restitution. I hope he may refund all in due time. If you are making payments in our Presbytery, draw upon me for this amount, ($20,) or order the same at your pleasure.

Yours, D. M.

[This list of dates will be of interest to the relatives or the missionaries, and to other persons, as showing when their missionary friends were heard from. As a general remark, the health and usual engagements of our missionary brethren at these dates may be regarded as not marked by any material change, unless specified in the notices given below.]

DEATH OF DR. CAMPBELL.

It is with great regret we have to record the death of the Rev. James R. Campbell, D. D., of Saharunpur, at Landour, India, on the 18th of September. His illness was a gangrenous affection of one of his feet, which caused extreme suffering; but he was enabled to bear his suffering with patience, and he departed this life in the blessed hope of immortality. He was in the sixty-second year of his age, having been a missionary in India over twenty-six years. He leaves a widow, two sons and three daughters, who will receive the warm sympathy of many friends Dr. Campbell was a minister of the Reformed Presbyterian Church. As a missionary of the Board, he was greatly esteemed by his brethren of the Lodiana Mission, and other friends in India, as well as by a large number of Christian friends in this country. His death is a great loss to the mission. He was a laborious, energetic, faithful labourer in the vineyard, and one greatly useful in his work. We mourn over his death, but we would feel grateful to God for the grace manifested in his life and labours during so many years. It is hoped that a suitable memoir of him will be published.

ADMISSIONS TO THE CHURCH.

Mr. Walsh reports the admission of two persons on examination to the church at Allahabad, on the 28th of September; Mr. Blackford, of two Portuguese men at Rio de Janeiro, on the 5th of October; and Mr. James speaks of "several conversions" at Monrovia, where special religious services were in progress when his letter was written. These services were marked by the presence of the Holy Spirit,—between thirty and forty persons attended an inquiry-meeting. Mr. Mackey mentions their expectation to baptize "two or more" hopeful converts at their next communion at Corisco, and Mr. Rankin speaks of "not a few serious inquirers" at Ningpo, some of whom the brethren hoped soon to baptize.

MISSION IN NEW GRANADA.

The missionary work in this country has been greatly hindered by the civil war, and our brethren have become much discouraged at the prospect before them. They are placed in a singularly hard field of labour, and much need to be remembered in the prayers of the churches. The favourable accounts of the success of the liberals, which have reached us through the newspapers, do not seem to have been known at Bogota, when Mr. McLaren wrote.

"JUDGMENTS IN THE EARTH."

Besides the afflicting state of public affairs in New Granada, the letters of this month report the continued excesses of the rebels in China, causing great loss of life. A raid on Sanpoh, in the neighbourhood of Ningpo, by a party of rebels, it was feared, had carried much distress into the little Christian community in that district, but full particulars had not reached Ningpo. Dr. Hepburn speaks of the measles and cholera as prevailing over the whole empire of Japan. "In the course of fifty-six days," he adds, "from the 17th of June to the 11th of August, 73,158 persons died in Yedo alone." Our prayer should be offered, that, in such times, man may learn righteousness.

MOVEMENTS OF MISSIONARIES.

On the 1st of December, the Rev. David Thompson sailed from this port in the ship Belle of the West, for Shanghai, on his way to join the mission in Japan. Mr. Thompson is a member of the Presbytery of Ohio. About the same time, the Rev. James H. Amos and his wife sailed from Baltimore, in the ship Mary Stevens, on their return to Liberia. We ask the prayers of our readers on behalf of these missionaries.

The Rev. D. D. Green and his wife have returned to Ningpo, but we regret to learn that they were called, by death, to part with their only child, while in Shantung. The Rev. W. A. P. Martin, D. D. and his family will remain, for the present, at Shanghai, where his services are greatly needed in connection with the Press, especially since the lamented death of Dr. Culbertson.

The Rev. R. H. Nassau, M. D., was married at Evangasimba, Corisco, on the 17th of September, to Miss Mary C. Latta—both of the Corisco mission.

"WEEK OF PRAYER," 1863.

The last General Assembly adopted the following minute:

"Resolved, That the churches under the care of this General Assembly be requested to observe the week from the 4th to the 10th of January inclusive, as a season of special prayer for the prosperity of the work of Christian missions throughout the world."

THE YEAR 1862,

As a missionary year, has witnessed the severity and the goodness of God. His judgments fall heavily on some of the nations, and especially on our own beloved country. Deeply do we mourn also, over the heavy losses of such men as Campbell, Clemens, Culbertson, and Gayley—choice and noble missionaries, who have been called away in the midst of their usefulness, and three of them in the prime of their days. We can hardly help feeling discouraged, moreover, at the financial difficulties of our work in such times as these; and it is afflicting to see brethren kept at home for want of funds to send them out. Several are now thus detained. Still more might we feel discouraged, if we dwelt upon our want of faith in God, love to his cause, compassion for the perishing souls of men—our low views, our feeble hopes, our inactive, and too often our self-indulging habits, as workers in our Lord's vineyard.

But God is merciful, in Jesus Christ. He is forbearing towards the weakness and unworthiness of his people. He graciously accepts and blesses their poor services, as our columns for the year now ending have abundantly shown. He disposes the hearts of many, by his rich grace, to devote their pecuniary means, in liberal measure to his cause. He makes some of our brethren willing to offer themselves as missionaries. He keeps from falling the men now in the field, prospers their work, and takes some of them to himself supporting them by a good hope through grace. Our blessed Lord has all power in heaven and in earth, and this power he puts forth, in the midst of the shaking of the nations by his providence, for the gathering in of his elect people. The cause of missions is his cause. We must not doubt as to its success; we need not fear that the overturning of the nations will at all prevent the earth from becoming full of the knowledge of the Lord, even as the waters cover the sea.

We must go forward in this work. Let it be with more humility, more of the spirit of prayer, feeling deeply our dependence and our unworthiness, but yet strong in faith, giving glory to God. We do not labour in vain. The Lord is on our side. If there is any work under the sun that he regards with favour, it is this work of Christian missions.

A PLEA FOR MORE MEN IN INDIA.

Last month a statement of the condition of "the missionary work" was published by the Executive Committee. In that statement occurs the following significant sentence: "The inability of the Board to send out several approved brethren, who are under appointment as missionaries, and whose services are greatly needed in different fields, must be classed as one of the main discouragements of the last six months." This statement contains a reference to the death of one missionary and the return of two others. After that statement was written, the sad intelligence of the death of two others was received in time to publish it by the side of the statement itself. Now, again, the church has received the mournful news of the death of another, Dr. Campbell, of Saharunpur, India, who has for more than a quarter of a century laboured in this blessed work. These facts show how greatly the services of reinforcements are needed. And the statement of the Board announces to the church that the Lord of the harvest has heard her prayers for more labourers, and has raised them up, qualified them for the work, and disposed them to enter upon it.

The practical question now before the church is, Will she stand by her prayers, which the Lord has so graciously answered, and send forth these labourers to those destitute, needy fields, or will she take back her prayers? When God has taken her at her word, and granted her request to furnish the labourers needed, not to send them forth is practically to throw back on the Lord the blessing he has given, take back her prayers, and say, We do not want any more labourers to send forth, though we did ask for more. We now appeal to the church for her decision. Will she give the means necessary to send forth these labourers, or will she take back her prayers? Shall we thank the Lord for this answer to our prayers, and send the labourers to their work, or shall we return them to the Lord, saying, We have enough? And will she, to be consistent, now cease praying the Lord of the harvest that he would send forth labourers into his harvest?

But to get some definite views of the greatness of the need of more labourers, not to enlarge the field of our operations, but simply to save us from the necessity of contracting it, and to enable us to cultivate it efficiently, let us glance at the state of the mission last bereaved, the Lodiana mission, from which came forth the invitation to a week of universal prayer, which has proved so rich and precious a blessing to many parts of the world. That mission embraces eleven stations, stretching along the foot of the Himmalaya mountains from the river Ganges to the mouth of the Khaibar Pass, west of the river Indus. Of these stations, one is supported by the Rajah of Kapurthala, one is occupied by a native ordained minister, and one is a hill-station, usually occupied by a missionary who requires such a station on account of either his own health or that of his family. To none of these is it desirable, as long as the present occupants are able to do the work they have on hand, to send any reinforcements. There remain then eight stations, with only ten missionaries and one ordained native minister. If we adopt the plan of the Master of the vineyard, each station should have at least two men, which would give those eight stations sixteen instead of ten foreign missionaries. And where there are schools, churches, or printing-presses, or the preparation of tracts and translation of Scriptures to be carried on, less than two men cannot do the work without great risk of health and life. But to guard against the risk of breaking in upon their operations by the loss of health or life, there should be a small corps de reserve, so that as soon as a breach should be made anywhere along the line, there may be one ready to fill it up. Now of those eight stations, four are so large that they would furnish abundant work for this corps de reserve, of such a nature as to make them fully efficient while there, and yet not so fix them there that any permanent work would suffer by their being removed to a more needy point. Let two of these stations have four men each, and two of them three each; this would give for the whole mission of eleven stations a band of six men who could at any time be drawn upon to take the place of any one who might be temporarily or permanently withdrawn from the work. This would give to those eight stations twenty-two instead of ten men as at present.

Our faith is not strong enough to expect the church to come up at once to the full measure of the necessities of this and other missions. But our business is to put the case fully and fairly before the church—to show what is needed, and do everything in our power to supply that great and pressing necessity. It should be remembered the last new missionary who has been sent to that mission reached his field of labour about seven years ago. Since that time the Lord has so blessed our work as to add three stations to the mission. An increasing band of native school teachers and other assistants is being trained and employed in the work. All these successes call for more labour, and consequently an increased number of labourers. And unless reinforcements are sent out, the brethren there must submit to the painful necessity of breaking up some of their operations, or risk health and life in a vain struggle to maintain them in their integrity and efficiency until the long-desired and oft-solicited reinforcements come to their relief.

When God commanded his church to "arise and shine," he promised that "the Gentiles should come to her light, and kings to the brightness of her rising." And has he not been faithful to his promise? Has he not given us a band of between two hundred and three hundred native communicants in our churches, besides all whom he has already called to mingle their voices with the saints in light, as they sing unto Him who washed them from their sins in his own blood, and has made them kings and priests unto God? From this number we have in both the India missions two native ordained ministers, and fifty-eight school teachers, and other native assistants in the work. Besides these there are between four and five thousand scholars in our mission schools, receiving instruction in the way of eternal life. Then the Rajah of Kapurthala has taken from the funds of the Board three men, whom he supports entirely, and all their operations, but the Board has never been able to send out others to take their places on the funds of the church.

This state of things produces serious embarrassments to the missionary work. It exposes the health and lives of the missionaries to increased danger from over-exertion, and neglect of the rest and relaxation demanded by exhausted nature, in their anxiety and effort to save the operations of the mission from breaking up. And when they see their brethren one after another fall, and, notwithstanding all their efforts, their operations broken up, and no sign of new missionaries coming to their relief, they would need something more than apostolic faith to keep them from sometimes sinking down under a sense of hopeless, helpless discouragement.

It operates on the candidates for the ministry very unfavourably. Already are they beginning to say, There is no use in our turning our attention to the missionary work; the Board cannot send us out. And ere long this will react on the churches, who will say, There is now no need of more funds, for there are no missionaries to send.

Under all these circumstances, and in view of all these considerations, what are the prospects of that afflicted mission? We have shown that twelve men are needed fully to man all its stations, while only two returned missionaries are expecting to go out during the coming year. If but four new men could go out with them, they would fill up the vacancies already existing, but would not furnish the reserve needed for future emergencies.

Another consideration ever to be borne in mind, is, that before new missionaries are prepared fully to enter on their work they need some time to study the language. Now suppose a few young men could be sent out with the returning missionaries; they would enjoy an opportunity seldom enjoyed of studying the language on the voyage; and yet a year or more must elapse before they can reach their station—probably two years in all from this time before they could get settled, and prepared in the language to render effective aid to that broken and sinking mission. Will the men offer themselves, and will the church send them out, to aid those who are bearing the heat and burthen of the day, before they finally sink under it, or will the churches take back their prayers that the Lord of the harvest would send forth labourers into his harvest?

MISSION IN SIAM.

Interesting Notices.

Esther's Marriage—Her Class of Children.

We have been favoured with the perusal of a letter written by a missionary lady at Bangkok, to a friend in New York, dated July 17, 1862. This letter was written with no reference to its being printed, but some extracts may be taken from it, which, we are sure, will be read with interest.

Esther, the native girl who was with me in America, was married in May to a young Siamo-Chinese, who has for a number of years been in Dr. House's charge. He makes no pretensions to being a Christian; but I think, notwithstanding, he is swayed, to a considerable extent, by Christian principles. He has now become teacher of the boys in the boarding-school, and does very well, and we hope he will be contented to remain. He has had a great desire to go out among foreign merchants, where, with his knowledge of English, he might receive a large salary. Dr. House's influence, thus far, has kept him. Esther, for some months past, has had a class of eight or ten children, teaching them to read Siamese. They are children of poor people around us—the most of them girls, with two or three little boys hardly old enough to attend the boys' school. They come to our house, where I can keep an eye to them; and they have been, as yet, no expense to the mission.

A Sabbath Morning Class of Women.

On Sabbath morning I have quite a large class of women from our immediate vicinity. They could not read, and had no knowledge of their own religion, except as it is carried out in custom. Fancy twelve or fourteen dark Siamese women, some with their infants they cannot well leave behind, seated on a matted floor around me. I began by telling them of the great God, who made all things, and of his commandments. Then I asked them questions upon what I had said, repeating the answer, and requiring them to follow me. At first, when they undertook to answer, it so excited their mirth, they laughed outright; but gradually they have become quite orderly, and most of them now can give an account of the creation and fall of man, and can repeat the ten commandments, and can tell of the Saviour Jesus who died for us. Four of them have been induced to learn to read, and Mrs. House is giving them daily lessons. When these can read well, we hope that others will try, until all can read their own language—poor, ignorant, dark-minded, degraded women,—but specimens of thousands and thousands in Siam. In the school are eighteen boys—and Mrs. House has three girls whom she supports and to whom she gives daily instruction.

Instruction in English in the Palace.

Years ago, I believe I wrote to Mr. —— about the closing up of the missionary ladies' teaching in the King's palace. Well, since then the King has spoken of his desire to have English taught; and finally, some months ago, he advertised in Singapore for a teacher for his Palace. A widow lady, who was teaching at Singapore, accepted the offer, and came on. She, with her boy about five years of age, have a house near the Prime Minister, and she goes daily, Sabbath excepted, to teach the royal children, with some of their mothers. She is restricted to teach English alone, and is forbidden to teach anything of the Christian religion. This, in one sense, I think, is encouraging, as showing that the King has not all confidence in the strength of the Mountain of Buddhism. At the earnest request of some of the ladies, Mrs. L—— invited me to accompany her one day to the palace. Some time before the King had invited Mr. M—— to bring me with the children to visit the ladies, so I accepted the invitation of Mrs. L——, and went. I found three of our old pupils in English. They expressed great joy at seeing me, and gave me strong invitations to come again with my children. Mrs. L—— makes no pretensions to have come for any religious purpose. Still, I do not think she is altogether devoid of religious interest, and I do have hope that she is one link in the chain for bringing about great good. To all appearance, the King's pride scorns the religion of Jesus, and he prides himself in the pure Buddhistic philosophy. . . .

Will the Siamese reject the Gospel much longer?

I cannot but feel that if the Siamese reject the offers of the gospel much longer, God will not suffer their nation to continue. It is thought, even now, that the French have an eye upon Siam, and that the English are keeping as keen an eye on every movement of the French.

This nation has been an anomaly in the his tory of heathen nations—has it not? For years the missionaries have been brought into immediate contact with the King and principal men in his court. So that they have had every opportunity of knowing the way of life, if they chose to seek it. Knowledge is spreading—mere civilization, (if, indeed, there be any true civilization without Christianity,) is advancing as fast as we could expect or look for. And although at times the "heavens seem as iron, and the earth as brass," in the spiritual world, we must wait for the promises of God to be fulfilled in his own time.

AFRICA—CORISCO MISSION.

MR. NASSAU'S LETTER CONCLUDED.

Return to Corisco—Call at Ilobi.

In the last number of the Record, Mr. Nassau's letter, of August 5th, gave an account of a short voyage to Ukaka, a promontory on the mainland, covered by half-a-dozen of small towns, for the purpose of placing a native Christian Bible reader there. Want of space prevented the insertion of the account of his return voyage, which is here given.

. . . . We left our native missionary with a God-speed, and at 9½ o'clock re-entered the boat. It was a pleasant night; the soft breeze that fanned our faces, filled the sail and rapidly bore us down stream, was refreshing. It was a warmer night than most of those of the dry season. The moon showed us well our way, yet not shining so brightly as to interfere seriously with seeing the phosphorescence that was dashed aside as we hasted toward Large Ilobi. There, as we drew into a quiet little cove, I awoke from a comfortable rest. Landing, we went to Ibia's house, arousing him at 1 A. M. After a few words of welcome, a psalm and a prayer, we lay down to rest. Before lying down, an essay to eat of the food brought from Corisco was successful. Bamboo, even split, is not soft; nor did the addition of two fine large mats—the furnishing of Ibia's hospitality—save my bones from a sense of unrefreshment when daylight awoke me. A very heavy rain was falling, one of the last messengers to remind that the rainy season had but just gone; but when morning prayers were ended, and our company gathered for starting, the rain had ceased. Ibia's sturdy little son, by dint of trotting, kept pace with us as we descended to the landing, accompanied by a number of the Ilobi Christians.

Interview with a former pupil—At home, after a five mile walk.

The boat was detained a little while, that I might see a young girl who had been a pupil at my school, but who had been taken only shortly before by her father, and, amid tears, given as wife to an Ilobi polygamist, whom she hated. She heard brother Mackey and I were on the island, and was coming down to see us. She was not happy. She seemed glad to have her hand in "Pa Nasa's" for a little while, and he was glad to offer a few words of comfort. We were under sail by 6½ o'clock on the morning of Thursday, June 5, and made rapid progress toward Corisco. By a three hours' ride the boat was near the eastern side, but, as usual, was to run down around the south end to reach Evangasimba, when, without any object in view, I uttered the hopeless wish that a canoe would come off and take me ashore. Brother Mackey wished to know what I would do then, for that I would be five miles from Itêndéluker. I told him I would walk ten, rather than endure longer. Then a little pride of endurance made me refuse his offer to turn the boat ashore; but presently finding that himself had set a precedent in precisely similar circumstances several years before, I gladly consented; and landing, we together walked the distance, while the boat was sent around the island. An entertaining walk over some new parts of the island, with several showers to cool us, and a short stoppage at Ugobi and a native town, brought us by 12 o'clock to our doors and the welcome of the ladies whom we had left alone. I was excessively tired, but not sea-sick; foot on solid ground was magic. I think I will try the voyage again.

Respectfully yours,

R. HAMILL NASSAU.

THE LATE REV. M. SIMPSON CULBERTSON, D. D.

Extract from a discourse in commemoration of the Rev. M. S. Culbertson, D. D., preached at Shanghai, August 31st, 1862, at the request of his fellow-missionaries, by the Rev. W. A. P. Martin, D. D.

John vi. 68.—From the animating theme so solemnly enforced by the death of our friend, turn we now to the lesson of his life. It was marked, in a peculiar degree, by the interpositions of Divine Providence; and these it would be instructive to trace with some minuteness, but time forbids. Yet, though we are not at liberty to surrender ourselves to the current, and glide down from the fountain to the ocean, still, there are turning-points whence we may obtain a complete view of the stream. Four of these present themselves prominently in the history of the deceased.

1. The first discloses to us a group of boys, near the banks of the Susquehanna. They have left their sports on the village green, and are listening with breathless interest to the recital of some startling intelligence. The news that Lyman and Munson had been cruelly murdered, and afterwards devoured, by the cannibals of Sumatra, is casting a shadow throughout the land. They listen to the tragic tale; and then, turning to one of their number, whose cheek is embrowned by a dozen summers, they appeal to him, half in defiance and half in dissuasion, "Now, Simpson, you wont be a missionary, will you?"

Already has a presentiment of his future destiny impressed itself on the mind of that thoughtful lad; and this early inclination, which no doubt contributed to determine the course of his subsequent life, he derived, under God, from the influence of a pious mother. In her veins flowed the blood of the royal Stuarts, but none set a lighter value than she on that petty distinction; while by those who knew her it was utterly forgotten in the presence of qualities of a higher origin. She was an active Christian, and in advance of her age, she has the honour of standing as a mother among the fathers of American missions. Listen to this paper, which was treasured by her son as a precious heirloom, though few beyond his immediate family were informed of its existence. It is entitled, "The Female Missionary Society of Dauphin County." It begins with the statement:—"We, members of the above Society, enjoying the gospel ordinances of grace ourselves, feel it our duty to contribute our mites, to aid in the laudable object of propagating the gospel of the Redeemer among those poor savage tribes who are perishing for lack of knowledge." At the foot of the document we have the record that it was "drawn up and put in circulation by Miss Frances Stuart, April, 1810." This was two years before the first missionary left America for a foreign shore.

Not content with forwarding a pecuniary contribution, the author of this paper was earnestly desirous of engaging personally in the missionary work. From this she was providentially debarred; but in lieu of herself she devoted to the cause her first-born son, and from his earliest childhood set that object prominently before his view. No wonder he was known among his comrades as a missionary boy.

2. The scene changes. To the gentle hum of village life succeeds the stirring notes of the drum and bugle. On the heights overlooking the Hudson several hundred young men, arrayed in gay uniform, are learning the art of war. They are the élite of the whole republic, sent up by the several States to be trained for officers in the national military school. Among them are Halleck and McDowell, Magruder and Beauregard—all at present wearing the insignia of Major-Generals, and bearing a leading part in the most momentous war in the annals of modern history. There, too, stands young Culbertson; and what position does he occupy in comparison with these men of military genius? A fact or two will give the answer.

In the progress of his course he was appointed drill-officer, with the title of Captain, and also served for a time as Professor of Mathematics. Fancy the future missionary instructing the leaders of Federal and Confederate armies in the arts of attack and defence, and teaching them the method of calculating the force of projectiles! But there is another fact, still more significant. When two cadets were chosen to be sent to France, at the government expense, to complete their education in the school which produced a Bonaparte, Culbertson was the first selected, and obtained the suffrages of all the electors. What now has become of the prayers of the pious mother? They are not forgotten, either in heaven or on earth. They are working mightily in the bosom of the youth; and he declines the honour of being a national delegate, because he is meditating a far different career.

After completing a full course of four years, while serving as a Lieutenant of Artillery at the cantonment of Plattsburg, he took up the cross, though it was still a year before he laid down the sword. The precise date of his conversion he was never able to fix. Serious in childhood, and circumspect in youth, soon after his entrance into the West Point Academy he earned for himself the beatitude of the peace-maker. Engaged to act as second for the now famous General Magruder, in an affair of honour, he adjusted the difficulty, and prevented a probably fatal encounter. From the date of his public profession he displayed the character of an active Christian. In evidence of this, we may cite the letter of a pious subordinate. "It has been a source of peculiar gratification to me, to see you, my much esteemed officer, take so active a part in the means God has appointed on earth for the promotion of holiness. Such a spirit in an officer, seems to have more effect upon the minds of men in general, than it has among men in private life. . . . . I think, if you properly knew the extent of influence that you hold in this regiment, it would stimulate you to use all your faculties, affections, and powers, to the winning of souls to Christ. Your Christian deportment has gained the esteem of—I was going to say—all the soldiers in the garrison; for, go where I will in this place, the meekness of Lieutenant C., and the kindness of Captain B., is the theme of their conversation."

3. The scene shifts to the venerable shades of Princeton; and in the hands of the student the Hebrew Bible and Greek Testament replace the weapons of a carnal warfare. The youthful soldier is preparing to unsheath the sword of the Spirit in a pagan land.

While there, he was regarded, as I have been informed by his venerable instructor, Dr. Hodge, as among the foremost members of the institution; and when, at the close of his three years' curriculum, he, with three others of his class, embarked for a foreign mission, another of the Professors, whose literary remains have since been published, singled him out, and wrote of him in these terms: "One of the four, Culbertson, was an army officer, and highly honoured at West Point—chosen to go on some military mission to France." (Dr. J. W. Alexander.)

Who will venture to assert, that in declining that mission, and choosing this, he was descending to a lower sphere? In the sight of men his pathway may indeed appear comparatively obscure; but in the eyes of those angels who hailed the advent and shouted the ascension of our Redeemer, how different the estimate! To them the career of the military hero is as the red blaze of the passing meteor—too often, alas! succeeded by the blackness of darkness for ever; while that of the Christian herald is a galaxy resplendent with the glories of immortal souls. Since the mission of the Son of God, our calling needs no other name to make it respectable.

The achievements of Carey and Marshman, Moffat and Livingstone, Morrison, Medhurst, and Bridgeman, and a host of others, whose contributions to science and literature are acknowledged by the learned Societies of Europe and America, need not be mentioned, unless to repel a malicious insinuation. Nor should we allude to the Cambridge wranglership of Henry Martyn, the Oxford fellowship of Raglan, the nodding plumes of Vanderkemp, or the flattering prospects of Culbertson, but for the benefit of those who can not, or will not, perceive any evidence of sincerity, except in the renunciation of worldly advantages. By appealing to such instances, we may silence their objections; but, my brethren, we cannot expect that any who do not cherish a cordial sympathy with our work, will be able to appreciate the true dignity of our position. How he appreciated it, whose finished course we are now endeavouring to commemorate, we all know. Only two days before his decease, when I alluded to the probability that he might have had a place among the prominent generals of the day if he had persisted in the profession of arms—"There is not one among them," he exclaimed, "with whom I would be willing to exchange. I tell you, there is not a post of influence in the whole world like that of him who gives the gospel to China."

4. This brings us to the last point of view—his character as a missionary. It would be superfluous for me to draw his portrait—you remember him—you see him, as a few days ago his manly form moved among you, his locks sprinkled with the light of a coming eternity, though his eye was not dim, nor his natural force abated. You see him as he sat in his quiet laboratory, with a native scribe on either hand busily engaged in tracing from his dictation those lines of holy writ, which the revolving cylinder shall multiply by thousands, while wind and steam unite their forces in spreading them to the remotest parts of the empire. You see him, as he stood in this desk one month ago, and dispensed, with unusual solemnity, those sacred emblems of which he was to partake no more, until he should drink the new wine in the kingdom of his Father. You see him in the familiar intercourse of friendship, in the endeared relations of his own family circle, combining dignity and tenderness in the happiest union. What he was as a husband, none but the widow can know, and what he was as a father, none but these orphan children can fully appreciate. But this is sacred ground, and I forbear.

Of the excellencies of his character I need offer no delineation; they are attested, with one voice, by all the Protestant missionaries, of all ecclesiastical connections, in this community. "Our devoted brother," they say, in a paper adopted a few days after his death, "was a man of 'a meek and quiet spirit,' and remarkable for his singleness of aim, and straightforward energy and industry in his Master's service; he resigned a commission in the armies of his country, to become a missionary to the heathen. He set before himself the highest ends, and strove, both by preaching and example, to glorify God in the salvation of his fellow-men. He laboured, in connection with the late Dr. Bridgeman, for several years, with assiduity and perseverance, in preparing a revised translation of the sacred Scriptures in the Chinese language, a labour of love which he regarded as the great work of his life, and it was a source of especial consolation to him, just before his departure, that God had enabled him to complete it. We recognise in these traits of character, and this Christian life, the devoted missionary, whose example is worthy of our imitation.

"Resolved, therefore, that we will cherish with affectionate remembrance the character and course of our departed brother."

Happy the grave which is crowned with such a tribute! There is but one eulogium which a good man may covet more earnestly, and that is the "Well done, good and faithful," pronounced by his Lord and Saviour. This blissful welcome has no doubt greeted those ears, which are now deaf to the voice of human applause.

There let us leave him, bending before the throne of God, and drinking in the fulness of that "eternal life," the words of which he delighted in dispensing to the perishing heathen.

MORE BOOKS AMONG SOLDIERS.

Cairo, Ill., November, 1862.

Rev. Dr. Schenck, Cor. Sec.

My Dear Sir—Resuming my work among our soldiers, I find Cairo but little changed during my absence. Everywhere around me are the same indications of the fearful struggle through which we are passing, and the same demoralizing effects of war. The city is crowded with people beyond its capacity to accommodate them; the morning and evening gun sends forth its reverberating thunders; huge cannon are still piled upon the wharf; soldiers come and go by thousands; coffined remains of the gallant dead are piled before the express office; and, what is sadder still, there is the same rampant wickedness, the same wanton desecration of the Sabbath, calling upon all, who have named the name of Christ, to lift up his standard, and endeavour to roll back this swelling and rushing tide from hell.

Yet I find our great army work as interesting and encouraging as ever. There are the same willingness to receive and read our books and tracts, and the same courteous and cordial reception on the part of both officers and men. I have been but two days in Cairo, yet already nine hundred Soldiers' Pocket Books, and several thousand pages of tracts, sheet music, and hospital cards, have gone forth on their silent yet beneficent errands. Good seed has been sown, and, followed by earnest prayer, it will bear its precious spiritual fruits. Could those who have contributed to this good cause but hear the expressions of thankfulness that fall from the lips of our soldiers, when told that our books, and tracts, and music, are not for sale, but for gratuitous distribution, they would surely thank God, and take courage. "If I only had money, I would cheerfully pay you five times the price of these," has been said to me time and again, during the past two days: and said, with earnest emphasis, "Ah, here's the old Visitor again!" has, during the last forty-eight hours, been the frequent exclamation of young men who have entered the army from our Sabbath schools, as they have caught sight of its familiar features, and been thus reminded of the Sabbath-school at home. To all such, I endeavour to address a few words of kind and earnest admonition and encouragement, which shall recall the lessons of days gone by.

Perhaps none of our publications is received more gladly than is our sheet music by such as can sing. Generally, they have nothing of the kind with them. Yesterday, while labouring in one of the regiments now stationed here, a company of forty or fifty soldiers gathered around me. I talked to them as best I could, and they listened with respectful attention. Finding that many of them were singers, I placed in their hands an assortment of our sheet music, and then, just as the sun was setting in a cloudless sky, they sang, with full, rich voices, "Happy Day," "A Pilgrim and a Stranger," and "Say, Brothers, will you meet us?" till the attention of nearly every man in camp was arrested. "Well, this is nice—this will give us many pleasant hours," said they, as they retired to their quarters, when our meeting was over.

I hear pleasing accounts of the popularity of the Soldier's Pocket-Book, and the good it is accomplishing. One of the first men I met in Cairo was the chaplain of a regiment now stationed at Bolivar, Tennessee, which I partially supplied some time ago. He said he must have his quota, and he received it. As we parted, taking me by the hand, he said to me, "We are of different denominations, but let me say, for your encouragement in your good work, that no book circulated in the army is as popular with the men, and has done as much good, as your Soldier's Pocket-Book." These were indeed cheering words. They are true, too.

Though, because He would have us walk and work by faith, God does not allow us to behold all the results of our labours here, but reserves them for that great day when all the hidden things of time shall be made manifest, and when sower and reaper shall rejoice together, he does, for our encouragement, graciously permit us to see some precious fruits. Yesterday I found two soldiers anxiously inquiring the way of salvation. They evidently saw and felt that they had been great sinners, fearfully guilty before God, and exposed to his wrath and curse. They needed a refuge, and would go to Jesus. They said they would enlist under the banner of the Great Captain of our salvation, and remain his faithful soldiers till their life's end. They were willing, they said, to endure reproaches and hardships like good soldiers of Jesus Christ; by God's grace they would do so, and would pray for the strengthening and enlightening influences of the Spirit. I gave them the "Way of Salvation," and other suitable books and tracts. Neither of them had a Testament, and they did not know of one among their comrades. To one I gave a New Testament, and to the other I gave a Bible. There are circumstances connected with this last gift which make it one of peculiar interest to me. A few Sabbaths since, my only child, a boy of thirteen years, brought from his Sabbath-school his second prize-Bible. He brought it to me, saying, "Father, I do not need this Bible; take it with you, and give it to some poor soldier who needs it, and will be profited by reading it." And so, as a present from the donor, it went to this soldier, across whose path I seemed so providentially thrown. May it be blessed to his spiritual welfare! May his eyes be opened to behold wondrous things out of God's holy law!

Two or three days more, and my work here will probably be done for the present. Then I shall go to the Mound City hospital, and thence, if God so direct, to Columbus and Memphis, at which last place a large army is rapidly assembling. That this work may be sustained by earnest prayers from all who love our Lord Jesus Christ, and by liberal benefactions from all our churches and Sabbath-schools, is my most earnest hope.

DISTRIBUTIONS AMONG SOLDIERS IN KENTUCKY AND TENNESSEE.

The following is a part of a letter from a colporteur of the Board who has been labouring in Kentucky and Tennessee during the past year, for the greater part of his time among the soldiers, especially those of them who are lying sick and wounded in the army hospitals. Will not the readers of the Record help to furnish the Board with means to carry forward more extensively this good work?

Kentucky, November, 1862.

There are not less than 10,000 suffering soldiers here in Kentucky. The return of General Buell's army, the battles near Richmond and Perryville, with 150,000 to 200,000 soldiers upon the soil of this state for months, with Louisville as their great hospital depot, have left among us these thousands of sick and wounded.

At one time and another, I have supplied the hospitals of this city with 150,000 pages of tracts, and but the other day, with 25,000 pages of tracts and 600 volumes. I have just returned from a tour to the hospitals at Lebanon, Perryville, Danville, and Harrodsburg, containing several thousand sick and wounded soldiers. These suffering men were almost wholly destitute of religious reading, the Christian people in these towns having exhausted their stock heretofore to sick soldiers who were among them. I took with me 40,000 pages of tracts, 500 volumes, and 500 Sabbath-school Visitors, to supply these hospitals. The men—surgeons and all—seemed to rejoice at my coming, and the reading matter was received with the greatest eagerness.

I was taken by a Christian friend to see a poor fellow who had expressed deep concern about the salvation of his soul. When we entered the hospital and came in his neighbourhood, he beckoned to us to come to him, and said, with tears in his eyes, that he felt happy, having been able to put his trust in the Saviour. He told us he had been very wicked, but was firmly resolved henceforth to serve God. With his consent, we bowed beside his cot in prayer for a few moments. He then requested us to continue to pray for him, and we bade him adieu, promising him some good reading as soon as he might be able to read, for he had been very ill, though now convalescing.

We turned to the cot just beside this man's, and found that the occupant of it had given earnest concern to all that had been said and done so near him. He was reading one of the prayers in a "Soldier's Pocket book," and had a New Testament upon his pillow. He seemed to be much affected, and acknowledged his personal concern. My friend promised to see him again, and we left the room.

Always in my visits to the hospitals with religious reading, do I find many anxious to talk with me about their souls. Generally, all exhibit a subdued and softened state of feeling, constituting the most affecting, promising, and hopeful field for Christian effort, that has ever made its urgent demands upon this country.

In this field, we are so much run over by great armies, and annoyed and injured by guerilla bands, that we cannot give very much, were our people so disposed. We must appeal to the sympathy of the Christians of the free loyal states for aid in behalf of the suffering men who are now, or may be, in the hospitals in this State and Tennessee—our common fellow-citizens, common soldiers, and common friends.

We have already done a great work in this field, but one wholly inadequate to the large and urgent demands made upon us. We are not able to do more now than supply the hospitals and convalescent barracks with religious reading; and unless a new and higher interest is awakened for this most needy and urgent work, and means freely and promptly furnished, hundreds of our poor soldiers will languish and die in our hospitals without even a silent tract to point to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

Some time since, I was enabled to send a valuable box of religious reading to the soldiers of General George W. Morgan's command, at Cumberland Gap, and herewith I enclose a letter from General Carter, to whose care the box was sent, acknowledging the receipt of the box. How refreshing to find so earnest a Christian in one of our Generals! How encouraging to receive the sympathy and aid of those who command our armies! This much may be truly said of that little army, beleagured, and cut off so long from our other troops, and threatened with starvation or capture—they were not without a good supply of religious reading.

Hoping and praying for the eminent success of our good work, I remain

Yours truly, K.

The letter of General Carter, above referred to, is as follows.

Head-quarters 24th Brigade, Army of the Ohio, Camp near Cumberland Gap, E. Tennessee, July 17, 1862.

My dear Sir—Owing to some unaccountable delay, the books only reached me last week, and on the Sabbath which has just passed, I placed a portion of them in the hands of the chaplains of the 1st and 2d East Tennessee and 49th Indiana regiments for distribution. You may rest assured that I will, most cheerfully, do all in my power towards having those precious pages distributed among our men, with the prayerful hope, that God will bless them to the saving of many souls, and to the glory of his own name.

With many thanks to those who have so considerately remembered the wants of our Union soldiers, I am, my dear sir,

Yours in Christian fellowship,

S. H. CARTER,
Brigadier-General.

OUR BOOKS IN IOWA.

The following is from the chaplain of an Iowa regiment, to whom a box of books had been sent by the Board.

Camp Herron, Davenport, Iowa, Dec., 1862.

Rev. Dr. Schenck:

Dear Sir—The package of books and tracts you so kindly sent me for our regiment came safely to hand. Please accept our sincere thanks. The books have proved very acceptable indeed. "The Soldier's Pocket-Book" is more highly prized than any book I have distributed. It is surely the most excellent book for the soldier I have seen, and its circulation cannot fail to be productive of much good. The reception I have met with in distributing books, and especially the one I have named, has afforded me great pleasure, and encouraged me to hope that much good will result from their perusal. The boys must have some entertainment. They read anything that falls into their hands, and very many of them will play cards if they have nothing to read. On one of my rounds in the barracks with the books, I found in one company four groups playing cards. On reminding them of the sinfulness and unprofitableness of such amusement, they said:—"Well, chaplain, give us something good to read and we will quit the cards." I gave each a copy of the Soldier's Pocket-Book, which they all received with pleasure and thankfulness, and at once commenced reading it, laying aside their cards. Passing that barracks a short time after, I heard singing, and on entering I found all those men singing a hymn in the back part of that book. One of the company told me, that they have spent every evening since in singing those hymns. I, of course, had not enough to supply every man; and all that did not get one have come to my room asking—"Chaplain, if you have any more of those Pocket-Books, I would like to have one?"

But I must close. I write in great haste, and amid the confusion of preparation for the "land of cotton." We have marching orders, and will leave on Tuesday next for Dixie.

Yours truly, T. G. T.

BOARD OF CHURCH EXTENSION.

Corresponding Secretary—Rev. H. I. Coe.

Treasurer—Archibald Gamble, Esq.

No. 88 Market Street, St. Louis, Missouri.

Communications on the subject of Church Extension should be addressed to the Corresponding Secretary, No. 88 Market Street, St. Louis, Mo.

Donations should be sent to Archibald Gamble, Esq., St. Louis, Mo.; or, if more convenient, to J. D. Thorpe, Esq., Cincinnati, Ohio: A. Davidson, Esq., Louisville, Ky.; S. D. Powel, Esq., Treasurer of the Board of Domestic Missions, No. 910 Arch Street, Philadelphia; T. H. Nevin, Esq., Pittsburgh, Pa.; Mr. J. B. Kirtland, Memphis, Tennessee; or to William Rankin, Esq., Treasurer of the Board of Foreign Missions, 23 Centre street, New York.

APPROPRIATIONS FROM THE GENERAL FUND.

No appropriation is made without the recommendation of the Presbytery, or the Church Extension Committee of the Presbytery within whose bounds the church applying for aid is located.

No appropriation is paid until the Board receives a certificate from the Trustees of the church aided, stating that their church lot is properly secured, and that the amount appropriated will complete their house of worship, and leave the whole property free from debt.

Appropriations not called for within two years of the date thereof, are regarded as withdrawn.

CHURCH-BUILDING.

Under the above caption, we find in a late number of the Congregationalist a pointed statement respecting the value of the sanctuary to feeble churches. Substituting the word Presbyterian for Congregational, we can cordially endorse the statement, and make it our own. The writer, the Rev. I. P. Langworthy, Secretary of the American Congregational Union, says:—"No little church is in a way to success until it has a suitable house in which to gain that success. It has not the first element of permanency, nor can it be, in any general way, a power for good in the community where it is located, until it shall have this symbol of permanency, and this centre and home for power. The depletions of our small churches from the calls to arms, which have been so frequent and loud of late, have rendered them—some of them—so weak that they cannot build. Some have given up worship for the present, and many others are reduced to the extremity of either building or disbanding. But the cause of Christ cannot afford the latter alternative. Others began to build in better times, and now must have help, or lose all. The average help to these now more than fifty applicants would not exceed two hundred and fifty dollars. The house once built, and paid for, as our appropriation always pays last bills, puts the church at once in the way to progress, to self-support, and to permanency. It increases the influence, and widens the field of labour of the home missionary more than one hundred per cent., and gives great joy and hope to the few earnest, devoted servants of Christ, who have struggled long and hard to secure such a blessing. These are Congregational churches, and are so of enlightened, unconstrained choice. It is not apparent that this fact should be a bar to the aid they must have, or give up, from the Congregational churches, out of the bosom of which a large proportion of them have gone. These churches are ours, and as such they must look to us for aid. It is not consistent nor Christian for us to say we have adopted other children, and cannot feed and clothe our own. Christ holds us responsible for taking care of those thus allied to us, until they can take care of themselves. And when it shall be well with these churches, they will freely aid us in taking care of all others, as already not a few are doing, which were a little time since as feeble as the feeblest of these that now seek help from our hands."

CHURCH BURNED.

We insert below an account of the burning of one of our churches, to call attention again to the necessity of insuring church edifices. There is a culpable carelessness on the part of many of our churches on this subject. A penny-wise pound-foolish policy, or some superstitious notion, induces not a few to leave their sanctuaries uninsured. Yet the risk to such edifices is always considerable, and the loss usually finds the church unable to rebuild without assistance from abroad. While we sympathize with our brethren at Decatur, we fear they are now suffering from remisness. Five or ten dollars a year will keep up such an insurance on most of our small sanctuaries as will enable the congregation to rebuild without unduly tasking them, even in these war times. A failure to insure operates in the minds of careful men against a church obtaining aid to repair its loss. The account of the fire is as follows:

"The Presbyterian church at Decatur, Indiana, was destroyed by fire, on Sabbath, November 16th. The fire occurred during a sacramental service, the pastor, the Rev. Thomas Elcock, aided by the Rev. W. M. Donaldson, officiating. It was caused, probably, by a defective flue, the roof becoming ignited near the cupola, and beyond the reach of all efforts, through the means at hand. The building was a frame, forty feet by sixty. It cost $2200, and had recently been furnished with a bell costing $175. All is lost!"

STARTLING STATISTICS.

At a recent prayer-meeting in Philadelphia, the subjoined statements were made by one of our ministers. The wealth and consequent contributions of Old-school Presbyterians to our government may be over-estimated, though we are not prepared to say that it is. Undoubtedly the adherents of our church number fully one-twentieth of our population, and they are certainly not below the average in pecuniary ability. From the reports to the last General Assembly, the whole contributions of the church for a year appear to have been $1,710,636, of which only about half-a-million of dollars can be considered as purely benevolent. The expenditures of the government during the same period exceeded $350,000,000, the fair share of which from our people would be over $17,000,000. Hence we expended at least ten dollars for Cæsar to one dollar for Christ. With these prefatory remarks, we ask our readers to ponder the following.

"The Rev. J. H. Baird thought it the duty of every Christian and patriot to inquire why God has a controversy with us. In addition to Sabbath-breaking and pride, he regarded covetousness as prominent among our national sins. Our nation is able to preach the gospel to the world. A few years since he estimated that of one hundred and fifty millions which poured annually into our national treasury, to support the government, one-tenth was paid by Old-school Presbyterians, and yet less than two millions were at that time paid to all the Boards of our church for carrying on their operations. Now we are spending six or seven hundred millions, and have a million of men in the field of battle. To this vast amount our church contributes eighty millions, and yet only gives two millions for benevolent purposes. God is showing as that if we will not use our men and means for his glory, they shall be called for in another and afflictive way. We need to examine ourselves. We have done much, but we should not forget that 'the children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light.'"

FOURTH ANNUAL WEEK OF PRAYER.

The following programme for the services of the Week of Prayer (January 4—11, 1863,) was prepared by the Rev. Mr. Morrison, of India, the original proposer of the observance of the "Week of Prayer." It was adopted by the meeting of 1862, and we republish it to guide the meetings during the week which is at hand.

Sabbath, January 4th.—Sermons on Prayer. Its scriptural place in the work of subduing the world to Christ. Psalm ii. 8. Prayer for the outpouring of the Spirit of grace, and of supplications upon all God's people throughout the world, so that this concert for prayer may literally become universal. Zech. xii. 10. And for a special blessing on the services of these eight days.

Monday, January 5th.—Humiliation and confession of sins, on account of which the blessing has been hitherto, in so great a degree, withheld—want of faith in the promises of God, and consequent neglect of, or sluggishness in, prayer and effort for the conversion of sinners; inconsistencies of Christian character and conduct, and consequent failure to become the salt of the earth, the light of the world; and positive evil influences of such examples.

Tuesday, January 6th.—Prayer for kings and others in authority. 1 Tim. ii. 1, 2; 2 Sam. xxiii. 3. That they may, in the true scriptural sense of the term, be nursing fathers and nursing mothers to the church. Isaiah lxix. 23.

Wednesday, January 7th.—That God would overrule all the commotions of the nations of the earth, for the accomplishment of his own glorious purposes of mercy to a ruined race, and the establishment of the kingdom of Christ over all the earth. Ezek. xxi. 26, 27. Psalm lxxvi. 10.

Thursday, January 8th.—That God would speedily break down every power and influence that stands in the way of truth and righteousness, and the universal reign of Christ over the nations of the earth. Isaiah liv. 17.

Friday, January, 9th.—That God would raise up and qualify men after his own heart, to go into all the earth, and proclaim the everlasting gospel to every creature. Matt. ix. 38; Mark xvi. 15. And that the word may be attended with Divine power and blessing. 2 Thess. iii. 1; Col. iv. 3, 4.

Saturday, January 10th.—For the universal outpouring of the Spirit of God upon all flesh. Joel ii. 28, 29. That God would speedily make bare his holy arm in the eyes of all the nations, that all the ends of the earth may soon see his salvation. Isaiah lii. 9, 10.

Sabbath, January 11th.—Sermons on the dignity and glory of the Church as intercessor before God on behalf of a ruined world. Her position as a Royal Priesthood, 1 Pet. ii. 5, 9—standing between the living and the dead, Num xvi. 46–48—the danger of such a position without the true incense, and the fire from the altar. Thanksgivings for past blessings, and prayer for the continued increase of those blessings until they be poured out according to the abundance promised. Mal. iii. 10.

A MISSIONARY'S VIEWS.

Illinois.

Dear Sir—Please find enclosed a check on Irving Bank, New York City, for $23.00, contributed to the Board of Domestic Missions, by the Presbyterian church in this place. The sum is small, too small, but is a large advance on any preceding contributions made by this church to any of our Boards, and I sincerely hope that my people will continue to do better and better.

We hear the cry of hard times constantly around us, and the "times" are assigned as a reason for stinting and starving the church or the gospel of God. We hear and read of ministers and others, who are in a position to know the financial condition of benevolent interests, alleging as a reason for the meagre support of ministers, &c., that many of the male members of the churches are in the army, and are, therefore, about as good as dead, as it regards supporting the gospel.

But is this a good reason? It is not true that vast numbers who are in the army make as much, if not more money, than if they were at home? Why should they not be called upon for their contributions in the army as well as at home? I know a little church not fifty miles from this, which has sent almost half of its male members to the army, and most of those persons contribute more to the support of their minister than when at home; and do it quarterly. The deacons regularly correspond with those members, (so also the pastor,) and thus call upon them for their contributions.

Again, in looking over the seventeen years which I have lived in Illinois, I am certain, that with the exception of from about 1854 to 1857, we have not in all that time had any better times than we now have. Produce sells for a paying price, and money is by no means scarce, and the money so far as this State is concerned, has never been better, no, nor as good. It is true we have to pay more for groceries and domestics, prints, &c., &c., still all this does not render our condition oppressive, especially if produce and labour bear a proportion as they now do. Why then should ministers and the Boards be oppressed as they are? There is a screw loose some place, and it should be looked after and tightened.

It is time for ministers and Boards to cease apologizing for the people; better cause them to understand and feel that Christ's cause can and must be sustained,—that that cause cannot retrench. For it would seem that if it is published abroad that missionaries and benevolent operations are to be put on half-allowance, the people will say, and feel too,—very well then, we need contribute but half the amount we have been accustomed to do.

I stated the facts in this case to my people, and this contribution, though small, you will see, is more than double the amount they ever sent you before. Besides, they are making the effort to go off the Board, which I believe they will be able to do. But certainly not while we cry "retrench," "poverty," "hard times," to them.

Excuse me for troubling you. May the Lord increase our faith, and may he sustain you in your arduous and perplexing work.

Yours, very truly.

HEARTS MADE GLAD.

Iowa.

Very Dear Brother—It is with great pleasure and much gratification I now address you, to acknowledge the receipt of a box of clothing from the Ladies of the First Presbyterian church, of Morristown, N. J., Rev. David Irving's church. And I tell you, my dear sir, it was a splendid box. There was no valuation sent with the box to us. I presume it has been reported to you, together with the value of its contents, before this time. But as nearly as we could estimate it, it is worth not less than $350. It is impossible, my dear brother, for me to tell you how it made our hearts rejoice, as myself and wife, and seven children stood around, and took out one article after another of the contents of that box. They had previously procured our measurement, and there were caps, coats, vests, pants, shirts, boots,—in short, everything to clothe me from head to foot, of the best quality, and abundance of it. And there were for my wife and children, bonnets, hats, cloaks, shawls, furs, and everything else that could be thought of, nice and comfortable. Had you been standing at our door, looking in at the keyhole, and listening to the exclamations and shouts of joy from the little ones, I presume you would have thought it a poor specimen of the quiet gravity which ought to characterize the family of a Presbyterian minister. But had you known the circumstances, I am sure you would have excused the apparent impropriety. Before, we knew not how we would get through the winter, but now "we are rich, we have all things and abound." We feel that God is very kind to us, and are more than ever encouraged to labour on, trusting in God and his people. We felt a little discouraged last spring, when you informed us that the Board could not grant us the sum of $75, but resolved to work on and trust God—and lo! we have received far more than that.

We thank you for mentioning our case to them so kindly—and we thank them for their great liberality. I write to them also acknowledging their kindness. May the Lord bless them—may he bless the Board in these trying times!

I am preaching at the Oskaloosa and at the little White Oak Church. We have fitted up our church at Oskaloosa during this summer very neatly, at an expense of about $350, and paid it. We have now a good, neat, comfortable church, forty by sixty feet, by far the best in the place—a good Sabbath-school, and encouraging congregation.

Pray for me, that I may be faithful to that Master who is so good to me and mine.

DISCOURAGING.

One of the missionaries of the Board, after describing a portion of his field, says—"My other field is a discouraging one, though it is one where the gospel is needed, and finds hearers. Perhaps I may as well fill out this letter with an attempt to give you some idea of it. Well, it is a village of several hundred inhabitants. It is on the railroad, and has more than its share of railroad employees for residents; and as the railroad company pays but little regard to the Sabbath, this part of the population have little reverence for it. It has some German inhabitants, as nearly heathen as a nominally Christian people can well be. They had preaching during the past summer by a young clergyman lately from Germany, and living in a neighbouring German settlement. The place of meeting was in a beer-vender's upper room. The beer-vender did not hesitate to tell the preacher, "we have no priest and no devil (kein Pfaffe, kein Teufel) in this country. You need not preach to us about holiness: preach that one should drink a glass of beer and enjoy himself." The preacher himself got drunk after service, and on the whole, I suppose that the main effect of the services was to increase the consumption of beer.

It may account in part, for the discouraging state of religious affairs, to say that the place has not enjoyed the influence of sound doctrinal preaching from the beginning. The early preachers were American Methodist, or Pelagian Congregational. The Baptist church was mainly in the country, and until lately, when it built a house of worship, had but little influence. Now with its house of worship and regular service, and denominational Sabbath-school, it is perhaps the most influential church in town. Our little church, a split from the Congregational, was organized by another denomination, and after lingering awhile came over to us. We are made up of all sorts of materials, except old school Presbyterians. If I only had a few men, with characters moulded by a good, strong Calvinism, Presbyterians dyed in the wool, at once reliable and active, to take the lead and hold up my hands! But I have not, and must do the best I can with the material I have."

A NOVEL PLAN.

Illinois.

After our thanksgiving service to-day, I requested our own members to remain a few minutes. I then, in few words, presented my plan for raising funds for the Boards of our church, which is, to subscribe in corn, for each Board so many bushels, and bring it, when convenient, within a month or so, and throw it into a "Missionary Crib," which I have prepared for that purpose. Less than the half of our members were present, owing to the inclemency of the day, and yet we received a subscription of nearly one hundred and fifty bushels of corn.

My two elders present gave the plan their hearty approval, as just the thing for our corn-growing country in the West. I will see the members who were not present at our meeting, and I hope we shall raise our subscription to near 300 bushels of corn. This, with what the other church gives, we will sell between this and spring, to the best advantage we can, before making out our report for the year, and send to the Boards. I feel sure we will raise more by this plan for the Boards this year, than we have done for the last three years all put together.

The tithes of Israel were in the products of the field. God could thus sanctify all the man had; and our brother in Illinois has given us his plan, and we doubt not it will work well. When corn is plentiful and money scarce, the liberal heart can bring it, as the poor parents of Christ brought the young pigeons, in token of the precious loan they had received. Thus none, however poor, could come empty. The corn and the wine are God's, and the cattle on hill and prairie. Then put his impress upon all you have. Let the brethren of the western church bring their offerings, and, if according as God has prospered them, they are as precious as the gifts of our merchant princes and honourable traffickers. We commend the plan; let it be tried, and these days of darkness and war may be overruled to create in our church a new era of outgoing benevolence.

DAY OF PRAYER FOR COLLEGES.

Having passed through a week of prayer for the conversion of the world, we think it both opportune and appropriate, that the church should be called to enter upon a day of prayer for Colleges. There is an obvious connection between the blessings sought. The latter sustains to the former the relation of the means to the end; and having sought, in her supplications, the conversion of the world, the church would now seek the divine blessing upon those institutions whose great object is to furnish and equip men for the great harvest-field. Our General Assembly, reflecting the sentiment of our own, and of almost all other evangelical denominations in America, has once more recommended to our churches the observance of this day, now hallowed by so many precious memories. On the last Thursday of February, therefore, our churches, in concert with the churches of Christ throughout the land, will meet to invoke the blessing of God "upon children and youth, especially the baptized children and youth of the church, and those collected in schools and colleges; with particular reference to an increased supply of labourers in the vineyard of the Lord."

In conformity with an arrangement made some years ago, the Assembly has, in addition to the foregoing, directed "that a collection be taken up on that day for the College Fund." To this order of Assembly we would earnestly ask the attention of our ministers, and elders, and brethren. By the College Fund, is meant the fund for the maintenance of Parochial Schools, as well as of Academies and Colleges. The value of the arm of our operations, maintained by this fund, may be inferred from the accompanying report of the College at San Francisco. That institution was established in its infancy, and nurtured by the funds of this department. It was but little the Board were able to appropriate to this enterprise, but that little encouraged the good brethren of San Francisco to enter upon, and prosecute the work to completion. Any one who will consider the results attained, and their bearing upon the destiny of California, will be persuaded of the importance of this special department, and of the high claims it has upon the prayers and contributions of the people of God. A department which, by a very moderate outlay, can plant and foster to maturity such an institution as City College, San Francisco, is deserving of the warmest sympathies, and the most liberal support.

The only additional remark we would make on the subject of giving to this cause on the approaching day of prayer for Colleges, is, that the Board of Education have no other arrangement for securing funds for this object. As the contributions of this day are, so, with the exception of some important individual contributions, will be the resources of the Board for the furtherance of the entire work of Schools, Academies, and Colleges, for the year.

CITY COLLEGE, SAN FRANCISCO.

The readers of the Record will hail, with emotions of delight and gratitude, the following Report of this institution. In submitting such a document to the Trustees, the President, Dr. Burrowes, must have experienced feelings of satisfaction rarely accorded to presidents of colleges. It is surely a rare thing to see an infant institution commenced in the basement of a church, with four pupils, expanding so rapidly, that, in the course of three years, it comprehends within the circle of its educational appliances, effective, academic, and collegiate departments. Yet such are the tokens of favour, with which the head of the church has recognised the labours of Dr. Burrowes in San Francisco.

City College, San Francisco, Oct. 21st, 1862.

To the Trustees of the City College:

Gentlemen—This institution has never been in more successful operation than during the present session. There are one hundred and eighteen students in regular daily attendance. Of this number, there are studying—Greek, 11; French, 29; German, 1; Geometry, 9; Natural Philosophy, 9; Physiology, 8; Davies' School Arithmetic, 27; Fowler's English Grammar, 17; Bullions' English Grammar, 46; Geography, 53; Latin, 37; Spanish, 13; Trigonometry, 3; Algebra, 13; Anatomy, 8; Davies' University Arithmetic, 26; Elementary Arithmetic, 28; An Advanced Class, —; Book-keeping, 6; History, 15.

Reading and spelling receive very particular attention; Geography is taught in connection with the globes; and the afternoon of Wednesday is devoted entirely to composition, declamation, and reading, in which all the students are required to take a part.

Great attention is given to writing by all the pupils. In the class in drawing are twenty-two students. In the different rooms of the College buildings there are one hundred and forty feet of blackboard, four feet wide, in constant daily use, employed in every study. There are eight teachers in constant employment during all the hours of study.

During the past year, in addition to the elementary classes in Latin and Greek, classes have read thoroughly—Xenophon's Anabasis, Homer's Iliad, Herodotus, Cornelius Nepos, Cæsar, Ovid's Metamorphoses, Virgil, Cicero's Orations, De Amicitia, and De Senectute, Horace, Livy, Juvenal, and the Germania and Agricola of Tacitus.

The students sufficiently advanced in Greek recite from the Greek Testament on Monday morning. The daily exercises of the institution are always begun by reading a portion of the Scriptures in regular course and with prayer.

The exercises begin at 9 o'clock, A. M., and close at half-past three, P. M.

At the close of the last session there was a public examination of three days; and public speaking by the small boys in the College chapel, by the larger students in Calvary Church. It is intended to continue this at the end of every session. The year is at present divided into two sessions, of five months each, beginning on the first of July and January, with a recess during the months of June and December.

The present teachers of the institution are, besides the teacher of the primary department: Rev. George Burrowes, D. D., Rev. Thomas Kirkland, Prof. A. de Leo de Laguna, Prof. W. E. V. Homer, Otto Bergner, C. C. Brier, Herman Bergner.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

GEORGE BURROWES,
President of the City College.

A SCRIPTURAL STIMULUS TO LIBERALITY.

We have apostolic precedent for citing the godly example of one church as a stimulus to rouse the slumbering energies of another. After bearing record of the grace of God bestowed upon the churches of Macedonia, (and thus, by the way, recognising the doctrine, that giving is a grace,) as illustrated by their liberality "in a great trial of affliction and deep poverty," the apostle Paul exhorts the church at Corinth, in the following strain, to imitate their example: "Therefore, as ye abound in every thing, in faith, and utterance, and knowledge, and in all diligence, and in your love to us, see that ye abound in this grace also."

Following this precedent, we would call upon "the Presbyterian church in America," to study and imitate the following noble example, in the grace of giving, furnished by the Wesleyans of England. The Rev. Mr. Arthur, a secretary of the society, gives, in one sentence, their modus operandi, by which they raise $700,000 a year. "The ministers make the missionary cause their own; and ALL—children as well as adults, and the poor as well as the wealthy, are invited to contribute." We have seen this sentence, in which the whole machinery is exhibited, taken as the text of a financial homily. The analysis was as follows:

"I. 'The ministers make the cause their own.'

"1. They study it.

"2. They enter into it heartily.

"3. They faithfully present it.

"II. All are invited to contribute:

"1. 'All.' (1.) Children; (2.) Adults; (3.) Poor; (4.) The wealthy. The classification is exhaustive.

"2. 'Are invited to contribute.'

"(1.) They are 'invited' in due season, not on the heels of Conference.

"(2.) They are 'invited' to give according to the measure of ability.

"(3.) They are 'invited' earnestly.

"(4.) They are 'invited' successfully."

As the apostle exhorts the church at Corinth, and stimulates them by the example of the churches of Macedonia, so would we point our own church, to the bright example of our Wesleyan brethren. Why may not we attain, by like means, to like results? Why should "the Presbyterian church in America," contribute, to all her Boards, no more than $319,026, annually, whilst the Wesleyan brethren of England contribute annually, for missionary purposes alone, $700,000? We profess to equal them in faith, and knowledge, and in all diligence, and love, if not in utterance. Why is it, then, that we do not equal them in this grace of giving also? If the low estate of a given grace is a proof that it has not been cultivated, then must we conclude, that we, as a denomination, are behind these brethren in the cultivation of this grace. As an outline of a system of husbandry, for the practical cultivation of this grace, we would recommend to our ministers, the foregeing analysis of the Wesleyan system.

PRESBYTERIAL SUPERVISION.

Our system of church government commits to the Presbytery the entire work of receiving, supervising, licensing, and ordaining candidates for the ministry. It rests with the Presbytery to determine, whether a young man shall, or shall not, be received as a candidate; whether he shall be continued on probation, or be dropped from the roll of candidates, after the lapse of a period of trial; whether, at the close of his theological course, he shall receive license to preach the gospel, and whether, after he has been licensed, and called to a particular church, he shall be ordained to the full work of the ministry. To the Presbytery, composed of ministers, and elders, and to the Presbytery alone, belongs the rightful authority of performing these several acts.

It may seem to many of our readers a work of supererogation to inform Presbyterians on the subject of Presbyterial powers and prerogatives. We are persuaded, however, that those who are sufficiently informed to dispense with the information now given, are also aware of the general lack of information in our church, on this subject. It is no uncommon thing for good orthodox Presbyterians to confer all the honour and all the responsibilities, of almost all these acts, upon the Board of Education. This honour the Board neither seek, nor accept, and the responsibility they leave, where Presbyterianism leaves it—with the Presbytery. It is for the Presbytery to decide whether a young man is called to preach the gospel; and it belongs to the Presbytery to supervise the candidate throughout his entire course of study, and at length introduce him into all the functions of the holy ministry.

This truth, though a very plain one, is manifestly second to very few truths in importance. The church cannot be too fully informed, or too deeply impressed in regard to it. And it is for the purpose of impressing more thoroughly, all concerned in the solemn transactions, incident to Presbyterial powers and prerogatives, that we take the liberty of re-affirming what we have often said before. The Board of Education are almoners of the church's benefactions, in behalf of pious and indigent young men, whom the Presbyteries have adjudged worthy, and in need of such benefactions, in prosecuting a course of study for the ministry; but the Board are not a Presbytery, and do not arrogate or exercise Presbyterial powers. From the position they occupy and the frequency of their communications, both with the young men and their teachers, they exercise a salutary influence in watching over the intellectual and spiritual developments of this class of candidates; but beyond this, they wish it to be known, they have no powers.

Impressed with the importance of the action taken on this subject, by the Assemblies of 1861 and 1862, we would, most respectfully, request for them the earnest attention of the brethren. The former of these actions is as follows:

"Resolved, That the Board of Education be instructed to make no appropriation to a beneficiary for a second or subsequent year, without a report and renewed application from the Presbytery under whose care the beneficiary is placed." See Min., 1861, p. 345.

As the import of this resolution has not been, in all cases, properly apprehended, we would take the liberty of expressing what we believe to have been the design of the Assembly in passing it. We believe that the object aimed at by the Assembly was, to secure a more thorough supervision of our candidates, on the part of Presbyteries. For the attainment of this end, the resolution, if properly understood and efficiently carried out, is admirably adapted. As there can be no application made to the Board of Education, on behalf of a candidate, which is not based upon a thorough examination of the candidate, on the subjects of personal religion, and his views in seeking the gospel ministry, an annual renewal of this application, implies an annual examination of the candidate on these subjects. The Presbytery would not, of course, restrict the examination to these two subjects, but would, in addition, take note of the progress made by the candidate, in his studies, from year to year.

The wisdom, and propriety, and positive obligation of such supervision, are too manifest to require elucidation. For such a system of scriptural watch and care, no substitute can, without great guilt and danger, be admitted. The responsibilities incident to the discharge of this sacred duty, cannot, without criminal negligence, be committed to principals of academies or presidents of colleges. The duty appertains to the Presbytery, and with the Presbytery rests the entire responsibility of properly discharging it.

As an apology for venturing the foregoing exposition, we would close this article by citing the closing sentences of the action of the last Assembly on this subject. The language held by the Assembly is as follows:

"It is believed, however, that in the practical application of the Rules of the Board [of Education,] though the Board itself, so far as known to your committee, is careful, faithful and resolute in the discharge of duty, there is, on the part of the Presbyteries, much laxness—much want of that scrupulous attention and faithful firmness which the nature of this important interest so imperatively demands; and all Presbyteries are hereby solemnly enjoined to give diligent attention to the discharge of their whole duty in this matter. Such a discharge of duty, it is also believed, would lead to the withdrawal of quite a number of candidates heretofore recommended by the Presbyteries to the care of the Board, and now receiving aid from the funds of the Church, in some cases to the scandal of religion, and in many cases to the great prejudice of the Education cause." See Min. 1862, p. 619.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Mission House, 23 Centre Street, New York.

News received to January 13th, 1863.

LATEST DATES AT THE MISSION STATIONS.

From Bear River, Chippewa, December 17th; Iowa, January 2d; Omaha, December 22d; San Francisco, November 10th; Chefoo, September 26th; Shanghai, October 8th; Ningpo, October 4th; Canton, October 11th; Bangkok, October 1st; Petchaburi, September 9th; Allahabad, November 18th; Futtehgurh, November 18th; Mynpurie, November 20th; Lodiana, November 18th; Kapurthala, October 31st; Rio de Janeiro, November, 19th; Sao Joao de Rio Claro, October 28th; Corisco, October 15th; Bogota, November 6th. [This list of dates will be of interest to the relatives of missionaries, and to other persons, as showing when letters were received from their missionary friends. As a general remark, the health and the usual work of our missionary brethren at these dates may be regarded as not marked by any special changes, unless specified in the notices given below.]

MOVEMENTS OF MISSIONARIES.

At the annual meeting of the Furrukhabad mission, which was held at Mynpurie, and was a season of delightful Christian communion, the brethren agreed to make a number of changes in the distribution of their small force. Mr. Owen returns to Allahabad, Mr. Wikoff goes to Mynpurie, Messrs. Brodhead and Sayre (the latter expected soon to arrive) go to Futtehgurh, and Mr. Ullmann occupies a new station at Etawah. Mr. Danforth has reached San Francisco, on his return to his friends in this country, —who live in Georgia.

THE NEW STATION AT ETAWAH,

Occupied by the Furrukhabad mission, provisionally, until the sanction of the Executive Committee is obtained, is one of no little importance. It is the chief town in a district of the same name; it is situated on the east side of the river Jumna, seventy miles southeast from Agra. The brethren recommend the withdrawal of the station at the latter place, the reasons for maintaining it having been lessened in weight. We shall be able to give a fuller statement hereafter concerning the proposed new station.

MISSION AND STATION REPORTS.

In the communications received since our last issue, and acknowledged above, are the annual reports of the Corisco, Shanghai, Ningpo, and Canton missions, and of the Lodiana, Agra, Mynpurie, Futtehgurh, Futtehpore, and Allahabad stations, including the reports of the printing-presses at Lodiana and Shanghai. These papers will be published hereafter, so far as the limited space in the missionary periodicals permit. They contain proofs of much work performed for Christ, and of his blessing on that work.

ADMISSIONS TO THE CHURCH.

Mr. Mackey mentions the admission of a professed convert to the church at Corisco, and Mr. Blackford mentions the admission of a Portuguese to the church in Rio de Janeiro. Mr. Walsh, speaking of the church in Allahabad, mentions that it has now fifty members, of whom twenty-two were received since his return to India.

LIBERALITY OF FRIENDS AT SHANGHAI AND ALLAHABAD.

We learn with much pleasure that friends among the merchants at Shanghai have made very liberal pecuniary provision for the family of our lamented missionary, Dr. Culbertson, as a testimonial of their regard for his labours and his memory. And at Allahabad, Mr. Walsh reports Rs. 1150, or about $600, as contributed towards the support of the educational work of the mission, chiefly by friends connected with the Scotch Kirk at that city.

RECEIPTS FROM THE CHURCHES.

We are glad to report that the receipts from the churches, from May 1st to January 1st, have not fallen off, as might perhaps have been expected, but they are nearly the same in amount as in the corresponding months of last year. On the other hand, we mourn over the high rate of foreign exchange, which continues to increase. On remittances to most of the missions, a heavy loss is sustained for this reason. Indeed, the foreign missionary work is in danger of being very seriously embarrassed by this state of things. Some of the churches, we are happy to see, and also some individual donors, have increased their gifts to prevent this embarrassment. We wish they could all add considerably to their ordinary gifts. We trust God will enable very many of them to do so.

CORISCO MISSION—AFRICA.

Journal of a Tour to the Pangwe Country, by Rev. James L. Mackey.

The Mainland little explored—Intercourse sought with inland Tribes—An English Botanist.

When the Corisco mission was established, twelve years ago, the adjacent mainland was but little explored, and very little was known of its inhabitants. The Muni river had been ascended by white men, and a few miles near its mouth surveyed, but all the adjacent country drained by the river was unexplored and unknown. At various times the members of the mission have made efforts to explore the river, and to penetrate inland beyond its sources. We have succeeded in exploring all the branches of the river, so far as they are navigable for boats, but have not been able to penetrate far into the interior. The river is remarkable for its shortness. On old maps of Africa it is put down as being several hundred miles in length; any one seeing it at its mouth, where it is a mile wide, or ascending it seven or or eight miles, where it has a breadth of four miles, and observing the amount of water discharged by it, would be much surprised to find that its extreme source, in a direct line from the sea, does not exceed eighty, or at most, ninety miles. By the course of the stream the river is much longer, but it is circuitous, and it is divided into numerous branches, which drain a considerable extent of high land.

In our various tours we have been able to present the truth to a large number of people who had never heard it before; but another object which has been kept steadily in view is exploration, so that we may be able to push forward intelligently our missionary work. Wherever we have made acquaintance with the people of different tribes, we have endeavoured also to gain their confidence, so as to get one or more children from them to instruct at Corisco, with the hope of sending them back prepared to carry the gospel with them. In this way, mainly through the untiring labours of [our late] brother Clemens, we have had under instruction in the school established by him, more than thirty children from seven or eight tribes on the mainland. These children have been brought to Corisco with the full consent of their parents, with the understanding that they were to remain several years under instruction. Through the influence of God's Spirit upon the truth, we hope that many of these children may be prepared when they grow up for teachers and preachers among their own people. We hope, by this mode of operating, to reach ultimately, by native agency, a large extent of country which seems to be almost closed against the direct labours of white men, through the unhealthfulness of the climate.

The tour described in the following journal was undertaken in connection with Mr. Mann, a botanist in the service of the English government. Mr. Mann has been about three years on the coast in the pursuit of his favourite science, botany. He spent some time with us on Corisco, examining the botany of the island. He had laid his plans to ascend the Muni, and encamp for a time on the Sierre del Crystal, and to explore the country beyond, if possible, but he was alone, and did not like to attempt any extensive exploration. He expressed a strong desire to have me accompany him. He had all the necessary appliances for travel, a portable tent, instruments for measuring the height of mountains, provisions for the journey in such shape as could be easily carried, so as to supply our necessities in case the supply along our route should by any means fail us. With the concurrence of the other members of the mission, I gladly consented to accompany Mr. Mann. My engagements at Corisco prevented my starting with him, but as he wished to spend at least two weeks examining the botany of the mountains, he concluded to go on and encamp, and await my arrival.

A Pangwe Interpreter—A Scripture-reader's Station—Diaka's Town and Hospitality.

Tuesday, July 22.—I left Corisco at 10 A. M. with four good boatmen. All the four are members of the church, and two of them, Yume and Jumba, are employed in the mission as Scripture-readers. I had also a Pangwe interpreter, who had been engaged by Mr. Mann before his departure to accompany us. This interpreter is a slave, and speaks the Pangwe and Benga languages both fluently. In answer to my inquiry about his native place and people, he told me he knew nothing about either. He remembered being stolen when a small boy, from near the town where his parents lived, and carried away, and sold, but where the place was he had no idea. He has been several years at Corisco, and is still quite a young man. He has gained some knowledge of Christian truth, but is not a professor of religion. In our missionary tours, where we find it practicable to do so, we much prefer to have Christian men employed to accompany us, partly for our own comfort, but mainly on account of the good influence they exert wherever we go.

With a favourable breeze we reached Ilobi at 1½ P. M., where we made a short stay. At 3 P. M. we arrived at Ukaka, which is the south point at the mouth of the Muni. Here Ekela, one of our Scripture-readers, is labouring. We stayed with him but a short time, inquiring after his welfare, and how his work prospered. After saying a few encouraging words we were again under weigh, with his "keke bwam"—may you go prosperously—and arrived at Diaka's town, a little above Botika, before sunset. Our day's journey was speedy and pleasant, having travelled about thirty-five miles. Diaka, who is an old friend of mine, received us with all the hospitality a native African chief is capable of showing. His town is rather a poor one, and his reception-hall is in a dilapidated state, but we were made abundantly welcome to the best house he had to offer us. In my journeys up the river I have always stopped with him. Since my last visit he has moved his town eight or ten miles farther down the river. It is a very common thing for the people here to move their towns. Such houses as satisfy them are easily constructed. If there is much sickness at a town, or trade does not prosper, they conclude the spirits, or devils rather, are not favourable to the place, and they remove.

Soon after our arrival, Diaka's wife busied herself in preparing supper for our company. It was served up in the native style, with such little civilized additions as the town afforded. When supper was ready, the door which closed the entrance at one end of the house was taken up, and laid on four sticks stuck into the earthen floor near the seat on which I sat. Our supper consisted of a large wash-basin full of boiled plantains, and an earthen pot full of dried fish, cooked with udika, the pot the same in which the mess was cooked on the fire; a plate, knife, and fork, were placed before me, which were the civilized additions to the repast; the remainder of the company reached in with their fingers, and helped themselves from the common stock. After supper all the people in the town assembled for religious services. There were, however, but few at home, as most were absent collecting India-rubber. Those present gave apparently good attention. Services over, we retired early to rest, hoping to made an early start on our journey in the morning.

Early sail—River Towns passed—Robbery at Mbeni's Town—Dilatory proceedings.

Wednesday, July 23.—We rose almost an hour before daylight, and were under way before day-break. As we passed up the river in the early morning, parrots with their merry chatter, and large birds, so numerous along the river banks, enlivened the scene with their merry notes, and our hearts, tuned to the praise of our Maker and Redeemer, rose also in grateful adoration. With the tide in our favour, we made rapid progress up the river. We aimed to reach Mbeni's town to-day; it is near the head of tide-water, on one of the branches of the Muni. On my first visit inland, nine years ago, Mbeni lived over beyond the principal mountain range. Since then he and all his people have moved down to the present location. We stopped for a short time at Iduma, for our men to get their breakfast. As we ascended the river during the day we were hailed from a great many towns. Some people came out in canoes to beg for tobacco, or to sell dried fish and mats, and to inquire after the news.

We arrived at Mbeni's town about 4 P. M. Here I met Mr. Mann, who had come down from his encampment in the mountains the day previous, anticipating my arrival. Before leaving Corisco I had heard a report that Mbeni's people had broken into Mr. Mann's boxes, and had stolen a considerable amount from him; the report proved true. The amount stolen exceeded in value fifty dollars. He felt undecided what to do in regard to the theft. We had very small hope of recovering any part of the goods, or of bringing the thieves to justice, and at the same time we felt that to let the matter pass, without making some kind of an effort to obtain the stolen property, would embolden the people to commit similar robberies at a future time. The goods taken were not such as were essential to our journey, and we regretted more the bad influence the escape of the thieves with their booty would have, than the simple loss of the goods. They were such as Mr. Mann had laid in to defray the expenses of our journey, but still he had sufficient left, if we met with no mere robberies, to pay the expenses of such a journey half-way across the continent. We called the people of the town together in general palaver, and requested the head-men to make search for the goods. They promised to do so, but no doubt the head-men were as deeply implicated in the theft as any one else; they promised to report in the morning what they could do in the matter.

We commenced packing the articles we wished to take with us, to have all ready for our departure the next morning. We had also to employ bearers and a guide. Our hope was to make an extensive tour, and, if possible, strike some branch of the Congo, which we have good reason for believing will be found less than three hundred miles from the sea-coast I intended to take three of my men as bearers, leaving Jumba, one of the Scripture-readers, to labour in the town during our absence, and to take care of the things which we would leave behind us. We applied to Mbeni for a guide, and for seven bearers to carry such goods as Mr. Mann wished to take; my own three Corisco men were able to carry all I had need to take with me. Our journey from this point we expected would occupy about three weeks, little thinking that we would be hurrying back in about that number of days. With some difficulty we engaged six bearers and a guide, but they all declared that they must have one day to get their food ready before they could start. We knew this was only a pretext for delay, their food, which was only green plantains, to be cut from the stalk, could be cut early in the morning; so with some urging they consented to get ready by 10 A. M. the next day. Each bearer was to receive two dollars for going with us to the Pangwe country, and returning with us on our return. Our expectation was to get Pangwes as guides and bearers when we reached their country. Before retiring we arranged most of the burdens for our carriers, so that they would not exceed sixty pounds for each one, besides the supply of food each was expected to carry for himself.

Stolen Property not recovered—Travelling over the Mountains.

Thursday, July 24.—This morning Mbeni and his brother wished a postponement of the search for the stolen property; they said they had made diligent inquiry, but could hear nothing of them in the town; but perhaps during our absence they might be able to gain some trace of them. We knew this was only an excuse to put the matter aside entirely, and we could only express our displeasure and acquiesce.

The people were not long in getting their food for the journey over the mountains The mountain district is quite uninhabited. From Mbeni's town to the nearest Pangwe settlements is three short days' journey, and no food can be procured by the way. The travelling is rough and extremely laborious; many of the ascents are steep and rocky, and in some places the only road lies in the bed of the small streams which descend through the gorges in the hills. When we were about to start, one of the bearers engaged last night was not to be found, and another could not be got to fill his place. After a good deal of noise, confusion, and scolding, in which nearly all the people of the town joined, and of which only one can fully conceive who has been in the midst of such a scene, we got all the burdens arranged, and started between 10 and 11 A. M. Just as we started our guide coolly told us he would follow us the next day, and would overtake us on the mountains. We were in no humour to wait a day for him, and moved off without him Our hope was to reach the Pangwe settlements on Saturday evening, so as to spend the Sabbath among them; as we had now not three full days left, the least delay might detain us in the mountains over the Sabbath.

Our company consisted of Mr. Mann and myself, my three Benga men, who carried my luggage, five Bondemo carriers, one Pangwe interpreter, and a Krooman, who was Mr. Mann's servant, and a guide in the rear, who might perhaps overtake us, or perhaps meet us on our way back. Many of the people of the town accompanied us out some distance on our way, shouting and hallooing until we were out of hearing. The day was quite warm, but the thick shade of the forest trees kept out the sun. Our carriers were not oppressed with clothing, and we found it to our comfort to strip off all we could spare, and pack it up to be carried. We pressed forward at a pace which took us over the ground about two and a half miles an hour. The road was but a narrow foot-path, neither smooth nor straight, so interrupted with roots of trees that it required constant watching to prevent painful concussions and stumbling. The same degree of labour would have carried us over a good road four miles an hour. We encamped at 5 P. M. under a huge rock. We soon had fires lit and supper cooked. The natives, in their journeys through the mountains, are accustomed to encamp at this place, and there are sleeping-places constructed under the rock, out of sticks, for the accommodation of twenty or more persons. We soon had our beds unrolled, and we stretched our weary limbs on the low scaffolds which we found prepared. We formed a picturesque group, some cooking, some smoking, and others lying or sitting around the fires. All were good-humoured and merry. There seems to be a kind of fascination about such life, which leads nearly all people to enjoy a little of it. Soon all voices were hushed in slumber, and as securely as if we had been in a city surrounded with walls. The watchful eye of our Heavenly Father was over us, and he kept us in safety and in peace.

MISSION IN CHINA.

Encouraging Prospect at Ningpo.

The Rev. W. T. Morrison, writing at Ningpo, August 12, 1862, after referring to the rebels having been expelled from San-poh, as they had previously been from Ningpo, thus continues:—

All the ground which we have occupied is now again open to us. The prospect for labour is more encouraging than it ever was. From conversations had with one or two labouring in that part of the field, I look with some degree of interest and also of hope to that field. Our prayers are, that God, by his Spirit, would cause these late afflictions to result in their benefit. The fact is patent to the most superficial observation, that the foreigner occupies an entirely different position with respect to the natives than he did formerly. Their old prejudices have been so rudely battered, that they are better prepared for the reception of new opinions than ever they were. To the minds of many, a prostrate idol, or the dust and sticks of idols which now remain in many temples, are a more convincing proof that these idols can avail them nothing, than all our controversial tracts. At such a time we feel our weakness. At present we have only three here, of whom Mr. Dodd is still engaged in the study of the language, and myself, who can hardly be regarded as a full missionary yet. . . .

On Sabbath I administered the communion at a place six miles from here. The assistant spoke of several who were interested, and some who observed the Sabbath. As these cases are not very recent, they have probably been mentioned before. The attendance at one of our city chapels has been, in a marked degree, excellent. While we delight to disseminate the truth, and to see good attention given to its delivery, whether by a foreigner or native, yet it is depressing to find that hardly one manifests a sincere spirit of inquiry. A woman in our own family gives some evidence that she has been born again. It is most interesting to see that the main features of the Spirit's work are substantially the same here as at home. A deep sense of sin and unworthiness, the desire of a Saviour, a determination to serve God, and a spirit of love.

MISSION TO THE CHINESE IN CALIFORNIA.

A Letter of the Rev. A. W. Loomis, December 9, 1862.

Sowing beside all Waters.

. . . We continue on in our usual labours, and our interest in them is increasing. Some weeks ago I commenced a sort of Sabbath-school at ten o'clock, Sabbath morning. This was attempted with a hope of attracting some of the boys and young men. A desire to learn to read English brings some to the house who would not come for any other purpose. The exhibitions of the magic-lantern occasionally during the week, have called out many who would not have been induced to come for any other purpose; and while we have them together we manage to tell them things which they ought to know, but have never heard before. The astronomical plates are very useful. In connection with these, we sometimes read a lecture we have prepared, with a design of conveying to their minds some idea of the world they live in, and the worlds that surround them, so that they may be led to see the absurdity of their own accounts of the origin of the world.

There are many, very many, subjects I would like to discourse upon to these Chinese strangers, but their knowledge is so limited that we cannot launch into deep water at all; we can only coast along on the shores of science. It requires study, too, to prepare to communicate any new thoughts, and about the most interesting part of my studies is in the preparation of discourses for our audiences. The way we do this, is to write it out in English, then to talk it off to my teacher, who writes it down in running hand, and in the colloquial dialect; then we review and amend it, and afterwards he copies it in a fair hand; and when these are read, the audience understand them without the need of explanations.

A short time since, we translated that tract "Little Henry and his Bearer," abridging it considerably. This we have had read to the people more than once, and they listen with close attention from the beginning to the close. We can make use of many illustrations here which could not be appreciated in China by people that had not been across the waters, and seen what Chinamen cannot help seeing when they come to this part of the world. Surely there must be great and important results from the immigration of Chinese to this country. They come here, not to make it their home, but to return after a few months or years. How many thousands have already gone back to China, who, in this busy State, have come in contact with people of all nationalities, and who have labours performed, enterprises undertaken, and results accomplished, which they had never dreamed of at home, and would not have believed could be done had they not seen with their own eyes. Who can suppose that these people, after flying over the country by steam, talking by telegraph, and surveying the stars through the telescope, are going to continue to say their prayers to a man made of mud, without feeling some little doubt in their minds about the profit of it? And willthey continue to be just as well satisfied that old Pwan Koo carved out the heavens and earth with a chisel and mallet? China is to be revolutionized; the work is well under weigh, and one important element in the reorganization will be the people who have been abroad, seen the world, and returned with money, experience, and enterprise. I am more and more convinced of this; and now is the time for the church to operate, taking advantage of the political condition of China, and improving all opportunities to educate aright those of the native inhabitants who travel abroad.

"People who sympathize with us"—Varied Labours.

There are people who sympathize with us, and would be glad to help; one instance I will mention. A young man, educated amongst the Moravian Brethren, and still a member of that church, had not been long in this city before his missionary education and sympathies led him to inquire whether any efforts were made to Christianize the Chinese in this country. As soon as he heard of our mission he came to witness our services, expressed his interest, and has since remembered us, sometimes asking for tracts to distribute, sometimes by a donation to the mission, till two or three weeks ago, feeling moved to engage more directly in earnest efforts for the heathen who are, by God's providence, thrust in amongst the people professing Christianity, he came to me, proposing to undertake a work somewhat similar to what he had been accustomed to, as a tract-distributor in Philadelphia. He would go over the city, house by house, and street by street. But then, how would he talk with them? This should be the plan: we agree to prepare him a short address, in which he assures them of his desire for their welfare, wishes them every blessing, tells them briefly how to secure the great good, and finally tells them of a sacred book, the Bible, which is full of precious truth, but as he is unable to converse with them, he urges them to go to the Chinese mission chapel and listen for themselves. Then follows a particular statement as to the place and the hours of our services. We had four hundred copies of this sheet-tract lithographed at his expense, and he has entered on his work. Last evening he dropped in to report progress. He likes his new enterprise. Another young man has joined him, taking certain streets and lanes for his field. We should pray for a rich harvest from this sowing. When this four hundred has been distributed, we, if spared, will have another address ready for them, and so help them to vary their conversations. Will not this be one way by which the dumb may speak?

Being here alone, I find myself called upon to do quite a variety of work. People who wish Chinese labourers and servants are apt to presume that I can tell them how to get them; and Chinamen wanting employment suppose I can help them get it. A few weeks since, a deputation of fishermen came after legal advice; and at the present time there are parties wishing to get Chinamen enlisted in the cultivation of the Tule lands, and as we believe this would be well for the Chinamen, we shall help all we can. They wish to have some laws translated, respecting premiums for certain products which may be raised; we have done this.

Chinamen are employed in several manufacturing establishments. Hundreds of them are segar-makers; sixty are employed in one woollen-factory, twenty or thirty in another. A whip-factory has begun to employ Chinamen to a limited extent. Many are employed as servants, and to do light work about stores and warehouses. More and more find employment as house-servants.

It is the purpose of all these boys and young men to go home again to China, and very many of them will go; and what a variety of facts and new ideas will be borne over the waters with them, to be scattered everywhere, over hill and valley, in towns and villages. Now is the time, then, to cast in the leaven of truth.

I remain yours affectionately,

A. W. Loomis.

REMARKS ON THE CIRCULATION OF THE MISSIONARY PERIODICALS.

From the reports of the Boards of Foreign Missions and Publication to the last General Assembly, it appears that but 3200 copies of the Foreign Missionary, (pamphlet edition,) and 10,400 copies of the Home and Foreign Record are circulated. The former of these publications is sent gratuitously to all our ministers, to such donors of $10 and upwards as desire it, and to others who subscribe and pay for it at fifty cents a year.* The Minutes of the General Assembly report 2859 ministers, and 303,289 communicants. Making suitable deductions for the Southern churches, it would leave still connected with our General Assembly over 2000 ministers, and about 230,000 communicants. Again, the Home and Foreign Record is sent gratuitously to all ministers and licentiates, to various societies and public reading rooms in Theological Seminaries, &c. After all necessary allowances, it leaves about 8000 copies for circulation amongst about 230,000 members of our churches. Suppose all these to be read by an average of four members each, and allow 2000 more for the members in ministers' families, and this would still leave 200,000, or nearly nine-tenths of the members of our churches who never read either of these publications. But there is still another painful deduction to be made from this list of readers. A number of our churches avail themselves of the privilege of supplying their members at a low price, by taking the number prescribed and paying for them all in advance. These are put in the seats of the church, to be taken by the families occupying them. Yet, in almost, if not all, of our churches are to be found whole families, not a member of which feels interest enough in the great work of the church to take these papers home and read them! Even members who contribute to send missionaries abroad to heathen lands do not care enough about ever hearing from them, whether they are sick or well, dead or alive, successful or unsuccessful, to read the accounts they send home, when published and put in their seats in the sanctuary of God, but actually leave them to accumulate there until the sexton removes them, and uses, or sells them for waste paper! In itself this is a sad picture to contemplate; but still worse when we come to look at its necessary consequences.

Without prayer, all human agencies are powerless for the conversion of a soul, or the triumphs of the Gospel over an acre of the territory of the Prince of the power of the air. We contribute in vain, our missionaries labour, and suffer, and die in vain, without prayer. The question then forces itself on the mind, can those who feel so little interest in the great work of the church that they will not read the intelligence thus brought to their very doors, ever feel interest enough in the work of the church to pray for its success? How can they possibly pray intelligibly for a cause about which they must necessarily know so little? How can they pray earnestly for any cause in which they feel so little interest? We are then forced to the conclusion, that if they ever pray at all for the spread of the Gospel among the heathen, it must be only occasionally, and then in a cold and formal manner. And when there is so much evidence that this is the case with nine-tenths of the members of any church, what reason has that church to expect the blessing of her glorified Lord and Head on a work carried on with so little prayer? This will account for the little interest felt in the monthly concert for prayer, as is too manifest by the small attendance on them, and the cold formality which too often pervades those meetings.

But the influence of these facts upon the missionary in the field must be terribly depressing;

* [These returns do not include the circulation of the newspaper Foreign Missionary, of which 29,000 were mentioned in the Annual Report as sent to Sunday-schools, going into the same number of families.—Ed.]

when, by such facts, the thought is forced upon him, that after sacrificing the comforts of home and country, and Christian society, he is virtually cut off from the sympathy and the prayers of nine-tenths of the church members; that even some of those who contributed to send him far hence to the Gentiles care so little about ever hearing from him that they will not take the trouble to read the letters he writes to them; any one may imagine, though few will be able to describe, its depressing effect on his spirit. And when he looks into God's word, and there learns that the success of his work depends so much upon the prayers of the people of God, with what crushing weight must the intelligence come home to his soul, that many of those who sent him out cannot pray intelligibly and feelingly for him, because they know not whether he is dead or alive, and will not inform themselves by reading what he writes to them!

But this state of things is embarrassing to the Board as well as to the missionaries. Neither has the ear of the churches. Our missionaries may die, and our missions break down, but it is impossible to tell it to the churches and ask them for more men or means, or for their prayers. Agents cannot be sent to visit them. Under these circumstances, is it any wonder that more than one-half of our churches never contribute a cent to send the Gospel of salvation to the perishing heathen? How can the Board keep our missions in vigorous action when it cannot ask the churches for the needed help, or even tell them of its wants? Surely pastors who know, or ought to know, all these things, are solemnly responsible for not pressing this subject upon the attention of their people, until a different result is attained.

But, in making this statement, it is manifest that it will not reach those who most need to read it, unless pastors will read it to their people from their pulpits when they have a full congregation, and make an immediate effort to do something to remedy the evil. Those individuals who do already read these publications may do much to recommend them to their neighbours, and induce them to go and do likewise. Many would no doubt willingly subscribe, but they do not know where or how to send for the paper. If pastors and sessions would only take a little pains, and make a little effort to afford all an opportunity every year, no doubt much might be accomplished. But if they will not make even that little effort, let them ask themselves, on whom rests the responsibility of not bringing up the church to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty? Shall our missionaries, struggling alone against all the difficulties of heathenism, climate, and language, sinking under the heat and burthen of the day, appeal in vain for more help, and for the prayers of God's people, because their ears are closed against those appeals? Shall the fields that are white to the harvest be left to perish, while God has provided and put into the hands of his people the means necessary for reaping that harvest, because God's own blood-bought people thus close their ears against the cry that is wafted to them on every breeze from every heathen land? Shall the Board labour year after year to bring out the strength of the sacramental host to make a vigorous assault upon the powers of darkness, and fail to call forth a tithe of that strength because Zion's converts are asleep, have their ears stopped, and the watchmen upon her walls refuse to sound the alarm, lest their quiet slumbers should be disturbed? The reply of pastors and people to these appeals will be recorded not merely in the records of the Board of Foreign Missions, but also in the book that shall be opened when we all meet before the judgment-seat of the heathen, who have perished because we did not what we could to warn them of their danger, and point them to an all-sufficient Saviour. May the writer, and every reader, be enabled to make such a record in this matter as we shall wish then to hear published before an assembled universe.

MISCELLANY.

THE MISSIONS OF THE LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

There are few missions more important, or productive of greater results, than those sustained by the Independent churches of this country. Their field of labour embraces the South Seas, the West Indies, South Africa, Madagascar, China, with Northern and Southern India, in all of which localities Christian churches have been formed, and various forms of heathenism encountered and overthrown. Their numerous stations are occupied by not fewer than one hundred and seventy missionaries, of whom twenty-seven are new labourers added during last year. This noble band of Christian evangelists embraces not only ordained Europeans, but also several medical missionaries, schoolmasters, and a few natives, who have been specially separated to the work of God. The catechists, native preachers, teachers, and schoolmasters, are said to number at least eight hundred persons, and the converts in church fellowship, statedly communing at the Lord's table, approach twenty-four thousand.

For the maintenance of their widely-extended operations, the home income of the London Missionary Society was last year £59,135. At the mission stations themselves was raised and nearly expended the sum of £15,062. Special appeals on behalf of the missions in India, China, and Madagascar, added a further sum of £5,378 to the funds, so that the entire receipts were £79,576. The entire cost of the missions amounted to £77,935.—Miss. Herald, October, 1862.

CLOSE OF OUR FISCAL YEAR.

We take leave to remind pastors and churches that the fiscal year of the Board of Publication closes with the last day of February in each year. Money received on or before that day, and that only, will be acknowledged in the next Annual Report to the General Assembly.

We would respectfully urge any who have funds on hand for the Board, to forward them, so that they may reach us by that time.

Those churches which have not yet taken their annual collections for our Colportage Fund, or for distribution in the army and navy, we earnestly request that they would do so as soon as possible.

NEW BOOKS FOR SABBATH-SCHOOLS.

The Board has now in press a number of new and excellent Sabbath-school books. Some of them will be illustrated by beautiful coloured lithographic pictures. They will be issued as soon as possible.

Copies of the Board's Sabbath-school Catalogue will be mailed to any one requesting it by letter.

ARMY DISTRIBUTIONS.

The demand for books and tracts for distribution in the army steadily continues. Each new battle brings new solicitations for tracts and reading-cards for use in the refilled hospitals.

The Board continues to send supplies to regiments, camps, and hospitals, from week to week, just so fast as the condition of its Distribution Fund will allow.

Within a few days past a large supply has been forwarded to Kentucky and Tennessee, especially to the city of Memphis, where the work goes briskly forward.

Another large quantity of books and tracts has been shipped to New Orleans, where they will be distributed among the soldiers and sailors in General Banks' department, on the lower Mississippi, and along the Gulf coast.

Wherever our books and tracts go, they are received with the utmost avidity by the soldiers and sailors, and we have ample reason to believe are blessed, in cases not a few, to the salvation of their readers.

Perhaps the world never presented a field for Christian effort, in which philanthropy, patriotism, and Christianity, joined to present so many powerful motives to effort.

We appeal to every reader of the Record to do what he can to aid the Board in carrying forward this good work. The funds at its disposal for the work are very limited, and every now and then become utterly exhausted, while the work itself is vast, and is growing upon our hands. Help us, then, with your contributions and your prayers, and the Lord will bless you for so doing.

A GOOD TESTIMONY.

The following extract is from a letter written by a discharged soldier. He writes from Michigan, to request that certain of our books be sent to him, and then goes on to say—

"In the Presbyterian, of Dec. 13th, last, was a letter from a correspondent, giving an account of some of the operations of Colporteurs of the Presbyterian Board of Publication.

While reading his recital—(I was discharged from service last September, on account of the loss of my eyesight)—it brought very forcibly to mind the real enjoyment, the feast of fat things I had from favours from the same source during a short stay in a hospital at Nashville. Tracts from your Board were distributed nearly every Sabbath. I received the "Sin Bearer" and the "Cross of Christ." Situated as I was, away from home and deprived almost entirely of other means of grace, they were most opportune; reviving my drooping spirits and affording that consolation, that unspeakable delight, that the gospel alone can give. If our soldiers were generally furnished with these silent messengers of truth, doubtless, many a poor man would be cheered as I was, and his passage to the tomb enlightened and made joyous; while others who are strangers to God, would be brought to a saving knowledge of the truth.

Your tracts were generally well received, and in many cases sought with earnestness. They were distributed in the hospitals by an army chaplain, from Ohio.

Yours, &c. G. N. S."

SUBSCRIPTIONS IN CORN.

The following is from a letter received from a minister in Illinois. Would it not be a good plan for some other western churches?

"We are taking up a subscription in Corn, for all the Boards of the church, in my two churches. I have not yet presented the paper to all the members, but have more now subscribed, than has been raised in these two churches for the last three years. We design to sell the corn about the first of March, and send the money in before the close of the year.

I have a missionary crib, into which I put 25 bushels, as my subscription. The Elders approved of the plan, and did likewise, and so the members are doing. In this way we will greatly increase our contributions, and not seem to feel it so much as if we gave money.

I think our subscription will reach nearly five hundred bushels in all. If so, I shall feel happy in being able to report to the Boards something more becoming us, who have received so much from them. Yours, &c."

OUR WOUNDED SOLDIERS.

Many interesting and touching incidents might be given, illustrating the power of divine grace upon the hearts of our sick and wounded soldiers. Hundreds and thousands have been cut off. The emblems of mourning are seen all through the land, and the hearts of parents and friends, have, everywhere, been made sad by the terrible war. But God has made the sufferings through which many have passed, the means of leading them to Christ. We were in many of the battles on the Peninsula—through those which raged for seven consecutive days—and the bloody contest at Antietam. Our task was to seek out the wounded, to administer relief to the wants of the body, and whisper the words of Scripture to the suffering and the dying. We have seen many die, leaving no hope that their end was peace—but we have seen many others pass away, rejoicing in a Saviour's love, blessing God for all their sufferings, since through these they had learned the way of life.

Said a man, whose leg was amputated, and who seemed to be recovering, having been for six weeks in one of our field hospitals, "I was an infidel before I came into the army. I was twice wounded, and while in the hospitals, good books and tracts were given me. I read a great many of them, and then I began to read the Testament; and now I see I rejected the Bible because I was ignorant of what was in it. I have lost my leg, but through the goodness of God, I hope to go home a better man. I've found Jesus, and this is of more value than all my limbs."

The thirst for reading matter is intense; not only in the hospitals, but in the regiments is this the case. We have given away many hundred copies of the "Soldier's Pocket-Book," and the tracts and publications so kindly furnished by your Board, in large numbers. Eternity only can reveal the good accomplished in this way. I was called one evening, as I was picking my way through an old barn covered in every spot with wounded men, by a youth of about seventeen years of age. He wanted me, he said, to sit down on the straw beside him, and to talk to him "about God, and how to be a Christian." His leg had been taken off. Hê had fought bravely in the battle of Antietam. I sat down near him and endeavored to point out the way to be saved. He said "one of those little books or tracts you gave me two days ago, has set me to thinking about my mother, and how she used to do when I was little, how she read to me out of the Bible, and prayed with me and taught me to pray, and now I want to be "a Christian." I asked him if his mother was living; he said no, she had died about six years ago. I have strong reason to hope that this young man has indeed become a follower of Christ. Three months afterwards, he left the hospital to go home. Then he told me his trust was strong in Jesus, and that he hoped to spend his life in his service. We might relate many more. What an encouragement for Christians to give liberally, that this religious reading may be scattered among all our soldiers.

"I shall pass over that river in safety," said a young man who had been wounded in a most terrible manner, and who, after two months of indescribable suffering, in which the whole bone at the thigh joint had decayed away, was told that he must soon die. Why, we asked, do you think you will go over in safety? Are you not afraid to die? "Why should I be," he replied, "since Jesus died for me, and took away the gloom of the grave, and quieted the stormy billows of the river of death." The nurse or some one had been singing, "We'll cross the river Jordan, happy in the Lord." He was thinking of this as we came into his tent. He asked me to pray with him. I did so; and then he raised his own voice and poured forth one of the most touching and heartfelt prayers that I had ever heard. We all wept. There were five other wounded boys in the tent. The tears rolled down the cheeks of each one. It was the prayer of simple faith, and of a heart taught of God. He forgot his sufferings. Never had we seen so much comfort afforded under bodily pains and agonies, by the religion of Jesus, as in his case. He died the next morning after this scene, in the same happy frame of mind to the last. Poor B. I for eight weeks we visited his tent daily, hoping sometimes that he might recover. But he has crossed the river. We hope to meet him, and others of our brave soldiers, whose lives were given in defence of their country, on the other side, where "Sickness and sorrow, pain and death,

Are feared and felt no more."

LETTER TO A SABBATH-SCHOOL.

A considerable number of Sabbath-schools have come forward with contributions to aid the Board in distributing its books and tracts among soldiers and sailors. Much good has undoubtedly been done through their help. May God bless them for it, and incline many other schools to follow their noble example.

The following letter was written by a labourer in the service of the Board. At various points on the Mississippi and its branches, he has supplied immense numbers of soldiers with the Board's books and tracts. The letter was written at Cairo, Illinois, and addressed to a Sabbath-school which had liberally aided the Board. Will not Sabbath School Superintendents read it aloud to their schools?

My Dear Young Friends—When sending your very liberal contribution to aid our Board of Publication in furnishing suitable religious reading to the tens of thousands of our brave soldiers in camps, and the thousands sick in our many hospitals, your superintendent requested some information that would interest you in this great and good work of the Board. That information I will now endeavour to give. Within the last few months I have circulated in the camps and hospitals of the west and southwest, more than twenty-eight thousand volumes of little books—more than six hundred and forty thousand pages of tracts—and have furnished religious reading to more than ninety thousand men. These books and tracts are everywhere gladly received and carefully read. To the sick in our hospitals who think so much of absent friends and distant homes, and who are in a condition to appreciate kind words and acts, they are peculiarly welcome. The hearts of hundreds of such men have already been gladened by your donations—hundreds from their sick-beds have thanked you for your thoughtful care. "We are much obliged to you for all this—will you not often come to see us, and talk with us?" is almost invariably the thankful expression of men who have perhaps lain for weeks with nothing to read, and no one to talk to them of a Saviour's love. Very often the eyes speak thanks, though the lips utter no sound. Sometimes I say to soldiers, as I meet them in their camps, and on the streets, "when you have read these books and tracts, please pass them to such as have none. Do not destroy them." And then they always reply, "Do you think we would destroy such nice little books as these?" And they do not destroy them. Chaplains frequently tell me of the care the men have taken of their books, and the evidence of such care is constantly accumulating. "I supplied your regiment last February," said I to a soldier a few days since at the Soldier's Home. "Yes, and the boys have their books yet," was his reply. While visiting the hospital at Columbus, Kentucky, a day or two ago, I saw a well-worn, and apparently well-read German copy of our Soldier's Pocket-Book, lying upon the baluster at the foot of a staircase. Curiosity led me to inquire "whose book is this?" "It belongs to a little German boy, who has gone on an errand. He was reading it and laid it down there till he returned," was the reply of the sentinel on duty. I wished to see this boy, and waited some time for him, but he did not return before I was compelled to leave. In these, and in many other ways I receive daily evidence that our books and tracts are read, are preserved, and are doing good. From chaplains and pious men in the army, I hear almost daily of the good that is accomplished under God's blessing, by these silent, yet powerful messengers of truth. God has most unmistakably set to this work the seal of his approval. He has already blessed it, and now if our churches and Sabbath-schools will only pray for it, and aid it, our Board of Publication will be enabled to accomplish much for the cause of our blessed Saviour.

My dear friends, do not forget this work. Do not forget to pray for it and for me. Your contribution is one which you need not be ashamed to pray over. It has given books and tracts to hundreds of men, and followed by your earnest prayers, it will put a golden crown upon the brow, and a ringing harp in the hands of many a returning prodigal. That all our Sabbath-schools, and all our churches, may contribute as liberally as you have done for this great and good work, is my most earnest prayer.

Your sincere friend, W.

BOARD OF CHURCH EXTENSION.

Corresponding Secretary—Rev. H. I. Coe.
Treasurer—Archibald Gamble, Esq.
No. 88 Market Street, St. Louis, Missouri.

Communications on the subject of Church Extension should be addressed to the Corresponding Secretary, No. 88 Market Street, St. Louis, Mo.

Donations should be sent to Archibald Gamble, Esq., St. Louis, Mo.; or, if more convenient, to J. D. Thorpe, Esq., Cincinnati, Ohio; A. Davidson, Esq., Louisville, Ky.; S. D. Powel, Esq., Treasurer of the Board of Domestic Missions, No. 910 Arch Street, Philadelphia; T. H. Nevin, Esq., Pittsburgh, Pa.; Mr. J. B. Kirtland, Memphis, Tennessee; or to William Rankin, Esq., Treasurer of the Board of Foreign Missions, 23 Centre street, New York.

APPROPRIATIONS FROM THE GENERAL FUND.

No appropriation is made without the recommendation of the Presbytery, or the Church Extension Committee of the Presbytery within whose bounds the church applying for aid is located.

No appropriation is paid until the Board receives a certificate from the Trustees of the church aided, stating that their church lot is properly secured, and that the amount appropriated will complete their house of worship, and leave the whole property free from debt.

Appropriations not called for within two years of the date thereof, are regarded as withdrawn.

"OUR PIOUS FRAUD."

That eminent divine, the late Rev. Dr. James W. Alexander, of New York, in his familiar letters to the Rev. Dr. Hall, of Trenton, New Jersey, says: "I compliment you on the termination of your church-debt. We are making an effort towards ending our own pious fraud." The expression is full of truth and meaning.

In the first place, a church-debt is an attempted fraud on God. It is professing to dedicate to God what is not free from the just claims of man. The refusal of the Lord, under the old dispensation, to accept an offering of the lame, the halt, the blind, or aught defective, the frequent and startling curses denounced by the prophets because the tithes were withheld from the sanctuary, and the doom of Ananias and Sapphira for keeping back part of the price, all teach us the folly and guilt of attempting to defraud the Almighty.

In the second place, a church-debt is usually a fraud on men. It is incurred by the thoughtless and reckless, in the hope that others will pay it, and the concealments and shifts too often used to trap ministers and members into such churches, are most discreditable to religion.

In the third place, a church-debt is almost always a fraud on the church which incurs it. Congregations do not often intend to incur a debt. They unexpectedly find themselves under the load. They have been deceived by those they trusted. In the comparatively few instances where churches intentionally run in debt, they find themselves deceived in their hopes. Of more than a thousand cases that have come under observation, we have not known half-a-dozen where all that was necessary might not, by proper management, have been obtained without a debt, and not one instance in which a church prospered by intentionally incurring a debt. God's curse has seemed to rest on such churches. The secret of spiritual barrenness may often be found in a church-debt.

To avoid incurring debt, both time and care are necessary. In nothing is the old adage, "haste makes waste," oftener verified than in church-building. Let ample time be taken to secure a good plan, with full specifications, and to ascertain what the structure ought to cost. If possible, let a contract be made with a responsible builder, who can furnish good sureties. At the beginning, let a resolution be solemnly taken and adhered to, not to dedicate the building as a sanctuary while a dollar of its cost remains unpaid. Then will God be honoured, and his blessing be likely to rest upon the worshippers.

MORAVIAN SELF-DENIAL.

The Moravians, numbering in 1859 less than thirteen thousand church-members, sustained one hundred and twenty domestic, and three hundred and twelve foreign missionaries. They began the work of foreign missions in 1732, when they had but six hundred members, and have since then sent out more than two thousand foreign missionaries. Is not this a marvellous record of liberality and self-denial?

A GOOD IDEA.

The Presbytery of Bloomington, Illinois, has adopted the plan of placing upon its records every year a statement of what each church has contributed to benevolent objects during the year. The idea is a good one, and, if efficiently carried out, will be likely to result in much good.

A CLERGYMAN'S PLAN.

A clergyman every Sabbath evening sets apart a portion for his charity-fund. If at any time he has not the money, he credits the sum on a benevolent account. As calls are presented, he draws from his fund; and if an urgent call at any time requires more than he has thus set apart, he charges the balance on his benevolent account, to be replaced from future incomes. Thus his contributions are identified with his own enjoyment of religion and growth in grace; he gives "not grudgingly," but of "a willing mind;" applications for charity are met with pleasure; and he feels that in all he receives and expends he is acting as a steward of God. He has also secured the adoption of the system by his congregation, with very encouraging success.

ENCOURAGED TO BUILD.

The Rev. L. Dodd, pastor of the churches of Toledo and Salem, Iowa, writes thus, viz.

"Our church at Toledo is finished, except a little painting which is being done. We rejoice in our success, and thank God for it. Our success at Toledo has stimulated the church of Salem, the other half of my pastoral charge, to make the effort to build. Salem church is entirely in the country, no village being nearer than eight or ten miles. All the members are farmers and their families. They are all in moderate circumstances—rather poor. They are from western Pennsylvania—true-blue Presbyterians. The church numbers thirty members and nine families. We have worshipped, since the organization of the church, in a small schoolhouse. It is uncomfortably seated, dirty, cold, and too small to accommodate the congregation that would attend. The congregation met a few days ago, and resolved that if the Church Extension Board could give them help, they would do their utmost to build. They need a house that will cost $800, and must get $200 of it from the Board. Will you, dear brother, let me know, as soon as practicable, what you can do for us? The church can be built much more economically by beginning soon, and laying in timber and lumber, and getting the workmen employed during the winter and spring, while their work is slack.

"Salem church is ten miles north of Toledo, and thirty miles west of Vinton, in a good country, likely to be thickly populated, and Presbyterians have now the leading influence. There is but little preaching in the place but by me."

ANOTHER CHURCH BURNED.

In the last Record we referred to the burning of our church at Decatur, Indiana. A paper has just reached us with the sad intelligence that our church at Mansfield, New Jersey, was burned on the 6th of December, 1862. It was built in 1838, at an expense of $15,000. Let our uninsured churches take warning from these disasters, and put such an insurance on their sanctuaries as will enable them to rebuild without aid, in case of loss by fire.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Rev. S. P. Herron, of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, has united with the Presbytery of Philadelphia.

At the monthly meeting of the Belfast (Ireland) Presbytery, Dr. Morgan said he had received a letter from Dr. Kirkpatrick, of Dublin, on the subject of finding missionaries for the foreign field. There had been so much difficulty in obtaining missionaries, that the Board of Directors had met to consider the best means of procuring them. The cause which led to the demand for missionaries in India, was that fourteen families had made application at one station to receive instruction in the knowledge of Christianity. By the time the applications had been attended to, it was found that fourteen families had increased to one hundred families. This interest in Christianity it appeared, had arisen entirely from the influence of one convert.

The United Presbyterians of Scotland have lately settled three new ministers in London—Drs. King, Macfarlane, and Edwards. Three churches have been built—very elegant and commodious—within less than three years; and, partly from local resources, and partly from supplemental and Synodical Home Mission funds, each minister has £500 per annum secured to him as a stipend.

The Aged Congregationalist Ministers' Relief Fund in England is comparatively recent in its origin; already it has received, as a beginning, donations to the extent of £50,000 and upwards, while the general Bicentenary Fund, a considerable proportion of which goes to the building of new chapels, or the enlargement of old ones, amounts, according to the latest report, to upwards of £153,000.

The Rev. Lyman Beecher, D. D., died in Brooklyn, New York, on Saturday, Jaunary 10th. Dr. Beecher was eighty-seven years of age at the time of his decease; but for nearly two years had been very feeble in mind and body. He was a man of strong intellect, and in the course of his long life had filled many conspicuous positions.

A great effort will be made in Scotland to raise, even this year, the minimum of Free Church salaries to £150.

Office, No. 320 Walnut Street.

Philadelphia, January 14th, 1863.

FORM OF A DEVISE OR BEQUEST

TO ANY OF THE

BOARDS OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

The State Laws differ so much that no one form will answer in all the States, but in every case it is essential to give the RIGHT CORPORATE NAME.

The oldest Board was originally called the Board of Missions, but is now incorporated under the laws of Pennsylvania under the title of "The Trustees of the Board of Domestic Missions of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

Of the Board of Education the corporate name is, "The Trustees of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

The Board of Foreign Missions is incorporated under the laws of New York, under the style of "The Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

The Board of Publication is incorporated under the laws of Pennsylvania under the style of "The Trustees of the Presbyterian Board of Publication."

The Board of Church Extension of the General Assembly is not incorporated, but the following form of bequest, it is supposed, would be valid.

I bequeath to my executors the sum of ——— dollars, in trust, to pay over the same in ——— after my decease, to the person who, when the same shall be payable, shall act as Treasurer of the Board of Church Extension of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, located in the City of St. Louis, Missouri, to be applied to the uses and purposes of said Board, and under its directions, and the receipt of the said Treasurer shall be a full and legal acquittance of my said executors for the same.

When real estate or other property is given, let it be particularly described.

RESOLUTIONS OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY IN REGARD TO COLLECTIONS.

Whereas, Many of our churches do not contribute to our benevolent enterprises, and whereas, it is desirable to test the power of simultaneous effort; and whereas, an emergency has arisen, requiring the cooperation of all our churches to save our Boards from serious embarrassment, therefore,

Resolved, 1. That this Assembly earnestly request all our churches that have no fixed times for the purpose, to take up annual collections as follows, viz.

For the Board of Domestic Missions on the first Sabbath of November.

For the Board of Foreign Missions on the first Sabbath of January.

For the Board of Education on the first Sabbath of March.

For the Colportage Fund of the Board of Publication on the first Sabbath of May.

For the Board of Church Extension on the first Sabbath of July.

For the Disabled Ministers' Fund on the first Sabbath of September.

Resolved, 2. That when the annual collections cannot be taken up on the days above designated, it be recommended to take them up as soon thereafter as possible.

☞NAME AND POST OFFICE ADDRESS (IN FULL.)

A FAREWELL—SORROWS ON THE FRONTIER.

Minnesota.

Dear Brother—Permit me to express my high appreciation of the kindness and sympathy manifested by the Board toward me. Our relations and correspondence have been most pleasant. Through the Board I have felt identified with our beloved Zion, as one of her standard-bearers at this outpost, and through you I and my family have been the recipients of favours from generous friends—those memorials so cheering to the heart, and so strengthening to the hands of your missionaries, will be long remembered. God bless you and this noble Board in its great work throughout these Western States, where every year the channels for its beneficent operations are widening, and every year the harvests are whitening for the reapers.

Were I to give a full detail of the scenes through which I have passed since last I wrote you, the communication would be too long. A few incidents must suffice. Since I came West, at no time have cares and interests pressed so heavily upon me. You have heard of the terrible Indian outbreak in Minnesota. On the 18th of August the Dacotah or Sioux tribe made a simultaneous attack on the settlements along this frontier. With no previous warning, families, in fancied security, were engaged in their usual avocations, when suddenly bands of Indians rushed into separate neighbourhoods, and commenced the work of death. Neither age nor sex was any security. Families fled, as they could, toward the nearest towns for protection. So appalling is an Indian massacre, and so horrible the cruelties attending it, that a panic seized the people, and, with but few exceptions, no attempt at first was made to stay these bands in their depredations. Indeed many of the settlers had no firearms; many, too, were killed while at work in their fields, so that in the alarm, the confusion, and the effort to save the women and children, the Indians, wild with blood, and mad with revenge, pursued their horrid work of death and burning almost unmolested. Whole districts of country were laid waste, or left desolate of inhabitants. The barbarities of Indian raids in the earlier settlement of our country were re-enacted here, only on a larger scale, and over a wider extent of country. Whole families have been murdered; in many cases only one has been left to tell the sad, sad story of blood and outrage. A physician and his family, with whom I was well acquainted, all sleep their last sleep by savage hands, save one son, who hid in the bushes close by. The mother and children were burned in the house. I saw a woman with her babe, who told me, her father and mother, her husband, her sister and her husband and five children, another sister and her husband and three children, all were killed; out of seventeen persons, she and her little one only escaped. I have listened to scores of cases of terrible desolation and suffering, but space will not permit to relate them. The number of lives sacrificed by these savages I now estimate at not less than one thousand. This to many may seem a large number, but from the best data I can get, I judge the number will not be much, if any, short of this. Were it not for our terrible struggle for national existence, this outbreak would have produced a deeper impression on the public mind throughout the land, and called forth larger contributions for the suffering, the widows, the orphans, the destitute, and the houseless.

More refugees fled to St. Peter for protection than to any other point in the State. By names recorded by committees appointed to furnish supplies, &c., over six thousand persons came to this point. Many fled without any provision, and no clothing but what was on their back. The result was, that for several weeks a terrible pressure was upon us, as this mass of people had to be fed, and many provided with clothing. In this county about thirty farm-houses were burned, and in some cases the grain; bedding and clothing pillaged or burnt, and the crops almost destroyed by cattle before persons were willing to go back and save them. The amount of suffering and destitution thus caused cannot be described. Some families, on the alarm, loaded their wagons and started, but, being pursued, were obliged to leave them on the prairie, and hide in sloughs, cornfields, or among the grass. As a result, hundreds had nothing for their support when they got here. To add to our burdens and anxieties, we knew not at what time this place might be attacked. All our houses and public buildings were crowded. Our church for several weeks was filled with families. Some seventy wounded were brought here, some of whom have since died. No one can have an idea of the pressure, the alarm, and the anxiety that was upon us, unless identified with us during the three or four weeks immediately succeeding the outbreak.

SORROWING, YET REJOICING.

Nebraska.

Dear Sir—My commisson expired on the 1st, when I should have made out my quarterly report. I have, however, delayed, to see, if possible, how things may turn in our church here. It is sad, and pains me to the heart, to see the state of things existing in this once flourishing church, and which would again flourish if encumberances could be removed.

I have long feared the diverse elements in my church would make trouble. I have now learned, by sad experience, that the place for a Congregational element to work is in a fully organized Congregational society, and not in an Old-school Presbyterian church. Here is where all our troubles originated and continue. I would yield and abandon the field, did I not feel that such a course would be ruinous to the cause of Presbyterianism at this place. Public sentiment is almost unanimous in favour of my staying, and, it seems, will not yield. I have now passed the whole matter over to Presbytery, and hope it will be settled at our next meeting, which will be on the first of next month.

At our last communion my soul was rejoiced amid my distresses at the reception of two very worthy persons to membership; one, a worthy young man, and head of a family, on profession of faith; the other, an estimable lady, by letter.

O my dear brother! I could weep day and night, and it would be a relief, if it would avail. My hope and trust is in God. O that all might be overruled for his own glory! My health is very much impaired again. O, is it any wonder the missionary breaks down? None can fully appreciate our positions until they have filled them themselves.

I wish I could write you a more favourable report. As my commission has expired, and the way is not clear at present to ask its renewal, it may be this is my last report. Yet I cannot persuade myself such will be the case. But the Lord only knows what is in the future for any of us.

A GREAT NECESSITY IN NEW STATES.

No want is so deeply felt by us here as that of an effective itinerancy by two or three ministers well qualified by grace, fervour, earnestness, and vigorous health, for that work. Oh, tell us where we shall get the men, and the means for their support! We have noble American, Scotch, (Free Church,) and Irish Presbyterians, many of the latter classes from the British Provinces, scattered as sheep without a shepherd, or rather without a true shepherd, for there are many, "whose own the sheep are not," very willing to get them into their pens, and kindly shear or skin them, and carry off the lambs. Can we not have true and good shepherds for them? We are, it is true, amidst the throes of the most dreadful national convulsions. But is the wall of Jerusalem not to be built because it is troublous times? or must she alone lie waste, without effort to gather, defend, and feed her wanderers?

THE ENGLISH BIBLE THE ACCEPTED STANDARD OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

The following extract on this subject will, we are sure, give great pleasure to the readers of the Record. It is taken from the closing paragraphs of an excellent tractate on "The Bible as an Educating Power among the Nations," by John S. Hart, LL.D, Editor of the Sunday-school Times, and Principal of the Model Department of the New Jersey State Normal School.

"If any one would appreciate fairly the influence of the English Bible, in keeping the language from drifting away from its standards, let him reflect that, in this respect, now, at the end of two centuries and a half, we are not farther from Shakespeare, whose writings were contemporaneous with King James's Version, than Shakespeare was from Spenser, who was only some twenty years his predecessor. The change in two hundred and fifty years since the publication of the English Bible, has not been as great as it was before in less than a single generation. Had it not been for the influence of this marvelous book, Shakespeare might, even now, be to us the almost sealed book that Chaucer is; and Dryden's translation of Chaucer would itself need to be again translated into more modern English. In fact, down to the time of James I., the language was in a constant state of flux. The authors of one generation became obsolescent to the next generation, and obsolete to the third. But, all at once, this onward and downward tendency was arrested. This wandering island became fixed, a solid and enduring continent in mid ocean, receiving from all quarters increments and additions, enriched and enlarged by contributions from every clime, but retaining, in its centre and heart, all its primeval elements, towards which every wandering bark might safely direct its course, as to a haven of rest.

"To this benign result, there can be no doubt that our English Bible has contributed more than all other causes combined. It has done for the English what no societies of the learned, no autocracy of letters, or of science, has been able to do for any other tongue. It has given to our language a fixed point, immovable as the everlasting hills, a solid, granitic formation of rude, homely, elemental Saxon. No floods of change can ever disintegrate or wear away this enduring mass. There it stands, like the upheaved form of our own Alleghanies, with no more depression of its height, no more deflection of its line, than when the rude savage still hunted at its base. Whether our race shall survive for two centuries or for twenty centuries, the great back-bone of the language, the central stock of its elements, its household words, all the grand old terms by which the heart still continues to tell its joys and sorrows, will still be the same that you and I now use, and that our forefathers and foremothers have used for more than ten generations. No legislation, civil or ecclesiastical, can ever weed out from the heart, or banish from the tongue, of the English-speaking race, the words of its English Bible. While infancy still continues to learn at its mother's knee, in its first lisping accents, to say, 'Our Father who art in heaven," or old age with its last expiring breath shall say with Simeon, 'Now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, . . for mine eyes have seen thy salvation;' while the lyric pathos of David, the lamenting wail of Jeremiah, the trumpet notes of Paul, or the subdued majesty of John the Divine, shall find an echo in the devout believer's heart, the words to which these glorious thoughts have been wedded shall live, and shall be a common medium of thought, to all the unborn millions who shall speak this dear English tongue of ours to the end of time.

"Thank God, then, my friends, for the Holy Bible! Thank God, especially, for our good old ENGLISH BIBLE!"

THE GREAT OBSTACLE TO THE EVANGELIZATION OF THE WORLD.

It cannot be said that our church does not give, nor that she does not give largely. A glance at the grand aggregate will satisfy any one that she contributes a very large amount of money annually for religious purposes. During the year ending May, 1862, the whole amount contributed, for all purposes, reached the grand aggregate of $1,710,636. The aggregates of the three preceding years, were as follows: 1859, 2,835,137; 1860, 3,175,304; 1861, $2,525,163. These are large sums of money, and would seem to indicate a great amount of service in the cause of Christ. When we come to analyze this aggregate, however, our first impressions will be considerably modified. It is true, that, in one sense, the entire amount is given to religious purposes. It is certainly proper to consider all the money given for the support of the gospel, in a particular congregation, as given to the cause of Christ. In this light the pastor's salary, the expenses incident to the warming, lighting, repairs, &c., of the church edifice, are very properly embraced under, and exhibited in, the sum total of the church's contributions. At the same time, it must be confessed, that it is chiefly from one of the items embraced, under this grand aggregate, we are to form an estimate of the efforts of our church to carry the gospel to those who are outside the pale of the church, and evangelize a heathen world. The item, significant of the efforts of our church in this direction, is that which designates the amount given to our Boards. It will be seen that this item bears but a small proportion to the sum total of the church's beneficence. Whilst the aggregate for 1862, was $1,710,636, the amount given to the several Boards, was only $319,026, or a little under one-fifth of the whole sum contributed. This ratio seems to preserve a remarkable uniformity. During the past four years, there has been scarcely any variation. In each year the amount contributed to the Boards has been a little more or less than one-fifth of the aggregate of our contributions.

Nor does the whole of this fifth part go to the evangelization of the world outside the pale of the church. It is to be diminished by the amount given to the Board of Domestic Misssions, and by a considerable proportion of the amount given to the cause of Education. It would be difficult to specify the proportion of the sum total contributed to the Boards, available for Church Extension in the realms of heathenism; nor would it be just to estimate the efforts of our church by such a standard. The moral desolations of our great cities, and the more extended, but not less fearful desolations of our rural and village populations, are certainly a legitimate field for evangelistic efforts. The resources of the church for aggression upon the territory of heathenism outside, will, of course, be proportionally diminished by her home efforts at Church Extension. When we subtract from the amount given to the several Boards, the amount given to sustain our Domestic missionaries, and the amount given to educate men for the vacancies which are constantly occurring in the home field, and the amount contributed for the erection of church edifices under the direction of the Board of Church Building, the one-fifth in which we gloried, is brought down, perhaps, to one-tenth! It might be difficult to establish a standard by which the proportion to be devoted to the evangelization of the world might be determined, but we are inclined to think that if the church were met in convention, and her suffrages on this question taken, she would pronounce one-tenth too little. We believe that the church has a higher standard than this. We feel assured that she has a more comprehensive view of her mission in the world. The home field, we know, is large, and the expenditure necessary to its thorough culture, great, but what is its magnitude in comparison of the realms of heathen darkness, on which the eyes of the church have so long been gazing through tears of commiseration? Who can look on the one field, and then on the other, and conclude that nine-tenths of the church's resources should be retained at home, whilst only one-tenth should be devoted to the foreign field?

In the advocacy of this cause we do not counsel retrenchment in the home department, or countenance the diminution of our contributions to the Boards of Education and Domestic Missions. On the contrary, we hold, that it is just as clear that one-tenth, (which is the proportion given to these two insitutions,) is too small an expenditure in the departments they represent, as it is manifest that one-tenth is too small a proportion for the claims of the foreign field. Besides, if the home field is not cultivated, in both the departments of Education and Missions, our operations in the Foreign Mission field must very soon be greatly embarrassed. This remark applies especially to the intimate relation of the Board of Education to the Board of Foreign Missions, as more than one-half of all our foreign missionaries have been educated under the care of the Board of Education.

Our object in these remarks is to draw the attention of our church to the great obstacle which stands in the way of our efforts to reach the perishing millions without the pale of the church. This obstacle is manifestly the amount requisite for the sustentation of existing church organizations. The man who will devise a method by which the church can be emancipated from the financial fetters which hold her back in the great work of evangelizing the world, will prove the greatest benefactor vouchsafed to the church since apostolic times. Who will undertake the task?

EXAMINATION OF CANDIDATES.

The examination of candidates for the holy ministry is one of the most solemn and responsible acts on which a court of the Lord Jesus Christ can enter. It is embraced in the power of the keys, and is one of the most important of all the functions which those who hold the keys of the kingdom are called to perform. Connected, as it is, with the admission or exclusion of those who profess to be called to serve God in the gospel of his Son, it must affect for good or ill, not only the candidate himself, but also the commonwealth of Israel, over which he seeks to be appointed as a ruler, and the household of faith, in which he desires to exercise the functions of a steward of the mysteries of God. Surely the mere statement of the nature and bearing of the office sought, is sufficient to impress every mind, capable of appreciating the value of souls, with the importance of an act which introduces a man into a position in which he becomes the savour of life unto life, or of death unto death, perhaps to thousands of his fellow-men. Is it possible to attach too much importance to an act which may give to the church a Timothy or a Demas, a Knox or a Swedenborg?

In view of the vital importance of this subject, it is gratifying to find that our entire church is more fully aroused to the consideration of it, and more intent upon a thorough supervision of her candidates, than she has been for a long time past. From clerks of Presbyteries, and faculties of Colleges and Seminaries, we are in almost constant receipt of evidence, that a great reformation in the manner in which the examination and reception of candidates are conducted, is in progress throughout our Zion. The actions of the Assembly in 1861 and 1862, (Minutes, pp. 345 and 619,) requiring, on the part of Presbyteries, an annual renewal of their recommendations of young men for aid to the Board of Education, are likely to be productive of great good. We cannot but regard the movement as a token of a blessing held in reserve for our church. When the attention of His people is turned so earnestly to those who are to enter upon the great harvest as reapers, we feel assured that God is about to gladden his people with a greater ingathering than they have yet witnessed.

It has occurred to us, that in a season of inquiry on this great subject, it might not be out of place, as it is manifestly not out of time, to suggest, for the consideration of those whose thoughts are earnestly turned to this subject, some questions which seem proper to be proposed to young men under examination as candidates for the holy ministry. These questions are embraced under two heads: 1. Questions which have reference to the effectual calling of the candidate to salvation. 2. Questions which have reference to his official call to the ministry. Under the former head, we think the following questions, or questions of like import, to be not only admissible, but necessary.

1. What reasons have you for regarding yourself as a Christian?

2. How came you to find your need of a Saviour?

3. What did you discover in Christ that led you to go to him?

4. What evidence have you that you are growing in grace?

Under the head of a call to the ministry, the following outline of examination is submitted:

1. Is it the duty of every pious man to become a minister?

2. What reasons have you for believing that you are called to be a minister?

3. Whether was it with yourself or others that the idea of your entering the ministry originated?

4. Have you ever prayed or spoken in public, at prayer-meetings or in Sabbath-schools?

5. Have you consulted with your pastor on this subject?

6. In considering the subject, to what extent has the foreign field occupied your thoughts?

It is not in the spirit of dictation that the foregoing questions are submitted for the consideration of the brethren, but for the purpose of directing the thoughts of those who hold the keys to the subject. We would feel greatly obliged to any brother who would give us, in writing, his views as to the nature and scope of such an examination. We know of no briefer method of obtaining the views of the brethren, than for each to draft a system of questions covering the two points above specified, viz., the effectual calling and the official call of the candidate. Any suggestions on the general subject, addressed to the office of the Board of Education, will be thankfully received.

ARRIVAL OF MISSIONARIES.

The Rev. W. E. McLaren and his wife, of the mission in New Granada, and the Rev. J. A. Danforth, of the mission in China, reached this city on the 20th ult. We are glad to see that Mr. Danforth's health is greatly improved.

STATE OF PUBLIC AFFAIRS IN JAPAN.

Dr. Hepburn refers to another case of unprovoked assassination, instigated by one of the princes, the victim being an English gentleman. He thinks, in common with other foreigners and many natives, that the elements of a great change are at work in Japan. The differing views of those who advocate and those who oppose intercourse with foreigners, complicated with questions of policy and interest amongst the native rulers, point to further overturnings in the public affairs of the country. Dr. Hepburn speaks hopefully of the future openings for the gospel, and is ready to welcome the missionary who is now on his way to join him in his work.

NOTICES OF THE MISSIONS IN CHINA.

Mr. Nevius mentions that five or six hopeful inquirers have applied for baptism in Tungchow, and as many more show more or less interest in their attention to Christian instruction. Mr. Farnham reports the admission to the church at Shanghai of the most hopeful of their scholars, a youth of nineteen, who seems to be truly a follower of Christ, and wishes to become a preacher of the gospel. An interesting boarding-school for girls, long under the efficient charge of Mrs. Bridgeman, has been transferred to the care of our brethren, with funds for its support for a time. It contains fourteen scholars, and is placed under the charge of Mr. and Mrs. Roberts. Mr. Rankin, while waiting for the arrival of Mrs. Rankin at Shanghai, was favoured with a passage in a steamer up the Yang-tse. He went as far as Kiu-hiang, an important commercial city, which he describes as an interesting post for a missionary station. Mr. Happer was making a visit to Shanghai and Ningpo, a free passage having been offered to him by friends. One of the elders, a teacher, and a member of the church, were all three carried off by the rebels from Sanpoh, and had not been heard from. Last month we reported the liberality of merchants at Shanghai towards the family of Dr. Culbertson. We are happy to report now similar kindness by these friends towards the family of Mr. Gayley. It is with much regret that we learn the death of both the children of Dr. and Mrs. Kerr. We may report also a similar severe bereavement in the family of the late Mr. French of the same mission. His widow and two little boys returned to their friends in this country. Less than a year ago the elder, and, within a few days, the younger of these children have been taken, to be with the Saviour. For these afflicted friends much Christian sympathy will be felt.

NOTICES OF A LAOS INQUIRER IN SIAM.

Mr. McGilvary gives an interesting account of a Laos, who seemed to be a sincere inquirer at Petchaburi. The Laos people live chiefly on the northern confines of Siam, but some of them are found in various parts of the country, and a refugee colony of them is settled near Petchaburi. They are, as a people, destitute of missionary labourers, and it is believed that they are less attached to their superstitions than the Siamese, being in some respects like the Karens. This man has read many of our books, and he often assembles his family and other persons, to whom he reads the gospels. Our mission in Siam ought to be large enough to admit of two men being devoted to this people.

PROGRESS IN INDIA.

Mr. Walsh says: "We had Dr. Mullens last week with us, and as he has just gone over the statistics of India again, you will be delighted to hear that the increase of our Christian population during the last ten years, is about fifty thousand, making the whole number one hundred and fifty thousand. The northwest provinces, including the Punjab, have more than doubled their numbers; so you see that the mutiny has not been without its result. We may believe this is in answer to prayer."

THE MISSION IN NEW GRANADA.

Repeated references have been made to the discouraging aspect of the missionary field in this country, owing partly to its Romanist features, and partly to the civil war. Referring to these things, and partly for personal reasons, the Rev. W. E. McLaren and his wife have returned to this country for the present; and he will, we trust, soon find useful work here in the service of Christ. The Rev. T. F. Wallace and his wife remain at Bogota, and they will have a large place in the remembrance of our readers. The civil war seems to be nearly ended, though it may be too easily renewed. The door for missionary labour may soon become open more fully than it has been for some time. In answer to the prayer of faith, difficulties may be removed, and success granted.

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION.

This is most serious, and even alarming. The rate of foreign exchange has fluctuated a good deal, but for months past it has been almost ruinously high. How long this is to last, is a question about which opinions differ; but there is no question as to the fact, that God, who loves his cause infinitely, has permitted this state of things to come to pass; and it is for wise and gracious reasons, we may feel assured. Human foresight could not have guarded against this trouble, but grace from on high, will enable the people of God to overcome it.

We may believe that great improvement will take place in regard to the rate of exchange at no distant period, but, in any event, it is probable that a high rate will rule for some time. It is a matter which has, of course, received the repeated and earnest consideration of the Executive Committee. They can see but one way to avoid the greatest embarrassment. Various things have been suggested, considered, and laid aside, as affording only temporary relief, and accompanied by greater embarrassment in the end. An increase of donations would remove the difficulty. If all would but give according to their ability, no embarrassment would occur; of this, we feel well persuaded. Ample means are placed in the hands of our Christian people to meet all these calls of duty. But suppose all will not give, what then? We still hope that many will be enabled to make up what is needed. The plan of asking for an extra collection has been spoken of, but the Committee have always been extremely reluctant to make special appeals. It is often difficult to obtain special church collections for one cause without injury to other good objects. And it is important to strengthen whatever is regular and systematic in these church collections. No formal appeal is made in this case, therefore, but the facts ought to be known, and the great danger before us appreciated.

We are glad and thankful to see that so many of the supporters of this cause are fully aware of the true state of the case, and are taking good measures to ward off the threatening danger. We wish our space permitted us to insert some of the letters which have been received at the Mission House on this subject. We will take the liberty of referring briefly to a few examples:

A venerable clergyman, who had already given his donation of $100, forwarded another $100, which he obtained by applying to a friend. A minister in the West sent $100, instead of his usual gift of $30, the former sum being a third part of his salary. Two ladies gave $1000 in addition to their regular gift, "in order to make up for the loss by exchange." A mercantile house sent $500, instead of $200, as heretofore. Far the largest donors are gentlemen who are respected members of the Executive Committee. Many other examples might be mentioned, but we shall refer to but one more. A congregation had sent $150 as their annual contribution, being $50 in advance of last year's remittance. A few weeks ago the pastor of this church forwarded $75 more from his liberal people, in order to make their annual gift "as good as gold." How many might do likewise!

We have faith. We believe that before the mission year ends, April 30th, we shall have great reason to bless God for his care of this cause. He is inclining his people to give very liberally for its support, and this often when their gifts are not in large sums. He is giving a spirit of prayer to many of our people, and their prayers shall be turned into thanksgivings—so we believe. The receipts thus far, in an encouraging degree, exceed those of the same months last year, in the aggregate. Let all do what they can, and surely all will end well.

CORISCO MISSION—AFRICA.

Journal of a Tour to the Pangwe Country, by the Rev. James L. Mackey.

Through "a Paradise for wild Beasts"—Collectors of India Rubber—Encampment on a high Hill.

Friday, 25th.—We rose at dawn and made preparations for an early start. We were glad to see a clear morning; soon the sun shone out, which seems to be a rare thing here, if we judge from what we have seen on our several journeys through this region.

On to-day's walk we crossed several fine streams, tributaries of the Muni, the water beautifully clear. These streams are all interrupted with falls and rapids, some of which are very picturesque. The highest of the hills are covered with timber to the summit. Much of this timber is large, and no doubt valuable. During the whole of to-day's journey we were near no human habitation. Occasionally we started a wild beast from his lair, or surprised a troop of monkeys in the trees, and we frequently heard the calls of the Guinea fowl and other large birds. This region must be a paradise for wild beasts, but it is a solitude for man. The soil has all the appearance of being productive, but the people do not fancy living among mountains. We met during the day some companies of Pangwes, who were out collecting India rubber; these forests abound in the vine which produces it, and the people go out as much as one or two days' journey, and encamp to collect it. Large quantities are now collected here, and carried down to the sea for sale; it all goes to England and France. At half-past two, P. M., we reached the summit of Maveya, one of the principal hills of the range, and near the top of which Mr. Mann had pitched his tent two weeks before. From this point he had been making excursions around among the hills and valleys to collect botanical specimens. During the remainder of the day we rested, and made our preparations for a start early the next day to the Pangwe settlements. Though the place where we encamped was less than two thousand feet above the sea, we found the atmosphere sensibly colder than it was at the base of the mountains. The thermometer ranged at 64° to 65°.

Saturday, July 26th.—This morning our bearers wanted to wait for the guide, but as I had been over the road before which we intended to travel to-day, and some of our men had also been, and, moreover, I was desirous of spending the Sabbath where I could have people to preach to, we concluded to go on. The morning was cloudy, cold, and rainy. Soon after sunrise we were again on our way. Mr. Mann left his tent standing, and his botanical specimens in the care of two of Mbeni's people, who had been there with him from his first arrival.

A "wretchedly bad Road"—Lagabaga's Town—Rumour of War.

Our road to-day was the most wretchedly bad imaginable; for hours we had to travel in the beds of small streams. The hills are very precipitous, running down, in most places, to the very margin of the stream, so that the path very rarely diverges from the water. The streams are in many places choked up with fallen trees, and overhung with vines and thorny plants, making the travelling exceedingly laborious. A little after the middle of the day we reached the site of the old town which Mbeni occupied when I first visited this region; it is now entirely deserted. Half-an-hour more brought us to the first Pangwe towns. We passed on through four small towns, many of the people of each town joining us, until we formed quite a procession. We soon reached Lagabaga's town, where brother Clemens and I had stopped on a previous journey. Here we expected to spend the Sabbath. Though many of the people were absent on our arrival, there were still enough at home to give us a boisterous welcome. Two houses were soon vacated, and given us for our occupancy during our stay, one for Mr. Mann and myself, the other for our people. The head-man of the town, Lagabaga, was not at home on our arrival, but he returned about dark, and he immediately called at our house to see us. We stated to him the object of our journey—to see the country and the people, and to tell them about the true God, and we expressed to him our desire to extend our journey a long way inland. He expressed his pleasure at seeing us, but said the country before us was disturbed with war, and that it would be unsafe for us to proceed far. Whether this was true or not we had no means of ascertaining, but we doubted its truth. This was the first intimation we had that our journey would prove so much shorter than we desired. A rumour of war, true or untrue, will generally so frighten our bearers, that they will not accompany us; and when a positive statement is made, as in the present case, by a man of Lagabaga's influence, we may be sure it is made to prevent our progress, and that it will prove effectual, unless the party travelling is strong enough to go on independent of assistance from native towns along the way. We had not expected to take the men from Mbeni's town with us far into the Pangwe country. Our plan was to leave them, and engage Pangwe bearers, but when we found the head-man talking about war, we knew that none of the people that he could control would be permitted to accompany us.

In all our previous visits to the Pangwes, we found a scarcity of food; their towns were new, and they had but little produce cultivated near them; but now we found food both abundant and cheap. Our whole party was supplied with all we needed to last us over the Sabbath, for goods that cost us but a few cents at the sea-shore.

Sabbath Services—Religious Notions of the People—Number of the Pangwe People.

Sabbath, 27th.—Several times to-day I had opportunities of delivering to a small group of people the message of salvation, and they listened, generally, with respectful attention. At one of our meetings I endeavoured to find out what ideas the people had about God, and our relations to him. Their impressions, I found, were very much the same as other tribes with whom we had had more frequent intercourse. They believe in the existence of a creator, who lives above, and who is a spirit, and never seen by men until after they die. They seem to have no conception of a holy God, or of his hatred of sin. They believe, also, in many other spirits, who have a large share in the government of the world, and seem, in their view, to be independent of God. Their fetiches are their protectors, and they build upon them a system of providence which robs God of his government over the world. Fetiches are not objects of worship, but they have an intimate connection with the spirits that they suppose exist around them. In regard to the creation of man, they told me that they believed that after God had created the world, he made one man and one woman, and that from these all the people in the world had sprung. After the creation, God had placed them somewhere to the westward of Africa, and that as they increased, their descendants came round by the north, and settled the country to the eastward, and then they emigrated down towards the sea, as the various tribes in Western Africa are now moving. They have a feeling of accountability, but how it is to be rendered, they seem not to know. They seem to have no conceptions of the resurrection of the body, and when I introduced the subject they made objections to it. They think they can understand easily how the soul lives for ever, but how the body could be raised after it has turned to dust, they could not understand. Their statement of what they believed on all the above-mentioned points, and on others, gave me an opportunity of stating to them the doctrines of God's revealed word, in such connection with their own notions as made an impression upon their minds. I ought to remark, however, that their ideas on all religious subjects are extremely vague. Scarcely two persons questioned separately will give the same account of their superstitions, especially in details. This, perhaps, arises from the fact that they have no written standards, and no priesthood to give system to their crude notions, and to teach them.

The Pangwe people are very numerous. Any estimate of their numbers, with our present imperfect knowledge of the boundaries of the tribe, would be a mere guess; but they are known to be very populous; and no doubt they number as many people as any other ten tribes united between them and the sea. They inhabit the high lands drained by the extreme branches of the Muni, Munda, and Gaboon rivers, but how far they extend into the interior we have not been able to ascertain with any degree of certainty. We have penetrated only about twenty miles into their country, but evidently this region has been but recently settled by them.

I made an effort to get a boy and girl to take with us to Corisco. The head-man of the town, Lagabaga, promised me a son of his, but they would not consent to allow a girl to go. The boy was given up to me by his father, and was ready to accompany me, but his mother interfered, and was so violent that I was compelled reluctantly to leave the boy behind.

Hinderances—End of the Journey—Returning—Bad news.

Monday, 28th.—Our guide had still not overtaken us. We found also this morning that the bearers from Mbeni's town were unwilling to go further on the road which we wanted to go. They said a prisoner had been taken from a town ahead, who was still in custody at their town, and if they went there, some of them would be captured, and perhaps killed, or at least kept until the release of the prisoner. We concluded then to leave them, and go on with our other men and a Pangwe guide. We could get no guide to go with us more than one short day's journey; though we found a man who had come from a town three days' journey interior, we could not induce him to accompany us back to his town. The whole of the people seemed to have conspired together, quietly, to prevent our going farther inland. As we could not go without a guide, we were compelled reluctantly to terminate our journey with this day's walk. We reached Mangatche about the middle of the day, having walked through a fine country seven or eight miles. Mangatche is a large village, which we had not visited before, numbering sixty houses. The people did not receive us in a very friendly manner. They were not disposed to let us have any food, influenced, no doubt, by the Pangwes who accompanied us. We remained an hour or two, during which time I had an opportunity of speaking to a crowd of people who had never before heard the word of life. The same story of war was repeated here which was told us at Lagabaga's town, and which we knew was false; but though false, it effectually blocked up our way. We returned late in the evening, weary and sad, that the people of this fine country should so little apprehend their own interests. On our return to Lagabaga's town, we found the bearers whom we had left in charge of Mr. Mann's things had cut open the goods left with them, and had stolen out a considerable amount. The guide that we left behind was also there, and had a very plausible lie manufactured to account for his delay. The only reply I made to him was to order him out of the house, with the request that he would stay among those whom he might be better able to deceive.

Tuesday, 29th —After a hard day's walk through a miserable road of mud and water, we reached the tent in the mountain, which we had left on Saturday morning with such high hopes of making a long and successful journey. Two of my Benga men had reached the tent a little while before my arrival. As I came forward I observed they looked rather depressed. Before I was seated, one of them handed me an open letter, saying, this was a dark day for us. I took the letter, and saw it was from Jumba, the Scripture-reader whom we had left at Mbeni's town. It was addressed to me, and the following is nearly a literal translation of it:

"My dear Father—Your boat has been taken and carried off, I do not know by whom; but I think it is not destroyed. Come with all speed! I want to see you as soon as possible."

Here was no pleasant predicament to be placed in. We were going to a town of robbers, and our means of getting away had been cut off. They had been so successful in their first theft, we did not know but this was a plan laid to strip us of what we had left; but we felt confident in having both the ability and the will to defend our property while we were with it. Before retiring, we arranged that I should depart the next morning, and make all speed to Mbeni's town, and see if any tidings could be gained about the boat; and Mr. Mann would pack up and follow with his bearers. He wished, moreover, to measure the height of two of the highest hills in the range which he had not yet ascended. He expected to reach Mbeni's a day after I would.

A Forced March—How to Proceed.

Wednesday 30th.—We rose more than an hour before daylight, and had our breakfast over, I started as soon as the dawn appeared. My own Benga men and two of Mbeni's people accompanied me. We made a forced march; but much of the way being down the mountain, the labour was not so great as we found it travelling the other way. We reached Mbeni's town as dark came on, having rested an hour and a half in the middle of the day. As soon as convenient, after my arrival, I called on Mbeni, to inquire what he knew about the boat. He professed to know only that it was stolen away in the night from his beach, but by whom it was taken, or where, he could not tell. I asked them if they had a canoe that they could furnish me to go down the river in, and I thought I could succeed in finding who had taken it. They were not agreed to my going, but they promised to make an effort the next day to find where it was themselves. I urged them to act promptly, and not bring a worse name on their town than it would have by what had already transpired, and told them if they could neither find my boat, nor furnish us with a canoe, I would attempt to go overland to the sea, and would look for some way of punishing them for their thieving and ill-treatment of us.

Thursday, 31st.—To-day we ascertained definitely where the boat had been taken to. I felt somewhat relieved to know that it was with no connivance of Mbeni's people that it was taken. The people who took it, we learned from a company who came up the river to trade, live at Detz town, twelve or fourteen miles below. This was known, no doubt, to Mbeni before; but still, with all the efforts I could make, I could get nothing done towards recovering it. I made another effort to-day, which proved also a failure, to get a canoe and go with my own men down the river Mr. Mann arrived late this evening, much fatigued with his walk, and with the labour of climbing the mountains to measure their height.

Further Attempts to get down the River.

Friday, August 1st.—This morning we set off early to a town seven or eight miles distant, where we knew there were canoes, to try to hire two or three of them, to take us and our baggage down the river, at least far enough, so that we could communicate with our friends at Ilobi or Corisco. Late in the evening we had the satisfaction of seeing three canoes coming, fully manned. They were ready to take us down to a place within ten miles of the mouth of the river, but would not go any farther. We hastened to get our baggage all out, hoping to get off before dark; but before having our things taken to the canoes, we wished to know what the canoe-men wanted for their services. We soon found their demands were so outrageous that we could not meet them at all, so we abruptly broke of negotiations, and had our things carried back into the house again. We began to feel now that we must make some extraordinary exertion, or we would be detained an indefinite period. I found, on consulting with the head-men again, that they were unwilling for me to leave the town, and go down the river without my boat, as they feared a man-of-war might be sent up to seek redress They told me they intended to catch some one from the town where the boat was, and hold him as a hostage for the return of the boat. This plan was entirely distasteful to me, as, in the ordinary course of African diplomacy, the palaver would not be settled in this manner for a month. It would lead to the blockade of the river by the people below, and we would not be able to communicate with our friends. I dissuaded Mbeni from this course, and proposed that Mr. Mann go down the river in the night by a small canoe, and get assistance from Ilobi and Corisco. We had learned that the people at Detz's town would resist the passage of any canoe down the river; it was therefore necessary, to escape an open fight, for the canoe to go down under cover of the night. After some trouble, we succeeded in hiring a small canoe, capable of carrying four men. In this Mr. Mann started. He and his men were well armed, so as to resist an attack in case it should be made. They passed the town undiscovered, and reached the mouth of the river in safety.

"Virtually a Prisoner"—How Employed—Arrival at Home—Difficulty of reaching the Interior.

I remained, virtually a prisoner, at Mbeni's town for five days; but I occupied my time in starting a little school, and preaching to the people every evening. I always had a houseful at night, and I trust the time that I was detained was not spent in vain.

Mr. Mann went on to Corisco, and got Imunga, one of the principal head-men, to come up the river to settle the palaver. Our boat, we found, was taken by Detz's people, in order to bring trouble on Imunga. He had recently gone by them on a trading expedition to the Bondemo people, thus cutting them off from the profits of trade with the interior. They seized our boat with the expectation that we would retaliate upon Imunga, according to African custom.

I finally reached home safely, to the great joy of the friends in Corisco. Many extravagant stories had got into circulation of the treatment I had met with among the wild people of the interior. Much rejoicing and noisy demonstration was shown by the Bengas on my arrival. Some of them seemed glad that they had an argument now against my going again, and triumphantly asked me if I would go again to the Pangwe country. That is the farthest point interior that they have any conception of. I answered them only by quoting the command of our Saviour under which I acted, Mark xvi. 15, and asking if they had never heard it before.

The foregoing journal, if not interesting in regard to results accomplished, may be instructive as showing some of the difficulties at present in the way of carrying the gospel speedily into the interior. But I have no doubt but the way will be gradually opened in the providence of God, as fast, if not much faster, than we can train men to go forward in it. For this, patient and persevering labour and prayer are necessary.

CHINA—SHANTUNG MISSION.

Views of the Missionary Field in Shantung.

The Rev. D. D. Green writes as follows from Chee-foo, China, September 11th, 1862.

. . . . We came here yesterday on our way to Ningpo. Mrs. Green has recovered her usual strength, and my own health is very good. I had hoped to have itinerated some during my stay here, but the epidemic has rendered it quite impracticable. I can only speak of this field, therefore, as to how it appears to me from being only here and at Tungchow, and along the coast between here and there.

1. This port is beyond all question the commercial centre for all the east end of this province, especially so far as foreign commerce is concerned.

2. The Chinese population of this port is rapidly increasing; it has perhaps doubled within two years, and at present contains about ten thousand people, almost exclusively business men, whose families remain at home back in the country. The morals of the place are very bad, from the fact that it is only a gathering together of men. This is true, however, of Yentai proper, and not of the villages around it, of which there are several in sight, containing an aggregate population of many thousands. These villages and towns are pleasantly located, besides which there are hundreds of villages along the valleys near here, and two or three walled cities within about twenty miles. Commerce with the interior is carried on mainly by way of this port. This is done either along the coast, and up the rivers by boats, or across the country by pack mules.

3. Tungchow is the literary centre of the Promontory, and as such must always, or at least for a long time to come, be an important place. It is, also, comparatively a large place, comparing with this as ten or twelve to one. Of itself it is quite a mission field, and is surrounded by many large towns and villages.

4. Tungchow is not apparently a business place at all. To such an extent is this the case, that in sending letters to Whang-hien, a distance from Tungchow of sixty li, they sometimes send letters here one hundred and sixty-five li, and forward them from here to Whang-hien eighty li.

5. Tungchow is a much pleasanter field than this, from the simple fact that the minds of the people are much less distracted by the bustle and hurry of business, and they have more leisure for reading and hearing than those living here. There is, also, more reason to hope for the immediate fruits of the gospel there than here. To such an extent is it cut off from the outside world, that the prospect of making it a sanitarium is to me not very inviting. For example, it is not very pleasant to carry a sick person sixty-five miles on a horse-litter, and yet that is at present almost the only mode of conveyance from here there. It very often occurs that feeble persons cannot make so great exertion; and again at times even these conveyances are not obtainable, or the roads are impassable. As yet there are no coasting boats.

6. From the above and similar considerations, it would seem to me bad policy to settle all the men that can be spared for Shantung at Tungchow.

7. All the reports which I have had from the east end of the Promontory go to show that the people are simple-hearted, and apparently well-disposed towards Christianity. Again, China everywhere is in an unsettled state, so that it does not seem prudent to commence extensive operations entirely out of the reach of foreign protection. Not that we are to trust to the horses and chariots of Egypt, but that common prudence is to be exercised in missionary as well as in all other operations.

8. I think, therefore, if I were choosing a station in Shantung province to labour in myself, it would be in the vicinity of Chee-foo. The place itself is small, but its position, commercially, is central, while at the same time it has a good geographical position for reaching the east end of the Promontory by itineration, and is also comparatively safe and easy of access. But for the present I leave the subject for those who know more of the country, &c. I do not think that Tung-chow ought to be given up. It seems to be well chosen. We expect to leave for Shanghai by the German brig "Argus," to-morrow.

Yours very affectionately,

D. D. Green.

MISCELLANY.

THE BLOODLESS REVOLUTION IN JAPAN.

One of the strangest of recent events is a complete revolution in the government of the mysterious island of Japan. The Tycoon is by it deprived of all but nominal power, and the government transferred from Jeddo, where he resides, to Miako, where the spiritual Emperor dwells. The system thus superseded was arranged just 262 years ago. By it the Tycoon always held the great Daimois, or Japanese barons, in his power. To preserve his supremacy over the chiefs of the nation, it has always been the policy of the Tycoon to make the Daimois spend the larger portion of their time at Jeddo, and to keep their wives and children there as hostages. The Daimois are now giving effective power to the shadow of an Emperor at Miako, while retrenching that of the Tycoon at Jeddo; and the highest class of those potent lords will not in future be bound to visit the latter capital, should they condescend to appear there at all, more than once in seven years. Of this, the consequence must be the ruin of that city, so far as it depends upon the establishments maintained there by the nobility, and the extinction both of the lustre and of the authority of the second person in the nation. The Tycoon, we are told, has been ordered to pay a visit to the Emperor, and his abdication or death is expected to follow. In that case the representatives of the European powers would have to desert Yokohama, and repair to the court of the Emperor.—Presbyterian Witness, Nova Scotia.

A VOICE FROM TENNESSEE.

One of our labourers writes as follows:

Before the last raid upon the railroad passing through western Tennessee, and terminating at Columbus, that place was a very important military point. Soldiers were constantly passing through it on their way to Tennessee and Mississippi. In November last I placed about seventy-five dollars' worth of our books, tracts, papers, and music, including the usual proportion of Soldier's Pocket-Books, in the hands of the Rev. W. K. Talbot of that place, who cheerfully undertook their distribution. Subsequently Mr. Talbot wrote to me of his work as follows:

"Columbus, Kentucky, Dec. 14, 1862.

"My Dear Brother—Your books are all gone, and I am distressed that I cannot supply more. You know I give sparingly, here a little and there a little. Many beg me to send them books and tracts, through their chaplains, after they have advanced South. Oh, how I wish our Board of Publication could supply the soldiers who plead so earnestly! Can you not send me more? I have sent books and tracts to some regiments on the advance near Grenada, and to some at Corinth not before supplied. You would have blessed God to hear the soldiers thank the Old-school Presbyterian church so heartily for these books. 'God bless the Old-school Presbyterians!' they would exclaim; 'no other church has sent us books.' If you can, let me have more.

Yours truly, W. K. T.

AN ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

The Board has been sending numerous packages of books and tracts to the army of the Potomac. The following is from one of its chaplains.

Camp near Fredericksburg, Va.

Cor. Sec. Board of Publication:

Dear Sir—Your contribution of books and tracts came to hand a few days before Christmas. The men of our regiment rejoiced to see them. "The Soldier's Pocket-Book" is a favourite with all. The soldiers are anxious to have reading matter. I certainly think that you are doing a great work. Your tracts are like angels of mercy in our hospitals. In that day when all are rewarded for their labours, the donors of religious works to our suffering men in the army will be crowned with glory. Could our people at home but be here and witness the joy of the soldier on receiving such books, our Board of Publication would certainly be well sustained. Accept the thanks of our regiment for the handsome package sent us.

Yours in Christian fellowship,

A. J. H.,

Chaplain 133d Reg't Penna. Vols.

ANOTHER.

Maryland Heights, Jan. 22, 1863.

Rev. Wm. E. Schenck, D. D.

Dear Brother—This day I had brought to the door of my tent, in good order, the package of books you were so kind as to send us. I hasten, on behalf of the brave men I serve, to return our acknowledgments. Every one seems to be gratified with your kindness. Several of the officers have been in to-day admiring the books, and before I had taken them out of the paper in which they lay, each requested one to read. I have no doubt they will be read with interest. My prayer is, that God will bless them to their spiritual good. "The Soldier's Pocket-Book" is a gem, and my only regret is, that I cannot give a copy to each man. I hope to find some good friend that will furnish us with two or three hundred more. Earnestly desiring that, through the liberality of generous patrons, you may abound more and more in the good work you are prosecuting, I remain, in Christian bonds,

Yours affectionately,

J. M.,

Chaplain of 1st Maryland Reg't Vols.

DISTRIBUTIONS IN MEMPHIS, TENNESSEE.

Memphis, Tenn.

Much of my time here has been spent in the large Overton Hospital, which contains at this time fifteen hundred patients. There is no chaplain there, and scores of these men could tell me of weeks passed there without a page of religious reading, or the sight of a religious teacher. These were, to my mind, sufficient reasons why I should give these hundreds all the attention within my power, and, as far as possible, supply their present wants. And so I have gone through this large hospital, stopping at every bed, conversing briefly, yet pointedly, with every man, and leaving on every cot such religious reading as the circumstances seemed to require. That great practical question of profit and loss, the salvation of the immortal soul, I have tried to bring home to every man's conscience. Trusting to an unfailing promise, I have endeavoured faithfully to sow the seed. I know how vain is all this labour without the saving influences of the blessed Spirit, and I trust evidences of His gracious presence have not been wanting. I have found, I think, the earnest cry of the Philippian jailer upon the lips of many a sick man, and have seen penitential tears flowing from many eyes. "Do come again and see me;" "I thank you for this visit," have been the earnest exclamations of many, as, taking them by the hand, I urged them to prayer and full confession of their sins, and commended them to God and the word of his grace. The usual variety of cases were found. Here were those who were endeavouring to live near to Christ, and those who had recently followed him afar off, but now desired to get very near; here were careless sinners and returning prodigals—to each and all of whom I endeavoured to give a portion in due season. It has been an interesting labour, and I have felt that it was indeed good to be here. That the revelations of the last great day will tell of good done to the souls of men, I do not allow myself to doubt.

When General Sherman's division left the city, one thousand sick men were unable to accompany their respective regiments, and were left behind, exclusive of those in the Overton Hospital. To them my attention was next directed, and every one of them was supplied with religious reading. Many of them had not seen a religious tract or book for months, and all were very grateful for such as I was able to give them. The number of sick and wounded soldiers visited and supplied with religious reading in this city, is at least twenty-five hundred.

Those in health have not been neglected. Immediately after General Sherman's army marched into the interior, other troops began to arrive, and there are now in Memphis not less than twenty thousand soldiers. I have found so many chaplains anxious to obtain religious reading for their very destitute regiments, that my stock is exhausted; every page is spoken for, and the last page of it will soon be distributed. The "Pocket Book" and tracts, the sheet-music and "Visitors," are all cordially welcomed. Since coming here, and from this point, I have furnished religious reading to at least twelve thousand men, nine-tenths of whom were entirely destitute. With God's promise sounding in his ears, will any one believe that this seed will yield no precious fruits? Far from us be such unbelief!

Not the least encouraging feature in my work here, has been the voluntary and unprejudiced testimony, borne by chaplains and others, as to the good results already witnessed from the distributions of our books and tracts among soldiers. A few report conversions, all speak of increased thoughtfulness, and attention to religion on the part of many of their men. I mention this for the encouragement of those who have hitherto aided us with their money, and with their prayers, and of that far greater number who are thinking about doing something for our good work.

More forcibly, during the last few days, than ever before, a most important question has pressed itself upon my attention. It is this,—and I desire to ask it of every church, and of every Sabbath school, of every man and of every woman in this broad land of ours,—What kind of men are these soldiers to be when they are disbanded and returned to their homes? Is there a man, woman, or child, in all these loyal States, who has not a direct personal interest in this matter?

During the past few months, more than seven hundred and fifty thousand of our citizens have been called from civil to military life. They are our friends, our husbands, our fathers, our brothers, and our sons. They are bound to us by a thousand tender ties. They have gone from our churches and our Sabbath-schools, from our homes and our firesides. The camp is too often the school of vice. As is always the case when large bodies of men, the good and the bad, are thrown promiscuously together, these men are exposed to great, peculiar, and manifold temptations, which they would never have encountered elsewhere. We do not expect these men to be soldiers for life. We expect ere long to receive them back to civil life, to our communities and our churches, to our homes and our firesides. What kind of men shall they be when they come back to us? Shall they be sad, moral wrecks, over which fathers and mothers, brothers and sisters shall shed scalding and bitter tears? Shall they be moral lepers, polluted and polluting? Shall they be bloated drunkards, profane swearers, idle, worthless, and licentious men, carrying a moral pestilence into every household? This is precisely what our Board of Publication, and other kindred societies, are trying to prevent.

To prevent such a return as this, its agents are visiting these soldiers, and conversing and praying with them in camps and hospitals. Through its agents, and through chaplains and other pious officers, it is putting suitable religious reading into the hands of our soldiers, bringing them under healthy influences, and throwing around them strong moral breastworks against temptation. It would return these men to civil life, better men, and better citizens, than when they left it. Or, if it cannot do all that, it would return them to their homes as good men as when they first entered a camp. With scarce a ripple, and without a single stain upon its fair surface, civil society received into its bosom the disbanded army of Cromwell. That army was uncontaminated and uncontaminating. In precisely this condition would the Presbyterian Board of Publication return our army when this sad war is over. Its work is not, therefore, exclusively and narrowly a religious work—it rises to the height of the truest and sublimest patriotism. And it should receive the cordial support, not of Christians alone, but of patriots every where. For the truth remains, that republican institutions find no stable base, save the virtue of the people. Let, therefore, every Christian, every patriot, aid our Board of Publication in its noble efforts to save our returning army from profligacy and vice.

Yours truly, W.

TWO WAYS TO DO GOOD.

I. You can lend or give tracts or books to others. Colonel Gardiner's mother put a good book into his box when he went abroad. That book did him good. Ruth Clark, who was a pious servant, wished very much to do good to the souls of her friends. She kept on trying to do them good for above thirty years. Though her wages were not large, she used often to send good books, and letters of kind and earnest advice, to her sisters, brothers, and their children. She generally sent at the same time some little useful present, to make them take in good part the advice or books. A farmer in Norway, twenty-five years old, used to go about in many places with tracts, which he sold or gave to the people. These did much good, for fifty thousand poor persons began to seek after God about the time they first knew this good man.

II. You can read the Bible and good books to those who will listen. A teacher once went into a wretched cottage. In it lay a dead body, and a poor woman was dying on a bed of straw. Near her were her two little girls; one of them, thirteen years old, had a Bible in her thin hands, and she was trying to comfort her mother out of it. These were Sabbath-school girls. They had had no food for some days. The next day the mother died very happy; her daughter had taught her about Jesus out of the Bible.—Selected.

A TRACT BURNED, BUT NOT DESTROYED.

Twenty years ago, the late Daniel Fanshaw gave a tract to a young infidel, in whom he took a deep interest He was indignant, saying: "What right has he to interfere with me or my opinions?" To show his contempt, he drew a match, and setting fire to the tract, lit a cigar with it; and, as he supposed, dismissed the matter from his mind. Not long since, on looking over the list of deaths in his paper, this man saw the name of Mr. Fanshaw. The transaction of twenty years ago came to his mind. The contents of the tract, which he had read before burning, to show his coolness as well as contempt, came back to his mind. He attended the funeral, was a deep mourner, became convicted of his sin, was converted, and is now rejoicing in hope of the glory of God.

BOARD OF CHURCH EXTENSION.

Corresponding Secretary—Rev. H. I. Coe.
Treasurer—Archibald Gamble, Esq.
No. 88 Market Street, St. Louis, Missouri.

Communications on the subject of Church Extension should be addressed to the Corresponding Secretary, No. 88 Market Street, St. Louis, Mo.

Donations should be sent to Archibald Gamble, Esq., St. Louis, Mo.; or, if more convenient, to J. D. Thorpe, Esq., Cincinnati, Ohio; A. Davidson, Esq., Louisville, Ky.; S. D. Powel, Esq., Treasurer of the Board of Domestic Missions, No. 910 Arch Street, Philadelphia; T. H. Nevin, Esq., Pittsburgh, Pa.; Mr. J. B. Kirtland, Memphis, Tennessee; or to William Rankin, Esq., Treasurer of the Board of Foreign Missions, 23 Centre street, New York.

APPROPRIATIONS FROM THE GENERAL FUND.

No appropriation is made without the recommendation of the Presbytery, or the Church Extension Committee of the Presbytery within whose bounds the church applying for aid is located.

No appropriation is paid until the Board receives a certificate from the Trustees of the church aided, stating that their church lot is properly secured, and that the amount appropriated will complete their house of worship, and leave the whole property free from debt.

Appropriations not called for within two years of the date thereof, are regarded as withdrawn.

Fiscal Year closes April 1st, 1863.

NOT IN DEBT.

Letters lately received at the office show that in some quarters an impression exists that the Board of Church Extension is heavily in debt, beyond its ability to pay. The fact, however, is, that the Board could at one day's notice pay every liability it has incurred. Previous to the war, we were in the habit of anticipating our income, to some extent, in our appropriations; but even then paid every appropriation as soon as due, without borrowing a dollar. Since December, 1861, we have not made a single appropriation without having the money in the treasury to pay it. With a few exceptions, some aid has been given to every church that has furnished the necessary papers, though the amount granted has very often fallen below the amount asked, and really needed by applicants. From April 1st, 1862, to February 1st, 1863, (ten months,) we have received contributions amounting to $12,604. During the same period applications have been put on file amounting to $21,111.57.

INCREASED POWER AND PERMANENCE.

We commend to our readers the following letter from Rev. John Frothingham of Galesville, Wisconsin. He says:

"Our little church here, through me, the chairman of the Presbyterial Committee, makes application to the Board of Church Extension for two hundred dollars, to assist in completing a church edifice. We propose to build one costing near one thousand dollars. It seems like a great undertaking, and the times frown upon us; but we must have a place to worship in more suitable than the wretched room which serves us in common with a score of base uses. I head the subscription with one hundred dollars, as a sort of forlorn hope to lead other fainting hearts, and not because I am able to spend so much. But I will trust in God to get it, for his blessed cause demands a house of worship, and doubtless some sacrifice on our part, which I rejoice to make if Zion may be the gainer thereby.

"I wish that our generous Eastern churches knew what increased power and permanence a neat little edifice gives to the gospel which we preach. How much it strengthens and encourages Zion's watchmen, and crowds her gates with many who need some such inducement to come up to her stated worship. It is common to speak of the gospel's power anywhere, even in a barn, if the Spirit be present; but though the Lord may dwell in tabernacles a long time, and make his presence felt there, the hour comes when it is the duty of his servants to build his temple; and for this I believe the Lord has a special blessing. May the rich of the Church help us in this work!"

ST. PAUL A WORKER.

St. Paul never borrowed money. If he had none, and wanted it, he worked for it. The kind Christian people of Philippi sent to him once and again; but they could not always keep him in funds. When he came to Corinth, he hired himself as a journeyman. St. Paul was not ashamed to work. See Acts xx. 34. And we could tell our readers of some bishops who were just like St. Paul in this respect. Rather than go in debt or borrow money, they preferred working. Paul was not afraid of losing his social position, because he might be called a mechanic. If we have no money, do not let us beg it or borrow it; but if God has given us health and strength to work, let us work for it. If an apostle did not lower his office by working as a day labourer, no more will Christian ministers of the present time. We have no sympathy with that littleness of the present day, which makes us think clergymen can do nothing to support their families except preaching. If the church will not support them as preachers, then let them do as St. Paul did. We have apostolic example.

There is much to be learned by the ministry in this matter. No minister ought to starve. He owes a duty to his family which is exceedingly great. St. Paul, writing to a clergyman, tells him: "If any provide not for his own, and especially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel." Having inspired authority, we cannot err when we say that every clergyman must take care of his family. We do not say, God forbid that we should say, it is his duty to support them extravagantly. Far from it. But he is to support them on healthy food, in plain clothes; he is to give his children a good education. And we say, if the church does not enable him to do this, then let him work at something else to help on. Let such remember St. Paul. All day long he was working hard with his hands; and at night, or on the Sabbath, or both, he was preaching the gospel. We say once more, if you want money to support your family, work for it. You have apostolic authority. Working, you are in the line of the apostolic succession.

CONTRIVING TO GIVE.

A shoemaker being asked how he contrived to give so much, replied, that it was easily done by obeying St. Paul's precept in 1 Cor. xvi. 2: "Upon the first day of the week, let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him." "I earn," said he, "one day with another, about a dollar a day, and I can, without inconvenience to myself or family, lay by five cents of this sum for charitable purposes; the amount is thirty cents a week. My wife takes in sewing and washing, and earns something like two dollars a week, and she lays by ten cents of that. My children each of them earn a shilling or two, and are glad to contribute their penny; so that altogether we lay by us in store forty cents a week; and if we have been unusually prospered, we contribute something more. The weekly amount is deposited every Sunday morning in a box kept for that purpose, and reserved for future use. Thus, by these small earnings, we have learned, that it is more blessed to give than to receive. The yearly amount saved in this way is about twenty-five dollars; and I distribute this among the various benevolent societies, according to the best of my judgment."

PLEASANT ADDITIONS.

Pennsylvania.

Although the past year has been one of toil, yet it has been one of blessing. God has especially blessed us the last quarter. In one of our churches we have had special manifestations of his presence. At first, two came forward and presented themselves to the church. There was a desire for more religious meetings. Brother S. came and assisted me a part of the time. We had preaching more or less for four weeks. There was no excitement. There appeared to be a good degree of candor. The Holy Spirit wrought a great change in many hearts. Surely, the Lord has been with us. We believe God has given us souls as seals of our ministry and crowns of our rejoicing. We have had thirteen additions to our little infant Sugar Loaf church. So you see we have added more than half the number we had before. What a blessed privilege it is to be permitted to labour where there is a harvest of souls! We have great reason to rejoice that God has put it into the hearts of so many to confess Christ before men. How much we lack faith in the promises of God. "I will be inquired of by the house of Israel, to do these things for them."

I believe we have reason to depend very much upon the fervent prayers of God's children. We cannot expect the outpouring of God's Spirit unless there is some one or more pleading with God with strong crying and tears.

I fear few realize the agony of soul necessary to a sinner's being born into the kingdom of Christ. The additions are principally from those who aided us in the support of the gospel before. I have just written a subscription, for circulation, to see if we can raise money enough to build a manse. I have been thinking about it for some time. We do not know what we can do until we try. I shall be better able to inform you how we get along next quarter. A missionary in this place has his hands full. He must use his money as well as his mind. I have had to send for some ten or twelve dollars' worth of books for the use of my field—Confessions of Faith, Hymn Books, Catechisms, &c.

PROGRESS.

Iowa.

Dear Brother—This is the conclusion of the first quarter of our fourth year on this field. We look around us and remark the changes and improvements during that time, and talk of them as evidences of the goodness and mercy of our God.

Three years ago we felt, O how can we consent to live in this desolate place, where there is hardly any thing like what we were accustomed to. Now we have our own house of worship, and our Sabbath-school, and our congregations are good and attentive. The other churches make extra efforts, and draw off a few of the floating part of the congregation sometimes; but they soon return to us again. The people here were accustomed to think and feel that their first great duty to God was to join the church. And at one of these exciting meetings, a man was heard to say aloud to a young man in church, "Come, Zeke, come along and join the church, if it is for nothing else than to please your friends." Now men begin to feel that something else is requisite as a preparative to such a step.

Our progress here is slow, but it is very certain. God is not leaving our efforts to a fruitless career; and yet the developements of progress are not rapid. Last Sabbath two weeks ago, I had an opportunity of speaking of Christ to several soldiers, who were formerly accustomed to attend our meetings. I was encouraged to witness so much feeling among them. Last Sabbath week I saw a man at church who has not been seen at any place of worship for two or three years, his neighbours say. After meeting I obtained an introduction, and urged him to embrace the Saviour; he bowed assent, made an effort to speak, and turned away in tears. These I mention as tokens of the divine presence at our meetings. But we greatly need reviving again.

S.

THE MISSIONARY'S HANDS STRENGTHENED.

Pennsylvania.

Dear Brother—The providential and the gracious dealings of God with and for this church, during another quarter of missionary toil, places us under infinite obligations of love and praise.

Returning from about a year's service as chaplain in the United States army, the pastor found the congregation meeting in a "fourth-story room," dwindled, disheartened, troubled by roots of bitterness springing up, with divisions and discord as to steps to be taken to escape disbandonment, and doubtful of every plan proposed for procuring permanently a meeting-house, or for the support of the pastor; while he, coming home with the Chickahominy scourge, seemed to die daily, and to be in condition wretchedly ill-qualified to master the difficulties of the position. Behold what God hath wrought! Conceive, my dear brother, the joy with which we report the purchase and occupancy of an eligibly situated and commodious brick church, thoroughly refitted, elegantly furnished, ordinarily well filled by an appreciative congregation, larger than ever, the pews nearly all taken. Cordially coöperative unity of spirit in the bonds of peace again possesses the "little flock," and the Lord, the Prince of Peace, is giving them the kingdom. My health has been so far restored as to enable me to meet all ordinary and many extraordinary appointments with something of the former zest. Soldiers' funerals, in town and country, have been numerous.

The contributions for the benevolencies, under the charge of the General Assembly, had been neglected during my absence, so that all had to be attended to during the last four months, or we should have been found wanting this year in the tables, and in the gracious honour the Lord vouchsafes to the cheerful giver. That the annual contributions to all the Boards, under these circumstances, is fully up to, and beyond, previous average, is as agreeable as it is surprising. There is a margin of time before the Annual Report, for a willing people to supplement their contributions in behalf of the beneficent Boards, who are struggling under so much boisterousness of sea and contrary currents to keep floating, and, if it may be, abreast of the storm, fully equal to the exigencies, aye to the occasions and opportunities for evangelization at home and abroad, which God, controlling the wrath of man, has brought to our church in scope and measure as he never did before. Dear brother, keep the helm well up, but for our nation's future, for the world's sake, for the church's sake, for Christ's sake, don't slacken sail, nor let the fires go out. God grant there be no "retardation" in the agencies of salvation.

The aid derived from your Board has been, and still is, essential to our honest livelihood here. We all hope the need, constraining this posture of dependence, will cease with this year; because we trust, by the efforts being made among us, and by what aid we reasonably look for from other churches, fully to pay the balance due on the church purchase within this year. This most promising church will needs be straitened until it owes no man any thing but love. Once out of debt, the sittings will place her among the self-sustaining and contributing churches. We are pressing toward the mark.

It is wonderful how difficulties may be overcome, and how much may be accomplished even by a small body of united, earnest-minded Christians, aye, even amid the trials and distractions occasioned by such war-times as we have fallen upon. God be thanked for the progress we are permitted to report. His hand is plainly seen in every incident of our advance, and his love has illumined the pathway through a sea of troubles. By his grace we stand. Blessed be his name for ever! Yours, in grateful esteem.

HOPING AMID DARKNESS AND TRIAL.

Minnesota.

Dear Brother—Through God's favouring providence, I have been able to continue my missionary labours on this field through the quarter just expired. In these times of public calamity, when we are effectually taught the vanity of all earthly good, we are also admonished to lay up our treasure in heaven. If the foundations of civil government be shaken or removed, we know that we have this resort, "The Lord is in his holy temple: the Lord's throne is in heaven." Those events which have so thoroughly roused the patriotism of the nation, legitimately demand of the church and the ministry that we should yield somewhat to the powerful pressure. In doing it, however, we should know that our dearest interests are not national. But to make this profession an item of Christian experience and of practical godliness is a work that will try the faith and zeal of those who are called to continue in the doctrine of Christ, and to know only him. The people of Minnesota have been among the first to meet the demands of the general war, and while our sparse population has been drained for this service, every neighbourhood in the State has been under alarm from fear of the Indians who are with and beyond us. The winter has given us a respite from savage assassinations, but we are by no means free from apprehension of another outbreak in the spring, perhaps far more formidable than that through which we have already passed.

But in days of distress, and while trembling under impending future calamities, we are too unmindful of the only true refuge. We greatly need the reviving power and grace of God.

With us at Owatonna religious interest is comparatively low, yet our congregations of late have considerably increased. Our new church at Ashland preserves an encouraging aspect. At our communion in December we received seven, one on examination, making a total of twenty-four.

BOARD OF EDUCATION.

Letters and Communications for the BOARD OF EDUCATION on the subject of Ministerial Education, or of Schools, Academies, and Colleges, may be addressed to the Secretary, Rev. Dr. CHESTER, or Rev. R. WATTS, No. 821 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

Remittances of Money may be made to WILLIAM MAIN, Esq., Treasurer, No. 821 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

GRAVE INDICATIONS OF DECLINE IN THE NUMBER OF CANDIDATES.

We clip the following important statistics from the Presbyterian, hoping that they may make their proper impression upon the church of God throughout our land. The statistics of the office of the Board of Education are confirmatory of the sad conclusion to which this table points.

"Messrs. Editors—The following statistics were collected at a meeting in the Theological Seminary at Princeton, New Jersey, on the late Day of Prayer. Though not as full as would be desirable, they will yet give a fair view—as far as figures can do it—of the state of religion in our Colleges. The figures represent the number of students at present in attendance; how many of them are professors of religion; how many have the ministry, or foreign missionary work, in view; and how many have united with the church during the past year.

The word that comes from nearly all is, that religion is in a low state, but that outward morality and general good order prevail. Every one of those lying west of the Delaware river has felt, in an unusual manner, the influence of the war—diminishing the usual attendance one-half, and occasionally causing an entire suspension of exercises. Revivals are mentioned at Amherst, Princeton, Madison University, Washington, Pennsylvania, and Illinois College. At the two former, noonday prayer-meetings have been in progress several weeks. Pray for our literary institutions. S. C."

OUR PAROCHIAL SCHOOL SYSTEM.

Ought the church to seek to reach the moral wastes of our country, and endeavour to reclaim them for Christ, through the instrumentality of a religious education? The statement of the question seems to be all that is necessary to secure an affirmative reply. From all intelligent Christian men the response is instant and affirmative. The church has no option. Her commission as a teacher, embracing all nations, lays upon her the onus docendi wherever men are found. Whatever obligations may rest upon the state to enlighten and elevate the masses, over whose temporal weal she is ordained of God to watch, the church can never erase from her commission, which appoints her a teacher, the great watchword inscribed there by her ascending Lord. Whoever may take charge of the secular, she may not commit to the hands of any organization on earth the department of sacred learning. Her functions as a teacher she can never cease to exercise, without resigning her commission, or deserting the standard which has been so nobly borne by prophets, apostles, and martyrs. These functions she is to exercise within the pale of existing congregations, in order to the maintenance of the position she has already gained on the field of conflict, and in the spirit of her commission, she is to cross the boundary which separates her pale from the realms of heathenism, whether at home or abroad, and carry the torch of truth—of saving truth—to the regions on which there still rests the shadow of death.

Into this region she cannot enter and perform efficient service, except in an organized capacity. It is just as manifest that the Board of Education is needed in the moral wastes of our country, as that there is need for the Board of Domestic Missions. These two Boards are but the counterparts and complements of each other, and in the evangelization of the desolate places of this continent, the church can never sever the vinculum which binds them together, or dispense with either the one or the other, in her great pioneer aggressions upon the realms of darkness. There can be no argument framed against the entrance of the Board of Education upon the frontier of this territory of ignorance and death, which would not be equally effective in forbidding the entrance of the Board of Domestic Missions.

The Board of Education does not propose the invasion of any existing system in either church or state. She does not aspire to any species of lordship over the educational arrangements of any church, or Presbytery, or Synod; and she would, of all things, deprecate the subversion of our common school system. Her ambition is of an apostolic stamp. She wishes to teach where others have not taught, and where no existing organization, whether civil or ecclesiastical, is in operation to enlighten the moral darkness of the rising generation. Instead of operating to the subversion of the common school system, the fact is, she has uniformly nourished and invigorated the common schools.

In illustration of her influence in this regard, we would refer our readers to such institutions as the Susquehanna Collegiate Institute. In a special report, forwarded to the office of the Board of Education, the Chairman of the Executive Committee of this Institute states, that "before it had been in operation three years, it was a common remark, that the Institute had done more for common schools in the county than all the school laws the state had passed." This institution, to the inauguration of which, as the report states, the first effectual impulse was given by the Secretary of the Board of Education, has been a normal school for the training of teachers for the common schools of the entire region round about. Who can estimate the good which the teachers who are there trained in the knowledge of the truths of God's word as well as in human science, have accomplished, and may yet accomplish, through the medium of the common school system? These teachers will not adopt or inculcate such doctrines as the following, advocated in the Pennsylvania School Journal.

"I have heard some say that certain children are born with such evil dispositions, that there is no possibility of changing them by any course of training. This I deny. To admit it, is to say that God is the author of sin. We have no blame to attach anywhere except to the training of children—their education—for, naturally, they are good—they came from the hand of God pure as the angels!"

This is sufficient to put our church upon her guard. Let her prove faithless to her trust, and the common school system will become an organism for the diffusion of Socinianism, or absolute infidelity.

In closing these remarks upon the province to which the Board of Education restricts her operations, we are persuaded that we are doing the entire church and country a most important service, in calling their attention to the annexed report from one of our parochial schools in the Pines of New Jersey.

ABSECON PAROCHIAL SCHOOL.

March 2, 1863.

Owing to an affliction of my right hand, I write with great trouble and pain. Hence I have had to get others to write histories of Swamp Siding and Leed's Point schools.

Just at the time, or soon after, my teacher for Swamp Siding school came, diptheria and scarlet fever began to rage among the families scattered in the cabins among the pines, carrying away both young and old. The only family within a distance of seven miles from the school-house, where the young man was to board, were prostrated in all its members upon the bed of sickness. This state of things, of course, rendered it impossible to continue our day-school. In the meantime, a place called Oceanville, about three miles along the shore north of Absecon, where I had been preaching for some months, applied to me for a teacher. I accordingly arranged with the young man to go there for a quarter, he agreeing to give his Saturdays and Sabbaths to the people in the Pines and to the mission-school, which we continued at Swamp Siding. The day-school will not be resumed until next month. We number some hundred and twenty on the roll.

A good many are German children. Some twenty or thirty have learned to read the Scriptures, who would have remained in utter ignorance had it not been for this school. Before this school was started it was a common thing to find families, numbering in children and parents eight or ten, old enough to read, and yet in total darkness as respects this blessing. Having always lived in such an isolated position as wood-choppers, coal-burners, &c., they have necessarily been deprived of the advantages of social religious and intellectual culture. I learn from a good brother, whom I have lately secured to scour the Pines some eighteen miles from here, that over an area of twelve miles by six there is a similar state of things. At Swamp Siding we have been getting along with pine slab seats rudely constructed. As the house is a good one, recently constructed, and as we wish to make it comfortable for worship and for our day and mission school operations, we are anxious to obtain benches. Do you know where we can obtain them?

The Scriptures and Catechism of our church are taught regularly at Swamp Siding. This, of course, shall be continued in the day-school when it is resumed. Our mission at this place involves the necessity of furnishing for those poor neglected people, clothing, teaching, and preaching. I have this winter clothed more than one hundred persons in "cast off" apparel, which I begged in different places.

The twenty-five dollars received through Dr. Chester has been more than consumed in purchasing stove and pipe for our house, and in paying the young man who came here to conduct the school. As we needed some one to visit families and to superintend the mission school, I agreed to pay him for such work. I shall apply for the balance in June next, when another report will be furnished.

Miss Dayley agrees to furnish a brief historical statement of the enterprise. Her statement will be forwarded with this, should she hand it in time, or separately, should she fail to have it in time for mail.

As I suffer so much in the use of the pen, I must close abruptly. The contribution of Dr. Chester has done much to cheer my heart while labouring among the perishing classes among the Pines. The influence of the school, sustained mainly by that contribution, will be felt for good throughout eternity.

Fraternally yours,

CHARLES WOOD.

FRIENDSVILLE PAROCHIAL SCHOOL.

Dear Sir—Your very gratifying favour of January 30th reached me by the last mail. You ask me for an early report of the Friendsville Parochial School. Alas, sir, there can be none made, for the school has not been in operation since its premature close last spring. In the midsummer, I followed the young men of this region into the army, as chaplain of the gallant 11th Missouri volunteers. Now, in the good providence of God, I am returned to the bosom of these beloved churches. While I was in the army, they made out a call for me to become their pastor. So the probabilities are, that my life will pass in the midst of this dear people, among whom I have "broken bread" since first I entered the ministry. With such a prospect I at once, on reaching home, began to canvass the importance and feasibility of reorganizing our Parochial School on some basis that would not deceive our hopes. In the midst of our anxious counsels came your kind note. Nothing could have been more opportune. We hail it, dear sir, as the voice of our Lord, bidding us go on.

The sessions are persuaded that it will be most expedient for us to open the school in September, and in the meantime we can mature our plans and preparations. As to the amount of aid we shall need in carrying forward this enterprise, we cannot now determine, until we know the salary we shall have to pay, and shall have faithfully tested our home resources.

In the meantime, I will receive into my own family and instruct personally, all those of our youth who may wish to prosecute their studies during the spring and summer, as I did before our school was opened. No time must be lost.

With every prayer for the divine encouragement and blessing upon the noble and far-reaching Christian enterprise for which you labour, I subscribe myself,

Yours, very sincerely,

S. C. BALDRIDGE.

N. B. It is suggested that I may be safe in saying, that if we can be sure of one hundred dollars aid, we will be safe from the melancholy contingencies that closed our school last spring.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Bear River, Chippewa, January 27th; Iowa, March 4th; Omaha, February 17th; San Francisco, February 2d; Yokohama, December 30th; Tungchow, December 16th; Shanghai, December 6th; Ningpo, December 15th; Canton, December ——; Allahabad, December 18th; Futtehgurh, January 2d; Mynpurie, January 19th; Lodiana, January 16th; Kapurthala, January 16th; Lahor, January 19th; Rio de Janeiro, January 8th; Monrovia, December 26th.

ADMISSION OF CONVERTS TO THE CHURCHES.

At Clay-Ashland, last Sabbath in November, eight Americo-Liberians; at Rio de Janeiro, first Sabbath in January, three Brazilians; at Tungchow, first Sabbath in December, four Chinese—making the number of native communicants at this new station twelve; at Shanghai, one—a youth of nineteen, the most promising scholar in the boarding-school, who wishes to become a preacher of the gospel; at Kapurthala, one—a Mohammedan, who has been "a Christian at heart for twelve years," but could not gain courage to face the consequences of a Christian profession until now, when he is dying of consumption, and since his baptism he has been forsaken by "father, mother, brothers, sisters, wife, and child," leaving "not a single relative to look at him,"—but his mind was kept in peace.

ORDINATION, LICENSURE, CHANGES OF LOCATION.

Early in January, Mr. Reese Thackwell, licentiate preacher, was ordained as an evangelist by the Presbytery of Lodiana, at its meeting held in Lahor. The principal teacher of the mission school was licensed to preach the gospel at the same time by the Presbytery; his name is not reported in the letters before us. At the annual meeting of the Lodiana mission, held at the same place, Mr. Calderwood was transferred to the station at Saharunpur, left vacant by the lamented death of Dr. Campbell; Mr. Thackwell, to the station at Ambala; and Miss Beatty, to the station at Dehra. We may add here, that Dr. Hepburn removed from Kanagawa to Yokohama, Japan, and took possession of the house erected for the mission, at the end of December.

MOVEMENTS OF MISSIONARIES.

The Rev. S. M. Irvin, who for many years was connected with the Iowa mission, but was constrained to withdraw from it on account of the health of his wife, has been reappointed as superintendent of this mission, and we are glad to mention that he has entered again on this work. The Rev. Arthur Folsom and his wife sailed for Canton, China, in the ship Contest, on the 21st of February. Mr. Folsom is a member of the Presbytery of Ebenezer. The Rev. J. R. Amos and his wife arrived at Monrovia on the 25th of December, returning to their missionary work. Mrs. H. V. Rankin and her children have safely reached their former home at Ningpo. They were met at Shanghai by Mr. Rankin. Mr. Happer had returned to Canton, from his visit to Shanghai and a journey on the Yang-tsze.

MISSIONARY CONFERENCE AT LAHOR.

The letters from the Upper India stations speak with warm interest of the meetings held at Lahor, to consider various subjects connected with the missionary work. These meetings were attended by missionaries of several denominations, chaplains, military officers, civilians, and others. Papers previously prepared were read, and discussions followed on various important subjects connected with the work of missions. A delightful spirit of Christian union and missionary zeal evidently prevailed, and great good was done. Our space precludes a fuller account here of this remarkable conference, but its proceedings will no doubt be published.

MISSIONARIES UNDER APPOINTMENT.

The Executive Committee have lately appointed three young brethren as missionaries; six were previously under appointment; others, it is understood, will apply for similar service. Two of those appointed will not be ready to go out until next year. One or two others may be prevented from going by special causes. A young lady is also under appointment as a teacher for the Corisco mission, where her services are much needed, and where another minister should be sent without delay. Of the brethren already appointed, five certainly, perhaps six, could be ready to embark at an early day. The Committee have earnestly considered the state of our public affairs as affecting our missionary prospects, and they nevertheless feel that they would be wanting in faith if they did not resolve on sending another man to Corisco, and two more to China, unless, before they actually sail, the way should become evidently closed. They wish also to send out all the others. The places left vacant by death in the three great fields, Africa, China, and India, are not yet supplied. The missionary work is steadily going forward. Are not the people of God in our communion able to send these missionaries to their stations among the heathen? Is not the fact that the labourers are ready to go forth, itself an answer to prayer, a reason of thankfulness, and a motive for vigorous effort?

INDIA—FURRUKHABAD MISSION.

Report of the Station at Futtehpore.

The Rev. W. F. Johnson and his wife, and six native Christian catechists, teachers, and Scripture-readers—two of each—are the missionary labourers at this station. Mr. Johnson thus reviews the work of the year ending on the 1st of October, 1862.

The record of the year is one of quiet working, without any special incidents, and, I am sorry to add, with but small apparent results. The native labourers have, without exception, gone on with their work in a most satisfactory manner. While I felt that the study of the language was my principal business, there yet have been many things to hinder the successful prosecution of it. Toward the latter part of the year, just when most of these hinderances had been removed, and I had begun for a few weeks a more vigorous course of study, I was compelled, by impaired eyesight, to cease altogether from all labour that could not be done through the instrumentality of others. I hope, however, soon to be allowed to resume work again.

Preaching.

Except during the few months just alluded to, a Hindustani service has been held regularly every Sabbath morning, and an English service every Sabbath evening. I have some reason to hope that the seed thus sown has not been without a blessing from the great Head of the church. There have been, however, no adult members added to our church during the year. The catechists and readers go daily, morning and evening, two and two, and proclaim the word of life in the bazars and villages within walking distance. I have sometimes accompanied them, and been pleased with their apparent earnestness and faithfulness. There are frequent melas on the bank of the Ganges, and these, when within a day's journey, have generally been visited by them all. When the weather has been cool enough to permit of it, I have sent two of them together on itinerating tours of about two weeks each, among the more distant villages, taking with them a plentiful supply of tracts and Gospels, to sell or distribute as they went. An arrangement has just been completed with the Northern India Bible Society by which I shall be able, during this cold season, to send a catechist and reader on a much longer tour among the scattered villages of Banda and Bundelcund, in few of which the name of Jesus has yet been heard. The native assistants uniformly report a much greater willingness to listen to gospel truths among these village people, in whose ears those truths have not become stale by repetition. In one village where they were received with more than usual interest, they pitched their tent for a couple of weeks. Thence they joined the stream of pilgrims pouring towards the mela at Sharajpore. As they have not yet returned, I know not what has been the result of this last effort. A weekly prayer-meeting has been held throughout the year, in Hindustani, on Wednesday evenings. An English prayer-meeting has also been held on Thursday evenings, at which a number of the residents of the station were regular attendants.

The High-school.

This school has prospered well; the average number of pupils daily about ninety—about the same as in former years. A considerable amount of attention is given to instruction in the Scriptures. If we could procure good Christian teachers for all the classes, this part of our work would be much more hopeful. The heathen teachers do indeed use the Gospels as class-books, but they would care very little about explaining what was read, even if they were able to do it. The two principal teachers being Christians has been a great advantage to this school, and it is therefore a matter of great regret that the lack of funds has compelled me to discharge one of them, the head-teacher.

The Bazar Girls' School.

I do not regard this as a very promising field of labour; but, in the present state of feeling on the subject of native female education, it seems impossible to accomplish much in any other way, and one cannot but desire that some effort should be made to reach the minds and hearts of the future wives and mothers of this land. Let us hope and pray that the day may soon come when a more effectual door of access to them may be opened. This school has been taught by a native Christian woman, and even with a good deal of effort, and the giving of a small daily gratuity to each scholar, there are only sixteen girls, some of them quite small, and all of them of the lowest and most ignorant class of natives. Coming mainly because they were paid for it, it is hardly to be expected that they should make very ardent students. It must be confessed that their progress has not been very satisfactory. A kind Christian lady in the station contributed the funds, desiring that at least the experiment should be made.

The Christian Girls' School.

This school was of quite another character. Though numbering only eight scholars, and taught with some irregularity, they have advanced much faster than the boys of the high school of a similar stage of progress. They meet Mrs. Johnson for an hour or two a day, and spend the time sometimes in reading, and sometimes in needlework. Three of them have committed to memory the catechism, together with a number of hymns and Bible-lessons.

Inquirers.

An old Brahmin came here at the beginning of the year, and I gave him some employment for a little while, until I could find out what he was. He used to sit at least half of every day on the ground in the sun, reading aloud to himself in the New Testament. He handed over to me his deities, his sacred cord, and all the implements of his former wandering trade. But after a while he naively confessed to another missionary that he was a liberal member of the "Broad Church," ready to worship either the Saviour or Ram-chander, whichever would give him his bread. He said that here in the mission he "used the name" of Jesus, and studied the Bible, because that pleased us; but when he went into the village he used the name of Ram, for in that name the people gave him bread. Of course he at once received permission to lay down his Testament and take up his conch-shell again.

The second inquirer was a well-educated and very intelligent man, and who knew more of the Scriptures than most of the native Christians. However, on inquiry I found that he was living in open sin, and at once dismissed him. I felt a great pity for this man, who knew so well what duty was, and did it not. His sin found him out, and after lingering several months in dreadful pain, he died.

There was a young man who died in the hospital of a lingering disease, of whom I could not but hope that he had been found of the great Physician. He was visited many times before his death, and spoken to with regard to his soul's interests, and he always maintained that he believed in Jesus Christ, of whom he had learned something years before in a mission-school. He seemed like a simple-minded man, ignorant but sincere. Who knows how many a soul among the thousands or millions who have received some casual instruction, have afterwards been taught of God?—how many a flower has thus been "born to bloom unseen, and waste its sweetness on the desert air"?

Orphans.

Three orphans were thrown upon the care of the mission during the year. First, a child whose parents had probably perished from famine, and who was sent by the magistrate to prevent her falling into the hands of the Mohammedans. Hardship and want had worn her body to a skeleton, and careful nursing failed to restore her, and she died after a month or two. Two others, whose parents died upon a pilgrimage, were sent here. The boy of ten years old ran away after a time, and has returned to his former home. His sister, a pleasant child, aged about seven, still remains with us. Four children were baptized during the year; no adults.

Some attempt has been made at the religious instruction of the servants connected with several families resident here. Those who are willing, use their influence to induce their servants to assemble, and these are visited by a catechist. The native assistants have also made regular visits to the jail, hospital, and school.

The school building, which by permission of the Lieutenant-Governor is to be sold, can probably be purchased by the mission for much less than its value. At the beginning of the year I was told that one hundred and twenty rupees per year must be paid for the rent of the building; but pending a reference to government, nothing has been heard of the matter since.

The Relief Fund for assisting travellers on their way, and for giving a quantity of food weekly to a great number of the poor of the city, has been well supported by the liberality of persons here. In connection with the weekly distribution of food, religious instruction is always given.

MISSIONS IN CHINA.

REPORT OF THE SHANGHAI MISSION FOR THE YEAR ENDING SEPTEMBER 30TH, 1862.

1. Change of Constituents.

In reviewing the departed year, our eyes rest, first of all, on the mournful event which beclouded its close. We mean the removal by a sudden stroke of one who, though not the first appointed to this station, merited, by his long residence and unwearied devotion to all its interests, to be regarded as a father of the mission. Still in life's summer, with a rich promise of autumnal fruits,—triumphing with holy joy in the completion of one gigantic enterprise—the translation of the Scriptures—he had set before himself another of equal magnitude,—the preparation of commentaries. But this was destined for other hands, and the great Head of the church saw fit to exempt his servant from further toil. For him the transition was a gain; and rich as his endowments were, who shall say that to the cause of Christ it was a loss? Was it not "expedient" for Christ himself to go away? And may it not be "expedient," in ways that we can little comprehend, for him to call his servants home? Faith acquiesces in the wisdom of such dispensations, though affection murmurs, and shortsighted zeal exclaims, "to what purpose was this waste?"

It will not be out of place for us to mention here, the grief with which we heard, at the very moment when brother Culbertson was entering the dark waters, that our brother Gayley had already passed over. Though detached to another post, we lament him as a former colleague, and cherish his memory as that of one, who, while he preached Christ, also exhibited to the heathen the beauty of his reflected image.

In connection with these removals to another world, we have to record the translation of our brother Mills to another part of this great field. He left a post for which he was becoming well qualified, and in which there was an urgent demand for his services; but we doubt not that he will find work enough at his new station, and hope that his future usefulness will justify the change.

To balance this reduction in our strength and numbers, we have to note the accession of brother Roberts. If his transfer from Ningpo required any further vindication, it would be found in the death of brother Culbertson, who bequeathed to his successors too many burdens to be borne by a single pair of youthful shoulders.

Brother Martin's arrival at so critical a juncture, we cannot but regard as a signal providence. Just returned from the United States, he was proceeding, with two native asssistants, to recommence his missionary work, at the nearest possible point to the capital of the empire, when the death of our senior member arrested his journey. At the urgent solicitation of the surviving members, he consented to remain until the younger brethren become better qualified for sustaining the responsibilities so unexpectedly devolved upon them.

2. New Buildings.

The season has been unpropitious for enterprises calling for pecuniary outlays, but circumstances have forced us into the erection of buildings. The press, brought up from Ningpo, with a view to more enlarged operations, was crippled in its efficiency for want of space. A fine piece of ground, in an admirable location, which we secured last year for one-third of its present value, was inviting occupation. But where were the funds to come from? It pleased God to supply them through the munificence of two friends, whose liberality our China missions have often had occasion to acknowledge. At the same time, an opportunity offered for disposing of our Hunggwe property, on terms that appeared to be advantageous. With the means derived from these sources, we have placed a good dwelling on the front of the new lot, and in the centre of it a printing house, every way adapted to the scale of our increasing operations.

On the rear of the "compound," but fronting on a crowded thoroughfare, stands a commodious church, the foundation of which was laid before the close of the last year, and under the same roof is a suite of rooms sufficient for the accomodation of a mission family. They were provided at a very small expense, compared with what they would have cost if erected separately; and not only meet an exigency like the present, when they actually afford shelter to two families, but may be made to save, for the use of the mission, a large rent from the dwelling-house on the bank of the river.

At the south gate, brother Farnham has put up a convenient building, suited to the present wants of his boarding-school; and it is gratifying to add, that all the expenses, including the purchase of the ground, were defrayed by contributions which he was able to procure in the mercantile community of Shanghai.

In looking on these goodly edifices, one of which opens its doors daily to a heathen throng; and another, like a lighthouse, scatters far and wide the rays of truth; while a third is a nursery for the servants of the church; and the fourth, if not occupied by a missionary family, will bring into our mission treasury far more than its original cost, we are in danger of offering to our own pride the incense which is due solely to the grace of God. A special providence guided us to this location. A special providence has presided over the erection of these structures, and (as the ring of the hammer has not yet entirely ceased) we would bring forth their topstones with shoutings of "Grace!"

3. The Press.

The work of the press may be reported, in round numbers, as follows: of the Scriptures about two and a half millions of pages, and of religious tracts more than five and a half millions have been printed, making an aggregate of more than eight and a quarter millions of pages of divine truth. These, we confess, are lower figures than we exhibited last year. But the interruptions incident to the building of the house, and the removal of the presses, will account for the difference. The cylinder press, after accidental detention in New York, and a voyage out, of more than twice the average length, suffered a still further delay from the want of certain machinery, which, at the cost of time and money, we are endeavouring to supply on the ground. In a few weeks, however, we hope it will begin to revolve, and then effect quite a revolution in the numerical portion of our press report for the ensuing year. This vastly augmented power of impression, together with a corresponding increase in the facility of composition obtained by the arrangements of Mr. Gamble, will yield results, the mention of which would have been deemed visionary in the earlier stages of our work. This is prospective. But the fact that above five millions of pages have been issued from our depository is one which belongs to the history of the year, and who will deny its importance? It is not for us to follow these voiceless messengers, and report the interest they awaken, or the conversions they effect. That belongs to the missions which coöperate in the work of distribution; and we doubt not that the Methodists and Baptists, Episcopalians and Congregationalists, will unite with the Presbyterians of our own connection in acknowledging the aid they derive from the publications of our press.

To the incredulous, this immense amount of printed paper cast into the midst of a pagan population, eighty times more numerous than our pages, will appear like the "twenty thousand cartloads of the best materials," which Bunyan tells us the king of the country ordered to be thrown into the Slough of Despond. To them it may not appear to be at all improved, but the King requires the work to be done, and faith beholds, as the certain result not many years hence, a firm highway emerging from the filthy scum of pagan superstition, so conspicuous that all the people of the empire may see it, and so plain that the wayfaring man, though a fool, need not err therein.

4. Preaching.

While through the press we have been preaching to the people of distant places, we recognise the duty of preaching to the ears as well as the eyes of the multitudes in our own streets. Of efforts in this direction we have, however, only a meagre account. Brother Culbertson resided at a distance from the city, and was absorbed in the translation of the Scriptures, which he regarded as his special work. Brother Mills left us several months before the close of the year; and brother Farnham has necessarily been much engaged with the care of his boarding-school, and especially with the erection of the new building, which it now occupies.

For a month past the presence of brother Martin and of elder Lu, a native brother from Ningpo, has enabled us to open our two principal chapels for daily services. The scale of effort put forth in this department in consequence of this temporary aid, we hope to maintain throughout the year, and perhaps add to it, by increasing the number of services in a third chapel.

In this branch of our labours we peculiarly need the assistance of pious natives, who not only stand before their countrymen as living evidence of the efficacy of the gospel in changing the Chinese heart, and attest its adaptation to all the wants of Chinese life, but enjoy a more intimate access to their hearers than it is possible for the missionary to obtain, whatever may be his progress in the language. The want of such aid may, indeed, account for our want of success in the conversion of the natives. We are deeply impressed with the importance of providing this agency for the future, and are now in correspondence with our brethren at Ningpo with a view to obtaining one or more of that auxiliary corps which they have found so efficient.

The daily service in our new chapel has been held at night, from a belief that the attendance, if not larger than during the day, would be of such a character as to promise more permanent effects. In this we have not been disappointed. The people of the neighbourhood seem to take pleasure in coming in to spend a quiet hour in resting from the fatigues of the day, and listening to the story of the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom he has sent.

5. The Church.

A church was organized in connection with this mission four years ago, with one native member. Several members have since been added by letter from the church at Ningpo. These brethren came up with the printing press, and may prove a healthy nucleus for further growth, but we are sorry to say that the membership has not been increased by a single case of conversion from among the natives. This is a melancholy fact, and if the experience of other missions and other stations were the same, we should be in danger of being disheartened. But happily we have evidence in the success enjoyed elsewhere, that God has a people in China; and it is fair to infer that some of them must be found among the vast multitudes who are flocking to this mart of commerce. The hours of the fruitless night are rolling heavily away, but we toil on, expecting the dawn, when the Master will appear and crown our labours with such success as to make it manifest that the miracle is all his own.

6. Schools.

The two day schools, now under the care of Mr. and Mrs. Roberts, have been doing their steady work, making readers for the Scriptures, and friends, perhaps converts, for the Christian faith. A cheering circumstance in connection with them is that one of the teachers appears to be under the teaching of the Holy Spirit.

The boarding-school, under the charge of brother Farnham, has become an important institution. The eminent usefulness of that at Ningpo, whose blessed fruits are becoming the seeds of other fields, encourages us to hope that the school may, at no very distant day, send forth its first instalment of native preachers. One of the oldest boys, a youth of much promise, has applied for admission to the church. The teacher appears not to be far from the kingdom of heaven, and an excellent spirit pervades the body of the pupils. With a view to elevating the character of the institution, and at the same time fitting its pupils for teaching or preaching in any part of the empire, we have concluded to introduce the Mandarin dialect as the chief medium of instruction, instead of the Shanghai patois. Many of the boys, being refugees from Nankin, speak it as their mother tongue, and it may be confidently asserted that the Mandarin, as the principal dialect of China, heads the long catalogue of human languages in respect to the number of its speakers. It merits, therefore, a larger amount of attention than it has hitherto received as an element of instruction in our Christian schools.

7. Shanghai in general—Importance of the station.

This is a trite theme, but it has new phases. Shanghai is almost the only old city of this old empire which has received the impulse of a new life. For foreign trade it now ranks as the first post in all the East; and two hundred and seventy foreign ships, exclusive of men-of-war, have been counted at one time, within the limits of its crowded harbour. Foreign influence has opened for it a career of improvement; and even the awful rebellion now ravaging the districts of the interior, has contributed to its aggrandizement. Fifteen years ago its population was two hundred thousand. Now it is reckoned at a million, and some of the older residents affirm that it approaches the double of that enormous figure. The foreign protectorate gives a security to capital which attracts men of wealth from distant parts; and from the neighbouring cities of Suchou and Hangchou, lately so populous and opulent, the inhabitants by hundreds of thousands have sought here, under the shadow of foreign flags, that asylum which their own imbecile government is unable to afford them. The local patois is disappearing in the Babel of conflicting dialects; and the original inhabitants are overwhelmed by the influx of more energetic tribes. This gives the missionary the prospect of better material to operate on; and we trust that by the grace of God, we shall yet have churches in Shanghai, whose size and life will correspond to the growth and energy of this vast emporium.

This interesting Report was written by the Rev. W. A. P. Martin, D. D., who is connected with this mission for the present, though he expects to occupy a station in the northern part of the country, perhaps at Pekin, as better suited to the health of his family, and also to his greatest usefulness in the missionary work. The Rev. Messrs. Farnham and Roberts, and their wives, are also at Shanghai, and Mr. Gamble is the Superintendent of the Press.

MISSION IN SIAM.

The Rev. Messrs. Mattoon, House, McDonald, and George, and their wives, and the Rev. J. Wilson, are the missionary labourers at Bangkok. This report was written by Mr. McDonald, and it reviews the year ending October 1st. We have not room to insert it in full, but large extracts are here given.

[The Report begins with a feeling reference to the distressed condition of our country. It then speaks of the generally good health of the mission families, and mentions the arrival of a missionary and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. George,] who, as is customary with new comers, are engaged in the study of the language. Those of us also, who have been here but a short time, are beginning to be able to raise the burden a little from the shoulders of the older members.

The Mission Chapel.

Our mission chapel, which at the close of the previous year was left in an unfinished state, without much prospect of being completed, has been so far completed, that the Sabbath service can be held in it; indeed, it will require but a few additional seats to be wholly completed. This, too, has been accomplished without drawing any thing from the mission funds. Some of the members of the mission contributed as largely as they could from their own private funds, and these were assisted by some contributions from other sources. It was opened for worship on May 25th, and since that time the Sabbath services, both Siamese and English have been held in it. It is constructed in the plainest possible style. The walls are frame, built in with brick, and stuccoed both inside and out. Situated immediately upon the bank of the river, it is generally favoured with a pleasant breeze passing through it, which in this climate is quite a consideration. In ascending the river it is the first object which meets the eye, after coming round a large bend, and its plain white walls contrast in beautiful simplicity with its more gaudy neighbours, the Budhist temples.

Religious Services.

The Sabbath morning services have been variously attended, and the average attendance during the year has been an increase on the previous year. Many of those in attendance listen with respect and attention, as if they were willing, intellectually at least, to understand the truths of the gospel. The Sabbath-school established during the previous year, consisting of the pupils of the school, and all others who could be gathered in, has been continued. Those in regular attendance, and especially the pupils of the school, have committed to memory large portions of Scripture, which have been explained to them by the teachers. The casual attenders have had the instructions suited as far as possible to their capacities.

Missionary Education.

The boarding-school has been conducted as usual by one superintendent, assisted in the instruction by other members of the mission, and a native teacher. Toward the close of the previous year, and at the commencement of the last, the larger pupils, who had been with us for some time, were dismissed, as opportunities offered for them to go into business, in order that the expenses of the school might be brought within the yearly appropriation. The average number during the year has been about twenty. These, for the most part, are small. . . . Many of the boys have made very commendable progress in their studies, and in the intellectual understanding of the Scriptures, but no special spiritual interest has been manifested. . . . The class of adult females, commenced during the previous year by one of the female members of the mission, has been continued during the last year. Very few of them could read at all, and their minds were full of all kinds of superstitions. The object has been first to divest them as far as possible of those superstitions, and then instil into their minds the fundamental principles of the gospel. This has required no small degree of labour and patience, but most of them can now answer intelligently concerning the creation, sin, salvation, &c.

An effort has also been made, during the year, by another female member of the mission, to teach a number of adult females, on and about our premises, to read, which has resulted successfully. The three little girls, too, under the special care of one of the mission families, and who have been mentioned in previous reports, have been making their usual commendable progress. . . .

Report of the Press.

The printing-press, whilst it has not been driven with the energy it might have been, had funds, printing materials on hand, and the signs of the times at home justified, has at no time been idle, but has turned out during the year, over 588,000 12mo. pages, of which over 556,000 consist of the Holy Scriptures. Gospel according to Matthew 2000 copies, of 92 pages each, making in all 184,000 pages; Gospel according to John 2000 copies, of 74 pages each, making 148,000 pages; Acts of the Apostles 2000 copies, 96 pages each, making 192,000 pages; Epistles of John 2000 copies, 16 pages each, making 32,000 pages. There is also an edition of 2000 copies of the Gospel according to Luke in press, and nearly completed. We sincerely hope that the light emanating from these pages of gospel truth, may yet enlighten the minds and gladden the hearts of many of this benighted people.

'City-mission' Work in Bangkok.

One of our number has spent much time during the year in conversing with the people, and distributing books. He has explored the large gardens adjacent to our premises, went to the homes of the people, conversed with them on the subject of religion, and to those who could read, gave portions of the word of God and other religious tracts. He also visited the wats, or temples, which lay in his course, conversed with the priests and others worshipping at those heathen shrines. In his boat he also traversed many of the almost innumerable canals, which constitute the highways into the city, and which are consequently so many avenues of trade to the great metropolis. He there met many trading boats bringing produce from different parts of the kingdom, and gave them a word of exhortation and a portion of the word of God, which has been bread literally cast "upon the waters." Although, like the husbandman, who, when he casts his seed by the waters, patiently awaits the season of its return to him, we must patiently await the Lord's time, yet we may pray that the seed thus sown by our brother may not be delayed "many days," but that it may speedily return, bringing an abundant fold in the great harvest of souls.

There has been no itinerating to a distance, of any consequence, during the year just closed, but several tours are in contemplation for the dry season just commencing.

THE PAST YEAR.

On the 1st day of March the Board entered on a new fiscal year. The figures exhibiting the labours and results of the past year are not yet fully made up, but we may state a few facts respecting them in general terms.

The year was entered upon with many fears. Often and over were we told that the critical time for all our Boards was just before us. The prospect of a protracted civil war, of heavy taxation, and of immense draughts upon the sympathies and charities of our people at large, for the means of supplying the physical wants of our soldiers and sufferers, made the future look anything but promising. But, by the good help of God, the Board has gone through the year with safety, and has reached its end with larger resources than at the beginning.

Our bookstore sales have been increased by several thousands of dollars over those of the year 1861–2.

Our colportage work has been limited. The number of colporteurs in the field and the amount of their sales have been smaller. The most active colporteurs have been at work among the camps and hospitals, and their distributions have been largely gratuitous. The volumes given away by them have been more by one-half than those of the preceding year.

The receipts for colportage were limited until near the end of the year, when a number of liberal contributions increased our aggregate receipts for colportage above those of the year before. The Board is now increasing the number of its colporteurs.

The great work of the past year has been found among the soldiers and sailors. Since this war began, probably half a million of men in the various armies, and on shipboard, in camps and hospitals, our own men and Confederate prisoners, have received through the agency of this Board the invitation to salvation through Jesus Christ. Hundreds of chaplains, pious officers, and others, have been acting as voluntary distributors of our books and tracts, and we have had manifold reason to thank God for the attending and converting influences of his holy Spirit. Although not so in a pecuniary point of view at all, yet if we were asked which has been the best year of the Board's history so far, in regard to usefulness, we would not hesitate to say, "the year 1862–3."

DISTRIBUTIONS ON THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER AND ITS VICINITY.

Memphis, Tenn., Feb., 1863.

Rev. W. E. Schenck, D.D., Cor. Sec.

Dear Sir—The ten boxes of reading matter sent to me last month, at a cost of more than one thousand dollars, have already been used—and used, I think, sparingly and judiciously—in our great army work. It has been my aim to distribute these books, tracts, papers, &c., at points where they were most needed—where the men had been prevented from receiving supplies. Everywhere they have been most heartily welcomed. Almost daily I hear of good done as the result of previous distributions, and I have found that regiments supplied more than a year ago still retain the volumes then furnished them. In the good providence of God, I have been enabled to give the stock last sent me a most extensive distribution. It has gone into the hands of thousands who had been for months entirely destitute of religious reading. Thousands—and I use the word understandingly—in the large hospitals at Paducah, Jackson, Memphis, and Helena, have rejoiced to receive our precious pages, and, in addition to these, not less than thirty regiments, at Cairo, Columbus, Jackson, Grand Junction, Corinth, La Grange, Germantown, Moscow, Memphis, and Vicksburg, have, during the present month, been supplied with the books, tracts, papers, sheet-music, &c., you so kindly sent. In order that the largest possible number of men might be reached, and knowing, as I do, that a book, tract, or paper, placed in a tent or room, is read or heard by every man there, I have reduced considerably the proportionate number allowed to a regiment.

I have heretofore related at considerable length many interesting incidents I have met with in the course of my distributions in camps, and hospitals, and prisons. These are but the daily experience of every one engaged in this good work, and to repeat them here would only be to reiterate what I have said already.

During the present month I have distributed nine thousand two hundred and fifty volumes, twelve thousand sheets of music, two thousand Sabbath-School Visitors, two hundred and fifty thousand pages of tracts, and have furnished religious reading to more than thirty thousand men. More than seven thousand men in hospitals have been furnished with truth, able, by God's blessing, to make them wise unto salvation.

It is now a year and a month since I commenced my labours as distributing agent for the Board of Publication. During that time I have circulated among our western and northwestern troops more than thirty-eight thousand volumes, nearly, if not quite, a million pages of tracts, and furnished religious reading, which has been read to not less than one hundred and twenty-five thousand men. I think I have a better idea than most men of what is included in the word "million." With many thousands of the men thus supplied, in camps, hospitals, and prisons, I have conversed, as pointedly and faithfully as I could, upon the subject of religion. Surely no one can so distrust the promises of God as to suppose that all this precious seed has been sown in vain. God be praised for the witness he has borne that this labour has not been uselessly expended! While its full results are, and must in this world remain, hidden from mortal vision, my sometimes desponding heart has been repeatedly encouraged by evidences that God owns and blesses this work—that he is still true to his blessed promises, and that my labour has not been in vain in the Lord.

During the past thirteen months I have distributed stock which cost the Board, at its rooms in Philadelphia, more than thirty-three hundred dollars. How many of our northwestern and western churches have contributed to aid this patriotic, this Christian work? How many Christians have done more for the temporal than for the eternal interests and welfare of the soldier! Oh, if the members of our churches but half-realized the importance of this great work—if they knew but half of its wants and its encouragements—there would be no lack of funds with which to prosecute it in the name and for the glory of our ascended Lord!

It is very gratifying and encouraging to find that nearly all our hospitals are now supplied with chaplains, a large majority of whom are earnest and faithful labourers—men who watch for souls "as they that must give account." They find our publications useful—aye, indispensable—aids in their arduous and responsible labours. Wherever I go, they ask for more books, more tracts, more papers, telling me, at the same time, of good done by previous donations. Will not our churches and Sabbath-schools give this great subject their prayerful consideration, and enable the Board of Publication to meet this great, this crying want?

Yours truly, W.

DISTRIBUTIONS AT MEMPHIS, TENNESSEE.

Dear Brother—I am constrained to write and ask for another donation of your publications. The "German Hand-Book," and the "Soldier's Pocket-Book," have given such pleasure to hundreds that have received them at my hands, through your kindness, that I cannot be satisfied without more of them. As I was making my usual visit to the general hospital at the Fort yesterday, I found a German reading aloud from the "Hand-Book." I asked if it was one that I had given him. No, he had borrowed it of his friend that sat by him. To him I had given it, and he begged for one for himself. I had just sent, by my wife, one to another hospital, where I had in the morning found a man longing for that book. If you have any German papers or tracts, I would rejoice to get some—or German Testaments.

The recruiting song, "Oh, who'll enlist for Jesus?" is in great demand. I have been able to hold on to two or three of them, that I may continue to read them in hospitals, and to groups among the tents. It is unanimously pronounced admirable; and usually, after reading it, some pledge themselves that they will enlist under this best Captain.

Yesterday, in one room of nine, four sick men said they were professed followers of Christ. I have found many interesting Christians in the hospitals the past week. One, an elder in a Presbyterian church at Belvidere, Illinois, knew that his Redeemer liveth, and had enjoyed much with his captain, another elder in the same church, praying with their men. Another Christian in the same room was joyful in Christ, and had just seen two soldiers converted near him.

In another ward two young men lay together reading their New Testament. One of them had seen a brother die of measles within a fortnight, converted on his deathbed, and triumphing in Christ. These two were seeking the Lord.

Your publications I want, in order that every man may be supplied, if possible. All your books are very gratefully received.

On Saturday last I saw a company on a boat just arrived from Helena. They had been six months in Arkansas, and had had no books or papers given them in that time. I went on board, and soon emptied my basket of books, papers, and tracts. They seemed hungry for something to read, and very grateful for what I could give them.

When the Confederate prisoners came up from Arkansas Post, I carried much reading matter to them, which was seized with great avidity. I am highly favoured in having it in my power to confer so much pleasure upon those who may so soon die on the battle-field or in the hospital. We are preparing rooms for six thousand sick and wounded men in this city, and have nearly two thousand sick in the Fort, and thousands of freed negroes about us, who are many of them sick.

Yours, J. P.

DISTRIBUTIONS AT PADUCAH, KENTUCKY.

Paducah, Kentucky.

Dear Sir—Allow me to acknowledge the receipt, from the Presbyterian Board of Publication, of a large and most admirably selected package of books, pamphlets, tracts, papers, sheet-music, &c., for distribution among our sick and wounded soldiers at Paducah.

I take great pleasure in tendering to the Board my sincere thanks for their timely arrival. We had just received some four hundred additional patients from the bloody fields of Murfreesboro' and Vicksburg, and we were sadly deficient in that amount and character of reading matter which your munificent gift so freely supplied. Eternity alone will be able to reveal the full amount of benefit and of blessing secured to our sick and wounded by this timely arrival of so much excellent reading matter. May kind Heaven bless you, and greatly prosper you in your labour of love in behalf of our sick and wounded men, and may others be provoked to deeds of similar kind and Christian effort.

Very truly yours,

F. A. McNeil,

Chaplain U. S. A., Paducah, Ky.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

I. My Brother Ben, by the author of "Mackerel Will." 18mo. pp. 120. Price, 25 and 30 cents.

An admirable book for youthful readers, containing a truly interesting narrative of an honest and faithful lad, who by diligence and industry helped a poor and widowed mother to rear a numerous family, and got them all into positions of respectability and usefulness. The tale is related in a sweet and touching manner, and thoroughly imbued with salutary and scriptural sentiments.

II. No Work, no Wages, and other Stories. 18mo., pp. 180. Price, 35 and 40 cents.

This little volume contains six excellent tales. They are all intended and well adapted to inculcate truly Bible views in reference to industry, truthfulness, and piety. They will well repay a perusal.

III. Leaflets for Letters. No. I. Pp. 64. Price 5 cents.

Many correspondents are in the habit of inserting a "leaflet" in every letter they write. If well selected, these little messengers of affection may, by the blessing of God, do much good. This packet is varied and well chosen. The several leaflets have reference to almost every phase of human life, and character, and circumstances. Those for the afflicted and bereaved are especially sweet and comforting.

IV. Leaflets for Letters. No. II. Pp. 64. Price 5 cents.

The package above referred to is made up of prose selections, No. II. of poetical pieces. They are brimful both of the gospel and of genuine poetry. We are sure that no reader of pious and cultivated taste but will feel that he is amply repaid the cost of the package in its perusal, irrespective of its special design for use in correspondence. Some of the most touching of these pieces will be new to American readers.

APPROPRIATIONS FROM THE GENERAL FUND.

No appropriation is made without the recommendation of the Presbytery, or the Church Extension Committee of the Presbytery within whose bounds the church applying for aid is located.

No appropriation is paid until the Board receives a certificate from the Trustees of the church aided, stating that their church lot is properly secured, and that the amount appropriated will complete their house of worship, and leave the whole property free from debt.

Appropriations not called for within two years of the date thereof, are regarded as withdrawn.

"READY FOR A FORWARD MOVEMENT."

Rev. John Crozier, the efficient pastor of the church at Olney, Illinois, in a letter acknowledging the receipt of an appropriation, says:

"We feel that we are called upon to rejoice and bless God for his great mercy towards us as a church. Now, after six years of toil, by divine aid, we have our house finished and free from debt. We feel that we are ready for a 'forward movement.' Sabbath before last I preached a sermon on the text, 'Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might,' &c., and at the close presented a full statement of the working plans of the church through her six channels of benevolence, and the order of the Assembly for stated bi-monthly collections for these several objects, and called upon the congregation to vote by the uplifted hand whether this order of the Assembly should be truly and faithfully obeyed, and it was carried 'nem. con.' Our collections are small, but I hope they will increase. We had some thirty-three additions, on profession, at our last communion, 8th of February, and we hope for others in our approaching communion in April, at the time our Presbytery meets here."

PLANT FOR GOD.

With the return of spring, our Christian farmers should remember their stewardship. Let them now register a solemn vow to give to the service of God either a certain proportion of the products of their whole farm, or set apart a particular piece of ground, and carefully plant and tend it for the Lord. It is probable that all farm products will bring a good price during the present year, and that large contributions will be required to sustain the various departments of benevolent enterprise. Thus far our churches in the cities and larger towns have borne the chief pecuniary burdens of Zion. Let our rural population now do their full part in this blessed work, and all will be well.

FRESH AIR.

Who can tell how many dull discourses and sleepy congregations have resulted from the neglect of proper ventilation? The atmosphere of some of our churches becomes absolutely appalling before the close of public worship. Let the trustees of our ill-ventilated edifices already built, awake to the importance of pure air; and let those who are now building, see to it that the health-giving breezes find their way properly into the sanctuary. Let all read the following from an exchange:

ONE OF OUR FRIENDS.

Who is the friend that comes in at the window oftener than at the door, that hovers around our bed at night, and yet is fresher than we are in the morning, when we wake? We have never seen his face, and yet we know him very well. He is one of our very best friends; if we part with him we die. We shall never shut him out if we can help it. Sometimes, when we do so, he shakes the doors and windows, trying to get in. Sometimes he comes down the chimney, and blows the smoke in our faces. Sometimes he sobs, as if he were unhappy, and the window panes are wet with his tears. This is when he is shut out in rainy weather; but when it is fair again, you raise the sash, and he comes in and kisses you as kindly as ever. He is as fond of play as any of you; in winter he builds snow forts, and puts white caps on the fence posts, and balls in the empty birds' nests, and snow in the traveller's pockets. He breathes on the drifts when the spring comes, and melts them away; he dries up the mud, and shakes the dew from the grass, and whispers to the violets that it is time to open their blue eyes. He brings in at the window the songs of birds, and the smell of roses, and of new mown hay. He helps the schoolboy to fly his kite, and keeps his windmill whirling all night when he is asleep. In the autumn he has a great time, shaking the apples and nuts from the trees, and tossing about the red yellow leaves, and hiding them away where we shall never see them again. He likes fire as well as we do, and always rushes toward it whenever he gets a chance. If he did not breathe upon it, it would go out. He is all around us, outside; he is within us—in every vein, and muscle, and nerve. Every drop of blood upon which he has not breathed, turns black and dead. We should always receive this friend in our houses whenever we can, and go out to meet him very often indeed. There are no strong arms and cheerful hearts except those who have him for an intimate friend. His name is Air.

CARE OF INVESTMENTS.

"I give fifty dollars a year to the cause of missions, and that is all I can do," said Mr. S., when it was recommended to him to make himself familiar with the missionary operations to the support of which his annual donation was devoted. He gave fifty dollars, but made no inquiries as to the work for the promotion of which it was ostensibly given. He made an annual investment in missionary stock; but never looked after the investment to see whether it was productive or not.

He would not have pursued a similar course in relation to any other investment. If he had invested in a railway, or an insurance company, or in government securities, he would have kept a watchful eye upon his investments. He would have acted on the principle, that the concern that was worth investing in, was worth looking after.

Many, it is feared, pursue a similar course. They give to missions, but take no interest in the missionary work—at least do not take an interest sufficient to cause them to keep themselves well posted up in missionary operations. Every contributor to the missionary cause should be familiar with what is going on in the missionary field. It would be a most valuable means of grace to his soul.—New York Observer.

The Triennial Catalogue of the Western Theological Seminary, just published, shows a present enrolment of 133; namely, Resident Licentiates, 3; Resident Graduate, 1; Senior Class, 44; Middle Class, 49; Junior Class, 36. Of these Pennsylvania furnishes 61, and Ohio 36. There are graduates of Washington College, 41, and of Jefferson College, 28. Of the Senior and Middle Classes, 11 are in the army, and 7 are absent for other reasons. The actual attendance thus appears to be 115. It is gratifying to find so large a number of our young men preparing for the ministry in a Seminary which derives its pupils from a section of country so eminently patriotic, and which at the same time is excelled by no other in the multitudes of its moral, educated, and religious young men, sent to the camp and the battle field. The examination of the Classes will commence on Monday, April 20th, and the term will end with Wednesday, April 22d.—Banner.

The Rev. William Pelan, the pastor of the church in Connersville, Indiana, writes, under date of February 26—"Our church has experienced a precious season, and is greatly revived. We have just closed a series of meetings, during which sixteen were added to the church on profession of faith; four were added a few weeks ago, and now others are hopefully awakened."

Sixty-five students are in attendance at the Synodical College, Missouri, notwithstanding the political agitations, in which Missouri has so largely shared; and Professors and students are quietly pursuing their labours.

RESOLUTIONS OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY IN REGARD TO COLLECTIONS.

Whereas, Many of our churches do not contribute to our benevolent enterprises, and whereas, it is desirable to test the power of simultaneous effort; and whereas, an emergency has arisen, requiring the cooperation of all our churches to save our Boards from serious embarrassment, therefore,

Resolved, 1. That this Assembly earnestly request all our churches that have no fixed times for the purpose, to take up annual collections as follows, viz.

For the Board of Domestic Missions on the first Sabbath of November.

For the Board of Foreign Missions on the first Sabbath of January.

For the Board of Education on the first Sabbath of March.

For the Colportage Fund of the Board of Publication on the first Sabbath of May.

For the Board of Church Extension on the first Sabbath of July.

For the Disabled Ministers' Fund on the first Sabbath of September.

Resolved, 2. That when the annual collections cannot be taken up on the days above designated, it be recommended to take them up as soon thereafter as possible.

Philadelphia, March 16th, 1863.

FORM OF BEQUEST FOR DISABLED MINISTERS, OR FAMILIES OF DECEASED MINISTERS.

I give and bequeath to my executors hereinafter named, ——— dollars, in trust, nevertheless that they shall, within ——— months after my decease, pay the same to George H. Van Gelder, Treasurer of the Trustees of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, or to his successor for the time being in said office, for the use of such disabled ministers and their families, as the said, The Trustees of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, shall or may designate.

FORM OF A DEVISE OR BEQUEST TO ANY OF THE BOARDS OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

The State Laws differ so much that no one form will answer in all the States, but in every case it is essential to give the RIGHT CORPORATE NAME.

The oldest Board was originally called the Board of Missions, but is now incorporated under the laws of Pennsylvania under the title of "The Trustees of the Board of Domestic Missions of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

Of the Board of Education the corporate name is, "The Trustees of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

The Board of Foreign Missions is incorporated under the laws of New York, under the style of "The Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

The Board of Publication is incorporated under the laws of Pennsylvania under the style of "The Trustees of the Presbyterian Board of Publication."

The Board of Church Extension of the General Assembly is not incorporated, but the following form of bequest, it is supposed, would be valid.

I bequeath to my executors the sum of ——— dollars, in trust, to pay over the same in ——— after my decease, to the person who, when the same shall be payable, shall act as Treasurer of the Board of Church Extension of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, located in the City of St. Louis, Missouri, to be applied to the uses and purposes of said Board, and under its directions, and the receipt of the said Treasurer shall be a full and legal acquittance of my said executors for the same.

When real estate or other property is given, let it be particularly described.

MATTERS ON THE FRONTIER.

Kansas.

Some of our best people, as I believe I mentioned before to you, are absent in the service of the country. During the fall and winter also, a large portion of the people are necessarily away from home, engaged in the fur business.

I believe I mentioned in my last report the raid that was made on this place by marauders. We feel that we will be very much exposed this summer to similar attempts. There is also considerable danger to be anticipated from the Indians, especially the Pawnees. Four men, within the last twelve months, in this vicinity, have been missing, supposed to be killed by these Indians. But why do I mention these matters? Simply because they must convey to your mind some idea of our field of labour, together with its perquisites and emoluments.

I have been more discouraged within the last year than I have ever been before. "Yet, though often cast down, I am not forsaken." There is, I think, a good foundation laid here for a church, and, of course, it will require years of labour and prayer to build up a structure, with suitable materials, upon that foundation.

There are two elements in our little church which are promising for the future. 1st. The most of the families in the church were raised Presbyterians. They have the strength and stamina of a solid and sound religious education. 2d. There are those who have the spirit of prayer, as well as Christian knowledge. These two elements, with the blessing of God, must make a church against which the gates of hell cannot prevail.

But just now we are suffering greatly as a church, from the effects of this war, either directly or indirectly. But as to that matter, what church is not suffering? though churches struggling for life, and contending for every inch of ground, must feel the evils more perceptibly. It is like drawing their very life-blood.

In the midst of my own trials and difficulties, I would not forget that you have yours; and while we missionaries ask for your prayers, and have your sympathy, we certainly cannot forget to pray for you, and sympathize with you. We are all co-workers in accomplishing the same great purpose, and our prayer for each other should be, "The beauty of the Lord our God be upon us, and establish thou the work of our hands upon us, yea, the work of our hands establish thou it."

DWELLING TOGETHER IN UNITY.

Illinois.

We endeavoured to observe the Week of Prayer—the first week in January. I proposed the matter to the Methodist and Moravian ministers first, and we agreed to hold a union prayer-meeting, and all the evangelical denominations of Christians of our town entered into the arrangement, and it was held on Monday evening, January 5th, at the Moravian church, on Tuesday in the Baptist, on Wednesday in the Presbyterian church, on Thursday in the Methodist, on Friday in the Albright, and on Saturday in the German Reformed. The minds of the people seemed to be prepared by the Divine Spirit, and they came out in numbers, and the houses were crowded from the first. At the end of the first week, there was a universal feeling that it was good for "brethren to dwell together in unity;" and as all seemed desirous to continue the services, it was resolved that the meeting should go on for a second week, and then for a third, and finally a fourth was occupied in the delightful services of united prayer, praise and exhortation freely interspersed throughout. In connection with these means of grace, and in answer to the prayers of God's people, the Holy Spirit was freely given, and many, we trust, were born into the kingdom. Thirty-three of those thus brought to Christ joined the Presbyterian church. All the other churches received accessions, but I am not able to say just how many. We feel that we have great reason to thank God and take courage. In addition to this, we have made arrangements by which the debt on our church has been removed. Also, the congregation, by a direct vote, have resolved that hereafter the several Boards of the church should be remembered in collections at the times designated by the General Assembly. The question may be asked us, Are you not now ready to become self-sustaining? I would be glad to answer this question in the affirmative, but I cannot. While there has been a handsome addition made to the communion of the church, there has not been a proportionable advance in the material ability of the people. The cost of living is at least one-third more than it was a year ago.

FOREIGN MISSIONS FROM THE DOMESTIC SERVICE.

New York.

The quarter now past has been one of unusual interest to this church and congregation, and very touching to me. On the 21st ult. my daughter sailed as a missionary's wife, for Canton, China. Their regard for, and interest in her, and prayers for her future usefulness and welfare, was manifested in the intensest feeling of the people on every occasion in which they could show it. Her marriage in the church was very largely attended by ministers and laymen; and the farewell meeting was one of those rare occasions in which every one is moved and melted. Perhaps no such thing ever happened before in our country. The strong attachment manifested by her class of fourteen young ladies, and how the teachers were drawn together as with magic, in tears of affection, is best known by their presents. Their assembling at the parsonage, and the stranger ordeal through which they passed there—their sorrow and joy—it was like a spring season, or April showers; there were clouds and rain, but the rays of the sun made the drops to appear as so many diamonds. Truly, we are a missionary church. Our week of prayer was continued for four weeks, with considerable interest, and the meetings very well attended, considering the almost impassable state of the roads. A few, at least, have been converted, and quite a number are interested in the subject of religion, especially among the young. All our meetings are well attended, and a manifest spirit of prayer enjoyed in them; in fact, our growth has been and is steady and encouraging. My health is now very good. Praying with and for you, that the kingdom of Christ may advance everywhere.

I remain yours, in Christ.

GOOD NEWS FROM A FAR COUNTRY.

Colorado.

Dear Brother—The clouds that hung so heavily over this church when I came here last November, seem now about to break in rich blessings upon us. I shall not weary you with a recital of the difficulties that have been overcome, or the many labours performed during the past four months. Suffice it to say, the former have been overcome, and the latter cheerfully done; and all through the abounding grace of God.

I have abundant reason to thank the Lord, and take courage. My great fear in leaving the little flock at H., to come here, was that I would not meet with such warm-hearted Christians as I was leaving; but I find friends multiplying around me daily.

The first of March, 1863, will be long remembered by me. It seems to me the turning point with this church. Our communion season will be the fourth Sabbath of this month, at which time we will receive from fifteen to twenty members by certificate. We will organize a Sabbath-school the 15th of this month; we have been waiting for books. I think we will have about fifty scholars. I have just returned from prayer-meeting—there were about forty in attendance. This evening was the most impressive meeting we have had. There was unmistakable evidence of the presence of the Spirit. At the present time they are seeing what salary can be raised; but I have not been advised as to how much has been raised, or what prospect there is. If I can ascertain in time to let you know before the 20th, I will do so. I was told after prayer-meeting that the congregation intend giving us a donation party next week.

The ladies of the church have already made Mrs. D. a present of thirty-eight dollars. This shows, dear brother, the spirit of their hearts toward us. I feel like saying that this church will not be a burden to the Board very long. The monthly expenses of the church have been about twenty dollars. On this account I have not asked them to contribute to the various Boards of our church. There is no point under the care of the Board more important than this. Hold us up for awhile, and the ingatherings of souls here will prove a rich harvest indeed. The hall where I now preach is filled with an intelligent, attentive, and highly interesting audience. Oh, brother, pray for us, that souls may be awakened and brought to Jesus Christ

Yours, in brotherly love.

CHURCH ORGANIZED IN FAR WEST.

Nebraska.

Dear Brother—I have delayed my quarterly report a few days, to enable me to report a new Presbyterian church in this territory.

Last Saturday, the 28th of March, I organized a Presbyterian church in this place, with nine members—three men and six women—eight having made a profession before, and one for the first time. Three more are expected to unite in a few few weeks, on profession of faith for the first time. Of the eight who had been members before, three came from Congregational churches, two from Baptist churches, two from the Cumberland Presbyterian church, and one from the Old-school Presbyterian. The church chose a brother to the office of ruling elder who had previously held that office in the Cumberland Presbyterian church in the State of Missouri. We had a communion season on Sabbath. The services were well attended, and most of the members of the Congregationalist and Methodist churches of this place united in the communion. There was deep solemnity throughout the entire services, and I believe we had the presence of the Divine Spirit. Blessed be God! I am looking for greater things than these, for our God is a great God and a great King.

It is according to my wish that the organization is small, because I feared we could not secure perfect unity if we had received many more, in the present state of this community. I think we can much more safely receive members after the organization has well defined its position. Laxity of discipline has been a great curse to several branches of the church in this territory. I wish to be guarded where some have erred. Trusting in God, with whom is the residue of the Spirit, we go forward sowing the precious seed, hoping, in due time, through grace, to reap in joy. If spared to make another report, I hope to be allowed to record additional tokens of divine grace. Indeed, this community has been deeply impressed with the claims of God on them personally during the past fall and winter.

THE WAR—SIGNS OF BRIGHTNESS.

Illinois.

You will excuse a very brief report, my dear brother, when I say to you that my wife has just returned from Tennessee, where for three weeks she has been in attendance upon a sick soldier son. She found him alive, and, thanks be to God, owing to her careful nursing, she left him as she hoped, convalescent. O this terrible war! It is eating up our substance, and desolating our homes. There are but few families in all this region that have not "one vacant chair." And O how many firesides are rendered for ever desolate! In the midst of these overwhelming sorrows, there seems to be left scarcely time for attention to the concerns of eternity. Still, on some of our neighbouring congregations the Spirit is being poured out in copious measure, and this spring we anticipate a more encouraging report from our churches generally than we have had for several years past.

I. MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

RESOLUTIONS OF THE BOARD.

At a meeting of the Presbyterian Board of Education, held on the 3d of April, 1863, the following resolution was adopted.

Resolved, That the Board of Education, having been deprived by death of their late Vice-President, the Rev. John McDowell, D. D., do here record their deep sense of this bereavement, and their devout gratitude for the many valuable services of that godly and faithful minister of our Lord Jesus Christ.

From the origin of this institution, through all its varied trials and successes, until its present widely extended growth and usefulness, he has continued its warm friend and firm supporter; and has uniformly brought to it, both as an officer and a member, that zeal, fidelity, and prudence, which marked him in every place of trust and duty.

Our minutes bear record to his punctuality and faithfulness; and, in addition to his counsels and labours, we have had, in all his personal intercourse, the example of a good man, who daily walked with God, and lived in perfect charity with his brethren.

In common with our whole church, so widely extended and trained during his ministry of more than half a century; with the many public institutions in which he was an active worker; with the different congregations which he served as a faithful pastor; and with the thousands of Christian people who speak his name with reverence and love; we make our special tribute to his memory.

And in tendering a copy of this record to his bereaved widow and family, we invoke for them those rich consolations which have crowned such a useful life with such a blessed death.

EXTRACTS FROM DR. MAGIE'S SERMON ON THE DEATH OF DR. McDOWELL.

One question remains: What was the secret of John McDowell's great power? And a proper answer to it can scarcely fail to be useful to survivors. Let me then say, first and foremost, this good man felt deeply his dependence on help from heaven, and preached as if nothing saving could be effected without the accompanying presence and power of the Holy Ghost.

Not only was it an article of his creed, but an abiding conviction of his heart, that though Paul may plant and Apollos water, God alone giveth the increase. The one sentiment which appeared constantly uppermost in his mind was this, "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts." Hence his very weakness made him strong; and so confident was he of obtaining help from heaven, that sometimes, for weeks together, he never ascended the pulpit stairs, or entered a school-house, or met a few people in a private parlor, without expecting to be a blessing to at least some one soul. Ah! how could he be otherwise than effective, when God was thus with him in all his multiplied ministrations, giving testimony to the word of divine grace?

A pulpit orator, in the common acceptation of the word, he never pretended to be; but he was something unspeakably nobler and better—a good steward of the mysteries of God. Never, it seems to me, could a minister love more to hold up Christ as the centre of attraction to a lost world. If ever any one delighted to stand at the foot of the cross, and point men, for sanctification as well as pardon, to its bleeding victim, it was Dr. McDowell.

His sermons were full of the very marrow and fatness of the gospel, and they were delivered with an earnestness and an unction which gave them a passport to the heart. If he did not excite momentary and loud-sounding applause, he lodged truth weighty as eternity in the mind; and if he was not run after for his oddities, he was beloved for his straightforward honesty. As you looked upon the preacher, you saw no marks of high intellectuality; and as you listened to his voice, you heard nothing to amuse, but there was so entire an absorption of the man in his theme, that you laid aside the character of a critic, and listened as a sinner in need of mercy. I once sat by the side of an eminent preacher, as Dr. McDowell delivered one of his simple, every-day discourses. As the service closed, he turned to me and said, "Never, never did I hear a man who could repeat the old, plain truths of our common salvation with such freshness, vividness, and power." The remark was perfectly just, and it goes far to reveal the secret of the mighty influence he wielded month after month, and year after year.

What an example have we here for candidates for the ministry and occupants of the pulpit.

His life is adapted to be all the more useful, because it exhibits nothing which others may not hope to attain. Only let all preachers feel the same compassion for dying men which he felt, and enter, as he did, into the plans and purposes of the Redeemer for their salvation, and why may they not expect to be blessed to some good degree as he was? Distinguished talent and lofty eloquence, such as Davies, and Griffin, and Chalmers, and Hall possessed, are for the few and not for the many; but all may be great in the sight of the Lord. God, in infinite mercy to the church and the world, multiply the number of such ministers as John McDowell! Then we might expect that not another generation would go down to the dead before Zion shall look forth as the morning, fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners!

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION IN SCHOOLS, ACADEMIES, AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

MOTIVES TO PRAYER FOR COLLEGES.

Extracts from an Address delivered in the First Presbyterian Church, in the City of New York, February 26, 1863, by the Rev. William G. T. Shedd, D. D.

1. The first motive that meets us, to pray for young men in a course of liberal education, lies in the fact that this class of persons is destined to exert more influence on society than any other one.

Educated men rule the world. Knowledge is power. The difference between the civilized and the savage man is owing to the superiority in information which the former possesses over the latter. The one holds a secret of influence which the other lacks; and hence, in the contest between the enlightened and the barbarous nations of the earth, one man chases a thousand, and two men put ten thousand to flight. And the same fact appears when we narrow the circle, and look for the most powerful and influential class in a particular people. The "governing classes," as they are called, are the educated classes. Look at England, our fatherland, and see what a prodigious power is wielded by those who have been trained in her schools and universities. The reverence for birth, and blood, and wealth, is undoubtedly great in that aristocratic empire, with its descending orders of nobility, and its noble and royal lineages, running back in straight lines for a millennium; but he is greatly mistaken who supposes that the influence of the two houses of Parliament, of those peers and commoners who from year to year administer the complex affairs of the British realm, with a sagacity and ability that is wonderful, is due merely or mainly to the accident of birth or wealth. The legislature that sits in St. Stephen's is the most severely educated, the most thoroughly disciplined political body upon the globe. The English earl, knowing that, by the constitution of England, his first-born must one day take his own place in the national councils and debates, subjects him to the strictest educational methods, and causes him to pass through all the curriculums, so that, like the English racer, he may be thoroughbred. And hereby power is acquired and kept by that governing class; power to think, power to write, power to speak, power to wield the fierce democracy by the sway of a superior intelligence, by the glance and sweep of an eye that sees further than that in the head of an illiterate man.

But this may be illustrated yet again, by remarking the influence which a single liberally educated person exerts in any single community. He may be a teacher, a physician, a lawyer, or a clergyman. In this case, he is unquestionably a source and medium of greater impression upon the vicinity about him than any man of merely common education and ordinary information. The less favoured members of society go to him for knowledge; they send their children to him for education; they follow his prescriptions in the hour of sickness and death; they entrust their property to his management before the courts of law; and they go into the house of God upon the Sabbath, to learn from him their duty and the way of salvation. When liberal education makes itself felt in this way, through the medium of a profession, the influence which it exerts is unquestionably second to none save that of divine truth and of the Holy Ghost. And even when the educated man does not devote his powers and his culture in any direct and specific manner to the service of his fellow-men, he nevertheless inevitably exerts an indirect influence. How many a clergyman can testify to the great impression which a man of collegiate training, literary tastes, but skeptical principles, makes upon the society, and especially the youthful portion of society, in which he moves. So true is it that knowledge inevitably imparts a species of superiority to its possessor.

Now, it is for the sanctification of this knowledge, the consecration of these educated men to God, that we are here convened to pray. The conversion of any soul, be it in the heart of ignorant and degraded Africa, is a great and glorious event, and all the angels of God sing for joy over it, as they did when the material creation first burst, like an explosion upon their vision. Certainly, then, the regeneration of an educated mind, that is destined to be a power in society, and a radiating centre of influence for scores of years, must be an occurrence that is witnessed with infinite rejoicings in both the third and seventh heavens. And with what a thrill of pleasure does the militant church upon earth, struggling with her two great foes, the ignorant superstition and the cultivated infidelity of the world, hear the tidings, that the grace of God, which bringeth salvation, has entered a college, and subsidized its youthful talent, and its thorough discipline, to the purpose and work of human redemption. Lord Bacon, the most sagacious of Englishmen, has said that the destiny of a nation is decided by the complexion of the principles which its educated young men take with them into contemplative and active life. Every page of English history proves the truth of the remark. When the young men of England were imbued by their teachers and the educational methods that prevailed, with a firm confidence in the truths of natural and revealed religion, a glorious era in the annals of Great Britain was the consequence. In that grand period, when such high-minded and reverential men as Sidney and Raleigh were representatives of "Young England," the foundations of the English church and the English state were strengthened and consolidated, as they never have been before or since. But when, from the speculations of Hobbes and Bolingbroke, and the semi-infidel educational methods that had crept into the English universities, the young nobles of the land had imbibed a bitter hatred of Christianity, and an utter indifference towards the first truths of ethics and religion; when "Young England" was represented by a Wharton and a Chesterfield, a shock was given to the foundation and fabric of English greatness, which it required a century of civil commotion and foreign war, together with a revival of the old evangelism of the Wickliffes and the Latimers, to recover from.

A sermon for the Board will be preached by the Rev. W. G. T. Shedd, D. D., on the Sabbath evening preceding, in the Scotch Presbyterian church, the Rev. Dr. McElroy's, and a brief Abstract of the Annual Report will be presented.

News received to April 13th, 1863.

LATEST DATES AT THE MISSION STATIONS.

Iowa, March 11th; Omaha, March 24th; San Francisco, March 13th; Tungchow, December 29th; Shanghai, January 22d; Ningpo, January 20th; Canton, January 30th; Allahabad, February 20th; Etawah, February 18th; Futtehgurh, February 20th; Dehra, February 18th; Sabathu, February 18th; Kapurthala, February 19th; Lahor, February 16th; Gujaranwala, February 2d; Corisco, January 9th; Bogota, February 12th.

ADMISSION OF CONVERTS TO THE CHURCH.

Mr. Rankin mentions the admission of four additional members to the church at Ningpo. "Three are women from the region of Bao-kô-tah, and the fourth is a female servant of Mrs. Morrison, and is a very intelligent woman. Two were baptized day before yesterday by Mr. Morrison, and two a fortnight ago by Mr. Green. There are other applicants more or less hopeful; though, I regret to say, that in general, there is not much progress apparently in religious matters."

MISSION IN JAPAN.

Fuller accounts have reached us than were given in the last number of the Record, though not of later date, which possess much interest. Several young men were placed under Dr. Hepburn's instruction in some branches of learning; they are accompanied every day by an inspector or spy. To the doctor's surprise, he found them already well advanced in several kinds of learning—as much so as most graduates of our colleges. They had acquired this knowledge from Dutch books, under the tuition of a self-taught Japanese in Yedo. Daily opportunities would occur for giving these interesting youths a correct idea of the Christian religion. Dr. Hepburn also mentions a report, received through the natives, that the prohibition of all references to Christianity in Japanese books, would no longer be enforced.

GIFTS OF EUROPEAN FRIENDS IN INDIA.

The Treasurer's report of the Lodiana Mission for the last year, acknowledges the receipt of over $6000 at different stations of that mission from European friends, besides nearly an equal sum at Kapurthala, chiefly from the Rajah and his lady, towards the support of that station and the building of a church there. These are very gratifying proofs of the confidence and sympathy extended towards our missionary brethren, by those who have the best opportunities of knowing them and their work in the cause of Christ.

ARRIVALS IN INDIA.

The Rev. E. H. Sayre and his wife, after a somewhat protracted voyage, arrived safely at Calcutta, and reached Futtehgurh on the 6th of February. Mr. Sayre speaks of much pleasant intercourse with a large company of Methodist missionaries, who were also passengers in the same ship.

MISSION IN NEW GRANADA.

Mr. Wallace's letter contains some encouraging notices of the mission in New Granada. The civil war is ended, at any rate for the present. The breach between the government and the Roman church has been further widened by the removal of the nuns from the convents in Bogota. Several hundred were thus compelled to seek homes among their relatives, causing much excitement in the city, but this was much abated. An increasing desire for Protestant books had become evident, so that more copies had been sold in the last two months than in the rest of the year. Ten dollars' worth of Testaments, 'Noches,' &c., were bought lately by a man from the State of Antioquia. Opportunities of religious conversation with a few persons had recently occurred. The attendance on the English service had increased to sixteen. It is still the day of small things in this mission, but we must remember the parable of the grain of mustard seed.

VACCINATION AMONG THE INDIANS.

The Rev. R. J. Burtt mentions, incidentally, his having vaccinated lately 448 persons, men, women, and children, among the Omaha Indians,—one example out of many to show the benefits of missions in regard to this life.

MISSION TO THE CHINESE IN CALIFORNIA.

Report of the Year 1862.

So far as regards external appearances, a person might say that at the time of making this our annual report, we are very nearly where we were a year ago, so that the report of last year, with a change of dates, and a few unimportant alterations, would suit as well for this year. That, however, would be a hasty judgment. True, we occupy the same premises; go through nearly the same daily routine; we preach the same gospel, and have similar congregations; nevertheless, every day has had its own incidents, and needs a new record.

Regular Services.

For about seven weeks out of the fifty-two, your missionary was laid aside by sickness; but during that time neither the chapel services nor tract distribution were interrupted, those duties being entrusted to the assistant.

Regularly throughout the year, twice on the Sabbath, and once during the week, a congregation has been assembled, in which prayers have been offered and praises have been sung to Jehovah, and his truth has been proclaimed; and we have been encouraged; for on every occasion, some for whose benefit this house of worship was built, have been moved to turn their steps towards this place of prayer, and very often we have been cheered by the presence of a much larger congregation than had been expected.

Casual and regular Attendants—Converts.

At almost every meeting there are present those who have never been within a Christian church before. For the benefit of such, we have to go back to the first principles of the doctrine of Christ. Also, at every meeting there are others who have already heard much truth, and to edify these, stronger meat ought to be furnished; therefore, to give each his portion, things both new and old must be prepared.

One encouraging feature of our mission in this city, is the tolerable degree of regularity in the attendance of many persons on these religious services. Certain faces we always expect to see, and there are a few who have been more or less constant attendants from the commencement of our labours in this field; and the attention they give to the unfolding of the truth, and the interest they manifest, are cheering.

During the year three persons have made a public profession of their faith in Christ. One of these is now in Nevada Territory, and from him we hear occasionally by letter. The person received last year has returned to China. Two who remain in this city conduct themselves with propriety, are growing in knowledge, and seem desirous to do good to others.

The little Sabbath evening service, which commenced with four or five as a meeting for prayer and conversation, has assumed nearly the same interest and importance as the other services.

Teaching—Out-door Work.

For a few months of the winter we have given instruction to a small number of boys and young men, but their attendance was irregular; and now, as the spring immigration has commenced again, our Sabbath mornings will often need to be occupied in preaching to the strangers at their temporary lodgings.

As heretofore, a portion of each week is devoted to out-door work, in visiting Chinamen in different parts of the city, and in conversation with them in their shops and boarding-houses. Tracts are distributed, though sparingly, and many tracts and portions of Scripture have, in various ways, been sent to distant mining towns in different parts of the State. The three or four months of the spring and early part of summer was a busy season with us; indeed we laboured beyond our strength; but we saw that the harvest was great and the labourers few. Seeing ship-load after ship-load of human beings landed here, and believing that every man had a soul to be saved or lost, and knowing that our opportunities for benefitting them must be limited, for in a few days they gather up their luggage and hurry off to the mines; therefore, whatever we would do for them had to be done quickly.

This branch of our work is in many respects quite interesting, while it is laborious, and in some respects disagreeable. The immigrants are from many different towns and counties in southern China, and soon after landing here they separate again to many different portions of this State, and scarcely any of them have ever yet heard the truth which was preached by Christ and his apostles, and possibly they may never hear it again. Our preaching to such assemblies is doubtless very much like sowing seed broadcast over ground that has never been ploughed, and may never be hoed or weeded; but possibly now and then a seed may take root.

Number of the Chinese—Impressions made on them.

There are now in California perhaps sixty thousand Chinamen. The mass of these are engaged in mining, but they have their own doctors and merchants in most of their settlements. They are a travelling people after they have once been shaken loose from the soil on which they were born, and there is a great moving to and fro of Chinamen all over the country.

Many Chinamen find employment as house servants, a few as labourers in markets and warehouses, and sea-going vessels; hundreds are employed in manufactories, and more in the lighter kinds of agricultural work.

All these men are daily learning facts and receiving impressions. A large portion of them will return to their own country, to mingle again with the dense population of that idolatrous empire, and what they learn will be carried home with them, and will be retailed to their neighbours. If what they learn while here is good, its influence throughout China will be good; if what they learn is bad, its influence will be bad; therefore the more the church can do towards the evangelization of the Chinese in California, the more is she doing, indirectly, for the evangelization of China.

One result of Chinese emigration will be to correct their absurd notions in matters of geography, history and science, and to enlarge their knowledge of the arts. To promote this end, we give a lecture occasionally on some of these subjects, accompanied with illustrations. By this means important truth has been imparted to many who would not have come merely to hear a religious discourse.

A Moravian Assistant—Concluding Views.

We have alluded to the help derived from the services of a Chinese teacher and assistant; we may also speak of another source of encouragement. A young mechanic from Philadelphia, a member of the Moravian church, felt his spirit stirred to put forth efforts to save the heathen whom he daily meets upon the streets; and so, at his request, and at his expense, we have at different times had sheet tracts prepared for him to distribute. We trust that his zeal, his influence, and his prayers, may not be altogether in vain.

Finally, the end of the year finds us, though unprofitable servants, still spared; it finds us blessed with comfortable health in our family, and with friends to sympathize with and to pray for us; it finds us, while regretting our lack of zeal, and sorrowful because no greater good has been accomplished, yet thankful that much seed has been sown, and that a little of what seems to be good fruit has been gathered, and thankful for the assurance we still have that the Holy Spirit is everywhere present, and able to make either this or that to prosper, according as seems best to him; it finds us still firm in the faith, that the knowledge of the Lord shall yet cover the earth, and that the time will come when every knee shall bow to Christ, and that this is to be accomplished by giving line upon line, and precept upon precept, just as your humble missionaries in various quarters of the earth are endeavouring to do.

We need hardly add that the preceding paper is from the pen of the Rev. A. W. Loomis, the only missionary to the Chinese in California.—Ed.

MISSIONS IN CHINA.

A JOURNEY ON THE YANG-TSZE.

The Rev. H. Y. Rankin, of the Ningpo Mission, sends us the following account of his journey on "The Great River." It was written at Shanghai, December 5th.

I have just returned from a very interesting trip up the Yang-tsze as far as Kiu-kiang, in the steamer "Po-yang," Captain Briggs. A free passage was generously offered me some months since, by R. R. Tyers, Esq., of Messrs. Olyphant & Co., the owners of the vessel, of which I availed myself, while awaiting the arrival of my family. Everything on board of this splendid steamer was wonderfully homelike, and her pious commander, and all connected with her, were as kind as possible. The "Po-yang" is one of a fleet of twenty or thirty steamers now coursing the great river of China, most of them averaging a thousand tons burden; and this number is every year increasing. She and her consort, the "Ta-kiang," are peculiar, in that they neither receive nor discharge cargo on the Sabbath, their worthy owners having, in all their vessels as in their other business transactions, maintained the observance of God's holy day.

One is struck upon sailing on the Ta-kiang or great river, as the Chinese generally term what we call the Yang-tsze, with the appropriateness of this name. Its muddy, turbid waters, remind me of the Mississippi; but for many miles, even above Shanghai, this stream is much wider than the "Father of Waters," and the current is probably stronger. By reason of constant changes in the channel, and the want of proper buoys as yet, navigation is not a little dangerous for the first day out. This is especially the case at the Sang-shan or Wolf's Hill Crossing, when the vessel's course is turned first to the north, and then after a while to the distant south bank of the river. From this point onward the steamer moved on by day and night, so that in forty-eight hours we had reached Kiu-kiang, some five hundred miles from Shanghai. There we remained two or three days, discharging and taking in a full cargo of tea; and reached Shanghai after an absence of eight days.

The banks of the Yang-tsze present a considerable variety of hills and woodland, and picturesque old cities and pagodas; though the hills, like most of those in China, have a more volcanic and sterile appearance than we are accustomed to in the west, and there are long stretches of lowlands, which, during the summer months, are overflowed for miles in the interior.

The first point of real attraction is the city of Chin-kiang-fu, which is perched on an elevation on the south bank of the river, at the junction of the Grand Canal, and whose river gates, (if they may be so called,) Golden and Silver Islands, which lie above and below it, are among the brightest gems of nature in China. They are both sacred isles of the Budhists, and have enjoyed celebrity for hundreds of years, though the Taepings, during their ruthless sway, made sad havoc of their temples and pagodas. The English Consulate is now beautifully situate among the fine old trees of Silver Island. With the exception of the officials connected with it, there are no foreigners residing on land in the vicinity of the city. There are, however, lying in the stream, a gunboat and custom-house vessel, and an opium ship; and there is an increasing trade at this port. Chin-kiang is slowly recovering from the desolation caused by various sieges, though it will require many years to regain its former eminence. The tide scarcely ever makes beyond this point.

Five hours after passing Chin-kiang, the walls and batteries of Nankin, also on the south bank, come in sight; but though we pass within stone's throw of the water defences, to our astonishment, there was scarcely a trace of the rebels visible outside their great capital. The walls of Nankin are twenty-seven miles in circumference, and greatly exceed in height and thickness those of ordinary Chinese cities. Until foreign intervention commenced, at the beginning of the year, a British man-of-war was stationed there; but now all communication seems to be cut off from the rest of the world, and a mysterious silence reigns within her palaces. Merchant steamers pass laden with Imperial troops, but no notice is taken of any such event. Yet they are sending out armies, as before, to conquer the country, and they keep up constant communication with Su-chan, and thence probably with foreign agents at this emporium, who provide them with necessary supplies; and they will probably be able to maintain a protracted siege, even though it be directed by foreigners. This event is doubtless not far distant, for Captain Osborne's steamers are being rapidly prepared in England, and many English officers are resigning from the Royal Navy to serve in the Chinese contingent.

One can hardly conceive the desolation through the region about Nankin, once so populous and well cultivated. The country formerly dotted with smiling villages, is now without an inhabitant, and much of the rich farm-land has become a jungle. Among other sad spots in view, is the site of the once populous city of Kiang-kiu, immediately opposite the Taeping capital, whose inhabitants were a few years ago suddenly swept away by the rebels, who had become suspicious of their loyalty to them, and the ominous name by which it is now known is the Deserted City.

Some distance beyond Nankin are the east and west Pillars, two precipitous rocks on either side of the river, and quite commanding it. That to the east was, until quite recently, under rebel sway, and had been strongly fortified by them, as a depository of their treasure, it was said; but they have been dispersed, and not one stone of their work now remains upon another. Further on lies the city of Woo-hoo, visited seven years ago by the Susquehanna, the first foreign war vessel that had then proceeded so far up the river. It is the last place of importance captured from the Taepings.

The next place of importance is the fine old city of Ngan-king, the capital of Ngan-hwuy. It is the first place of importance on the north bank, and its walls run close to the water's edge. There is a most picturesqe pagoda in the western suburb, which is also well fortified. Ngan-king was taken from the rebels more than a year ago, just about the time that the present emperor ascended the throne, on which account the title of "Good Luck" was at first given to his reign. The old viceroy of the Kiang provinces, Tsang Kwo-fan, resides at this city, and exercises an almost regal authority. His armies, after long years of doubtful conflicts, and many reverses, are gradually becoming more successful, and he may yet have the satisfaction of ruling at Nankin.

MISSIONARY WORK AT SAHARUNPUR IN 1862.

It was at this station the lamented missionary, the Rev. James R. Campbell, D. D., so long and so efficiently served the Lord. His labours were not in vain. One of his pupils, who was brought to the Saviour by him, and who afterwards became his fellow-labourer, is the writer of the following report, excepting the last paragraphs, which are from the pen of the Rev J. S. Woodside. This paper, therefore, possesses a peculiar interest, as written by a native Hindu minister of the gospel. Besides himself, there are three other native assistants at this station — a catechist, a Scripture-reader, and a teacher. The bereaved family of Dr. Campbell are still at Saharunpur, and both Mrs. and Miss Campbell are earnestly engaged in the care and instruction of native youths in the missionary schools.

Death of the Rev. J. R. Campbell, D. D.

In presenting a report of this station for the past year, we have to announce, with deep sorrow and profound regret, the sudden death of the Rev. J. R. Campbell, D. D., which took place at Landour, on the 18th of September, 1862.

He had been a missionary at this station for about twenty-six years, during which period he performed the work of his Divine Master faithfully and diligently. He has now gone to receive, for his years of indefatigable labour and toils, a glorious and rich reward. The loss sustained in his death is irreparable, but our loss is his eternal gain. We sympathize deeply with his doubly bereaved family in their sad affliction, and tender them the cheering consolation that his spirit, set free from its earthly house, is now at rest, and will partake throughout eternity of those joys which eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man to conceive, which God has prepared for those who love him.

The labours of the missionaries at this station, during the past year, have been as follows.

The Preaching of the Gospel at the Station.

As in previous years, so in the year just closed, the everlasting gospel of our blessed Saviour has been proclaimed daily, in different quarters of this city, to all those who were willing to hear the way of salvation explained through a crucified Redeemer. Though we have not much to say with regard to the result of our labours, we must not omit to state that there has been no opposition of any kind made to this part of our labours here, but there is a favourable work going on in the minds of many individuals. We are informed that many Hindu youths, generally those who were educated in our schools, and have lost their belief in the religion of their forefathers, have established a meeting among themselves for the purpose of giving a thorough investigation as to the demands of Christianity, and they have asked us to give them such books as will assist them in this, their all-important undertaking. The result of this is known to Him alone who sees all things from the beginning to the end. In our bazar preaching, the people, on some occasions, have collected in large numbers, and have generally heard with attention of the way that leads to life eternal. Some of the wives of the native Christians have gone among the villages near us to read and talk to females in their own houses.

Every Sabbath morning a regular service in Hindustani has been held in the Mission Church, throughout the year; these services have been attended by the Christian families, the orphan boys, the native students connected with our English schools, the servants employed on the premises, and occasionally by strangers and inquirers. The service in the city church every Sabbath afternoon continues to be attended by the pupils of the vernacular schools, their teacher, most of the orphan boys, residents of the city, and sometimes by those villagers who come here to have their cases decided in Government courts. The Thursday lecture on the Psalms, or on some other portions of the sacred Scriptures, has been kept up throughout the year. These services have been conducted alternately by the Rev. Dr. Campbell and Mr. Wylie. At one o'clock on Sabbath, a Bible class, and also a prayer-meeting on every Thursday evening, was conducted by Mr. Wylie, and kept up a part of the year. We intend to return there again. The prayer-meeting established by Mrs. Dr. Campbell many years ago, still continues, in which all the native Christian women assemble every Saturday evening, to pray for a blessing on missionary efforts here and throughout the world.

Itinerations and Fairs.

Three itinerations were made during the cold season, which occupied a little more than two months, in which period one hundred and seventy-five towns and villages were visited, and books distributed to those who could read. In some places our message had a good reception; in others it was heard indifferently. Yet we hope the good seed thus sown may have fallen on some good ground, and will spring up in God's own time. The great fair of Hardwar, which was very large this year, was attended by the native assistants, in company with missionaries from other stations. Two other small fairs in our immediate neighbourhood were visited as usual. At these places an effort was made to proclaim the gospel of peace to thousands who know not the way of salvation, or else neglect it to their own destruction. We leave the result entirely in God's hands.

Church.

The church has received an accession of eight members during the past year, six by baptism, one by certificate, and one on profession of her faith, who had been baptized in her infancy. Five of these were from the Orphan Institution. There has been one case of discipline, but he was afterwards restored to his former position. We have an inquirer who is now employed as a teacher in the Orphan Institution. We cannot receive this person into the church communion until we have a further proof of his sincerity. Other inquirers have occasionally appeared on the premises who asked us to give them some employment, which we could not do, so they went away after staying a day or two with us.

Schools.

The English school has been under the care of Mr. Wylie, as in former years, who has carried it on with the assistance of the Scripture-reader and monitors. The average attendance has been sixty-two. The studies have been almost the same as mentioned in our last report. The Scriptures have been studied in the three first classes. I may here state that Dr. Campbell wrote some time ago to Dr. Duff to send us from Calcutta a good teacher to assist in the English school. On Sabbath mornings, for nearly three hours, all the classes are formed into a Sabbath-school, in which the Scriptures and catechisms are taught. In this school we also required assistance, but Miss Campbell and her sister have promised to aid us when they come down from the hills. The attendance in the vernacular schools had been about sixty pupils, until the month of May last, when the head teacher became sick, and did not afterwards return to his post; since that time it has not been so large, but we trust it will come up again to its former position, when we have employed another teacher, for whom we are looking out. Christian doctrines have been taught in this as well as in the English school, by the native assistants.

Orphan Institution.

The number of orphans reported in our last was fifty-four; the number admitted during the year is thirteen. Out of this number eight died, and four ran away, leaving at the close of this year, fifty-five orphans in the Institution, all of whom are fed, clothed and taught, with the view of making them useful Christians, and instruments in God's hand of spreading the news of salvation among their heathen and benighted countrymen. Miss Campbell has been very useful among these poor orphans. She has divided them into four classes, and has taught them for nearly two hours each day. It is hardly necessary to mention the books they studied. The boys have much improved under her instruction. Miss Campbell's labours are not confined alone to the orphans, she has spent a portion of her time every morning in teaching the children of the native Christians here. May the Lord bless these feeble efforts for extension of his own glorious kingdom here below.

Notice of Mr. Wylie—A Tribute to the Memory of Dr. Campbell.

The foregoing report has been prepared by the Rev. T. W. J. Wylie, and it is thought best that it should go home just as it is. The production of such a report by a native brother missionary, now, in the good providence of God, left as our sole representative at Saharunpur, is the highest tribute that can be paid to the labours of our beloved brother Campbell, now deceased. Mr. Wylie has been trained since his infancy under Dr. Campbell's immediate personal care. He has for some years been associated with him in missionary labour, and as co-pastor of the native church; and it was fitting that this report of their last year's joint labours should be prepared by him. . . . It is sufficient to add, that our departed father and brother was beloved in no ordinary degree by every member of the mission, and his death is felt to be a personal loss by all. There is no member of the mission who has not been indebted to him for frequent acts of kindness, rendered with a cheerfulness and readiness that gave them double value. We mourn him as one beloved, not merely for his works' sake, but as one endeared to us by the tenderest ties of personal friendship and fraternal Christian regard.

In the decease of Dr. Campbell the church of Christ has sustained a public loss. The cause of missions had no warmer friend than he, and this holy cause has seldom been more faithfully represented on heathen soil than by him. The apostle to the Corinthians has said, regarding the public servants of the church, "It is required in stewards that a man may be found faithful." The characteristic here insisted upon was that which in a prominent degree distinguished the subject of this notice. Dr. Campbell was indeed a faithful steward. His entire character is summed up in this one word—"faithful." His whole career as a missionary exhibits a conscientious and persistent effort to neglect no duty, but carefully and efficiently to discharge every claim legitimately presented. "In season and out of season," he was ever at the post of duty, and at this post he fell, respected by the world at large, honoured by the church, and beloved by a large circle of friends in this and other lands, and in particular by his brother missionaries. He was "faithful unto death," and he has doubtless now obtained the glorious recognition of such a character, promised by the Saviour himself—"the crown of life which the Lord hath promised to them that love him."

AFRICA—CORISCO MISSION.

Reports of Native Assistants, for 1862.

We insert here two reports of native missionary labourers connected with the Corsico Mission. It will be remembered that the English is a language but lately and imperfectly acquired by them. They were scholars in the mission school. These reports are printed without correcting errors in grammar; a few errors, and but a few, in spelling have been corrected. These young men seem to have been taught the highest kind of knowledge by the Spirit of God, and they are trying to do good to their own people. They are both licentiates of the Presbytery of Corisco.

Andeke Injenji's Report.

Brethren—I shall give you an account of my work in our Master's vineyard. I visited Masâtâ twice. This is a branch of Munda river. While I was there I travelled from town to town, in order that I might tell the people about Christ. When I come to a town I go to the head-man's house, and invite the people to come and hear God's word. When I get through speaking, I ask them a great many questions, to see how they think of the truth, and whether they believe that there is a God. They generally answered that they believe, and that they like the truth very well, and are anxious to have a teacher, to teach them, and his teachings will help them to put away their wars. To them the gospel is still quite strange—calling me a white man, because I wear clothes like Utangani, and read also.

Visits to Ebenje—Reception by the People.

I visited Ebenjĕ twice for the same object. The teachings in Ebenjĕ are similar to those of Masâtâ. In these places I always held a prayer every morning and every evening with my boatmen, like with my family at home. And I desired as many as can come, to come to the evening service, and I was pleased to see a great many come out to hear; and every evening I would have thirty or thirty-five in attendance. While I was there a great many people spoke about becoming Christians. They inquired also how they can become Christians; and I told them, carefully, how they can. There were two young men whom I deemed to be serious. These people are not like the people in Masâtâ; many of these people have heard missionaries speak about God, and probably by their own Benga friends. They are anxious to have a missionary. They received me kindly, indeed; they were willing to have me stay among them, and teach them. Brethren, this made me remember of our Lord's harvest; truly, the harvest is great, but the labourers are few. "Pray ye, that the Lord of the harvest may send more labourers into his harvest." The former meetings in the neighbouring towns were continued when I came back from these journeys.

Notice of School at Ugobi—Preaching and Sunday-school Services.

Until I removed into Ugobi on the 20th of May, when Mr. De Heer left, there were sixteen scholars in the station. Now there remains eleven of this former number, three boys staying home on account of sickness. Bojoa, at Elongo, acting as interpreter for Mr. Clark, Ulenda, at Evangasimba, with Mr. Mackey. Nambo was taken away because Panzali went home. Panzali was employed by Mr. De Heer to work here. He went away on account of his misconduct. Now there are thirteen scholars.

We generally have thirty in attendance, and we have more when all the people are home. Mr. Nassau is the preacher, except when he is not at home. On Sunday before the meeting, I meet with the boys, and go over with them in the Benga catechism. May God bless his sermons, for they are very solemn. I conduct the Sunday-school myself—commence by singing, and then prayer—after prayer, the boys who can read, say the hymn which they had been committing during the week. It is carefully explained as they go along. May these means be blessed, and that the Lord of every tribe and nation will cause His truth to spread from pole to pole. O may the light of salvation shine on every soul—may this church on Corisco be a centre of light to those around. Please to remember me in the Lord. O may the Lord revive us! Amen.

I remain, as ever, affectionately,

ANDEKE INJENJI.

IBIA G. IKENGE'S REPORT.

Little Ilobi, McQueen Station, Sept. 23, 1862.

A report of the labours performed from the first of October, 1862, to this date.

We have had our stated services regularly, except when we were four times absent to Corisco to celebrate the Lord's Supper; and the regular attendance has been as last year, with little exception. We occasionally had more, then less.

One girl was received into the visible church, and one woman is yet under instruction. She has entertained a hope of being born again nearly a year and half ago, and has since walked worthy of the vocation wherewith she has been called.

Anxious Inquirers.

We had six inquirers; one woman, one girl, and four young men. The woman has not, of late, attended meetings regularly. She is a doctress, and has been much occupied in doctoring. The girl has been prohibited by her husband to attend meetings. This has been done through the instigations of his older wife. This woman flogged a little girl, another wife of her husband, one Sabbath night, for attending meetings. Younger women, in this country, have much opposition, in becoming Christians, from older ones. One of the young men is away, sick; two others have returned to their sinful course; and another does not give very clear proof of seriousness.

Schools.

The day-school had but four regular scholars, with about two or three occasional ones; but it was kept up, with such interruptions as are connected with a school of this sort here. As those who had begun to spell and to read have ceased to attend, no progress hardly is made, except two cases. The most steadfast scholar spells and reads some in Benga and English, and writes a little in both languages. This is worthy of notice, for it is the first case that has occurred here and at Gaboon, as far as I know, that a person who has no secular connection with mission, has learned to read and to write. This is regarded by the natives as an impossibility.

Sabbath-school—Faith expressed.

The Sabbath-school attendance is as last year. I would never have started the day-school had it not been for the grown-up persons, because I knew that it never would succeed. But none ought to be discouraged under any present difficulties, for they have often given way to diligence and perseverance. Faith will remove mountains of difficulties in due time.

By IBIA G. IKENGE, a servant of the church of Christ at Corisco and the regions adjacent.

OUR ANNUAL COLLECTION.

The General Assembly, held in Philadelphia in May, 1861, adopted a preamble and resolutions on the subject of simultaneous effort on behalf of its Boards, recommending a specified Sabbath to be used in the annual collection for each Board. These resolutions are published every month, on the last page of the Home and Foreign Record.

For the Colportage Fund of the Board of Publication, the Assembly designated THE FIRST SABBATH IN MAY.

As that day is now at hand, the Board respectfully reminds the pastors and churches of the fact, and earnestly solicits for the plan of the Assembly, the coöperation of all of them who have not fixed upon another Sabbath.

COLPORTAGE WORK PERFORMED LAST YEAR.

The Board has had in commission during the year ending March 1st, 1863, 102 colporteurs. Many of these have been prevented from reporting, owing, in various ways, to the disturbed condition of the country. Our statistics are, therefore, this year, far less perfect than usual. The reports received, give 5503 days of labour performed; 43,947 volumes sold; 72,299 volumes given away; 2,399,030 pages of tracts gratuitously distributed, and 337,314 persons visited, of whom about one-half were prayed with. Owing to the fact that a large proportion of this labour has been performed in camps and hospitals, and on ship-board, the sales reported are smaller than usual, and the gratuitous distributions much larger. The number of volumes given away is larger by one-half than in the year immediately preceding, and nearly thrice as large as in any other former year. This has been in accordance with the wishes of donors to our funds, a large proportion of whom have expressed the wish that their donations should be applied to gratuitous distributions among the soldiers and sailors.

GRATUITOUS DISTRIBUTIONS.

During the year past the Board of Publication has distributed gratuitously 99,249 volumes, and 3,082,998 pages of tracts. This includes distributions made both by colporteurs and by grant of the Executive Committee. A large number of chaplains, officers, and other persons, have been glad to render aid in this good work: so that, although the number of commissioned colporteurs has been smaller than usual, the Board has never had so many willing hands and hearts engaged in the work of placing its publications within reach of needy souls. We have good reason to believe that since the beginning of the war, over half a million of soldiers and sailors have, through various channels, received and read publications of this Board.

What mortal mind can compute the amount of good which may, by the blessing of God, result from the reading of these pages of God's own blessed truth.

THE LAST YEAR'S FIELD OF THE BOARD'S DISTRIBUTIONS.

Since the beginning of this unhappy civil war, the Board has been excluded wholly from the Southern States, and even in the Border States, it has been impossible to do much in the way of ordinary colportage work. But the providence of God opened a new, most inviting, and most important field for its labours, among the soldiers and sailors. The Board has, during the last year, devoted a large part of its efforts and its means to distributing its publications among these classes. Numerous packages have been forwarded to Fortress Monroe, Newport News, Port Royal, (South Carolina,) Fort Pickens, Ship Island, and New Orleans; also to Frederick City, Harper's Ferry, Cumberland, (Maryland,) various places in Western Virginia, Cumberland Gap, (Kentucky,) Nashville, Paducah, Mound City, Cairo, Columbus, (Kentucky,) Memphis, Helena, (Arkansas,) and the neighbourhood of Vicksburg. Our indefatigable District Superintendent of Colportage, Dr. C. O. Waters, has repeatedly gone down the Mississippi, and up the Cumberland and Tennessee rivers, not only supplying tens of thousands of soldiers singly with his own hands, but engaging, at suitable points, the aid of chaplains and others.

The military hospitals, established near almost every one of our cities and larger towns, have presented most inviting and interesting fields for distribution. Here have been found the thousands and tens of thousands of sick and wounded from the various armies. The Board has striven to place a book or tract in the hands of every one of these sufferers. Wherever a grant has been asked for, and wherever, without a request, it knew how to accomplish the distribution, it has forwarded supplies of reading to every hospital.

The southern prisoners in the hands of the United States government have been sought out and supplied wherever it was possible. Packages have been sent to them in the forts in the Delaware river, New York Bay, and Boston harbour; also in the prison camps in various parts of the West. It is probable that about twenty thousand such prisoners have received books and tracts. Very rarely, indeed, have they been rejected; far oftener they are received with tears of joy. And when these prisoners are exchanged, they carry away this good reading with them to their southern homes.

The sailors have not been overlooked in this good work. To the extent of its means and opportunities, the Board has placed its books and tracts on Board of our national ships, and in the hands of the sailors and workmen about the navy yards. Several naval commanders have solicited supplies of reading for their vessels when about to sail, and they were gladly furnished. "The Sailor's Companion" has been extensively given to officers and chaplains, and is highly prized by them. We have reason to hope that great numbers of those "that go down to the sea in ships," have received a blessing through the printed pages given them, although in most cases it may never appear until "the sea shall give up the dead that are in it."

The eagerness and joy with which these pages are received, form a marked characteristic of this work, as carried on among the soldiers and sailors. Persons at home, surrounded by plenty of reading matter every day, can hardly imagine the longings of men, far away from home and friends, and from books and papers, for something to occupy the mind. Our numerous distributors all concur to describe in most affecting terms the hunger and thirst for reading matter experienced in camps and hospitals. In multitudes of cases, these lads and men are from the bosoms of Christian families, Sabbath-schools, and churches. They have more or less religious knowledge. And now, when called to look death closely in the face, they long for religious instruction.

The blessing of God has richly attended these distributions. Innumerable letters have testified to the tenderness of mind with which these books and tracts have been read; to the many cases in which they have led the reader to seek religious conversation; to the many cases in which by them the heart was turned towards Jesus, and the peace made with God. We have not room to quote here from the evidences of this. Let the reader of this look at the Publication columns of the Home and Foreign Record for the year past.

STATE OF THE FUNDS.

The Board has received for Colportage during the year $25,078.35. This sum exceeds the receipts of the previous year by $1906.54, and is the largest amount ever received from the States which are now coöperating with the Board. It is larger than the sum received from the entire United States in any year except 1860 and 1861. The year commenced with a balance against the Colportage Fund of $8499. This is now happily reduced to $2350. And in view of this improved condition of the Fund, the Board has already resolved, without delay, gradually to enlarge again the number of its colporteurs in the field, and to prosecute the work of distribution more vigorously during the coming year. It now earnestly appeals to the churches for the aid needed to carry out this purpose. There is a vast and most needful work to be done. We trust none will refuse to help in its accomplishment.

Some persons are backward in contributing for Colportage, because they have an erroneous impression that the Board might somehow carry on this work upon funds it now has, without receiving further contributions. This was tried by the Board at the beginning of its Colportage work, and it was found that it would be ruinous. The expenditures for Colportage for the year, March 1, 1860–1, were three times as large as all the profits of the Board on its sales, and every year they have far exceeded the profits. Of course, the attempt to sustain Colportage without contributions from the churches would soon reduce the Board to bankruptcy. Besides, our Colportage operations ought to be extended far beyond their present scale. Moreover, just where the people are poorest, and sparsest, and most ignorant, they most need Colportage among them, and just there it is always most costly.

The work of publishing books and tracts is carried forward upon a capital contributed, several years ago, for that specific purpose, to which it is wholly and sacredly devoted. As this capital is at present sufficient for that purpose, the churches are not called to contribute anything for the publishing department of the Board. But as nothing can be drawn away from the publishing department for other uses, the Board is obliged to depend wholly on the contributions of the churches for the supply of its Colportage Fund. These contributions, therefore, are indispensable for the following uses, viz.

1. To pay the salaries and expenses incident to Colportage.

2. To pay for the large amount of books gratuitously distributed by the Colporteurs.

Only in proportion as the churches contribute to the Colportage Fund, is the Board able to meet these expenses.

GERMAN HYMN-BOOKS.

In the Record for March last, we announced the publication of a Hymn-book in the German language. So far as we have yet heard from our German brethren, it has been received with unmingled approval. One of their number, residing in Philadelphia, after purchasing fifty copies for the use of his people, declares it to be "the very thing needed," "the best German Hymn-book he has ever seen," and declares that "his people are delighted with it." It is issued jointly by the Boards of the Reformed Protestant Dutch church, and of the Presbyterian church, and bears the imprint of both upon its title-page. The collection (in large size) was laid before the General Assembly in 1855, and received its approval. It is now furnished in 18mo size, bound in sheep, at 65 cents nett, and in 12mo at $1.00.

The Board has also issued, upon a similar arrangement, a very excellent little book of German hymns, with tunes. It is entitled "The Children's Harp," and is admirably suited for use in the Sabbath-schools of our German churches.

A GENEROUS GIFT.

Some months ago, one of our ministers in Maryland presented to our Distribution Fund a valuable copy of the works of Chrysostom and Augustine. These books were sold for $100, and that sum has been used in distributing gratuitously the books and tracts of the Board among our soldiers. May both the donor and the buyer of the books reap a rich reward in souls converted and saved.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

I. Aunt Fanny's Home, and her Talks about God's Works. 18mo. pp. 252. Price 40 and 45 cents.

This book is beautifully gotten up, with numerous pictorial illustrations. In his preface, the author says: "The simple aim of this little book is to afford its youthful readers some glimpses of God's wisdom, power, and goodness, as they may be seen in the commonest works of nature, and thus lead to deeper feelings of dependence on God, and gratitude towards him. In pursuing this aim, the endeavour is made to cause the works of God and his blessed word to throw light upon each other." The principal part of the book is occupied with familiar conversations between an aunt and three orphan nephews. We trust the volume has a mission to accomplish for God's glory and for the good of the youth of the church.

II. Kate Stanley; or, the Power of Perseverance. By Abby Eldredge, author of "Ella Graham." 18mo. pp. 200. Price 35 and 40 cents.

An interesting story of a little girl who was subjected to many trials and temptations, but who, by God's blessing upon her perseverance, came out of them all unhurt and benefitted.

III. Pictures of Hindoo Life; or, India without the Gospel, and India with the Gospel. 18mo. pp. 144. Price 25 and 30 cents.

A well-prepared and deeply interesting view of Hindoo life. The perusal of this little book can hardly fail to excite in youthful readers a greater love for the work of foreign missions.

IV. The Child's Budget. 18mo. pp. 216. Price 35 and 40 cents.

V. Precious Gleanings from the Field of Truth. 18mo. pp. 216. Price 35 and 40 cents.

VI. Little Pearls from the Ocean of Divine Truth. 18mo. pp. 216. Price 35 and 40 cents.

These are three excellent little works compiled for the Board. Each contains a number of instructive tales, illustrative of different portions of divine truth.

The six books above-mentioned all contain wood-cut pictures, but the last four have each a beautiful lithographic frontispiece. They are a fine addition to the Board's Sabbath-school Library.

Donations received for General Colportage, and for Soldiers and Sailors, by the Presbyterian Board of Publication, to April 10, 1863.

BOARD OF CHURCH EXTENSION.

Corresponding Secretary—Rev. H. I. Coe.
Treasurer—David Keith, Esq.
Rooms of the Young Men's Christian Association, corner of Fifth and Olive Streets, St. Louis, Mo.

Communications on the subject of Church Extension should be addressed to the Corresponding Secretary, Corner of Fifth and Olive Streets, St. Louis, Mo.

Donations should be sent to David Keith, Esq., St. Louis, Mo.; or, if more convenient, to J. D. Thorpe, Esq., Cincinnati, Ohio; A. Davidson, Esq., Louisville, Ky.; S. D. Powel, Esq., Treasurer of the Board of Domestic Missions, No. 910 Arch Street, Philadelphia; T. H. Nevin, Esq., Pittsburgh, Pa.; Mr. J. B. Kirtland, Memphis, Tennessee; or to William Rankin, Esq., Treasurer of the Board of Foreign Missions, 23 Centre street, New York.

APPROPRIATIONS FROM THE GENERAL FUND.

No appropriation is made without the recommendation of the Presbytery, or the Church Extension Committee of the Presbytery within whose bounds the church applying for aid is located.

No appropriation is paid until the Board receives a certificate from the Trustees of the church aided, stating that their church lot is properly secured, and that the amount appropriated will complete their house of worship, and leave the whole property free from debt.

Appropriations not called for within two years of the date thereof, are regarded as withdrawn.

CHANGES.

Archibald Gamble, Esq., who has served the Board without charge since its organization, July 1855, has, much to our regret, resigned the office of Treasurer. David Keith, Esq., has been unanimously elected Treasurer, to fill the vacancy thus occasioned. We hope our friends who have contributions to remit will note the change.

The Board has also changed its Office from No. 88 Market Street, to the Rooms of the Young Men's Christian Association, corner of Fifth and Olive Streets, St. Louis, Missouri.

CLOSE OF THE YEAR.

The fiscal year of the Board closed April 1st. While the returns are not all in from the receiving agencies, so that we can give exact figures, we suppose the receipts will not vary much from those of last year, i. e., $17,000.

A MINISTER'S BURDENS.

Our good brother at La Porte, Indiana, acknowledging the receipt of a remittance, writes: "I felt an irrepressible anxiety to get into our new place of worship, as in our present condition we are constantly, and almost necessarily, losing our congregation; meeting only once in the day, in the Methodist church, and that so late in the afternoon that it has been nearly impossible for our country people to come at all. Our Sabbath-school was broken up and scattered. Our prayer-meetings were held from house to house, and reduced almost to nothing, as will inevitably be the case under such circumstances. So situated, we wished the money, that we might hasten the work. Your Board I hope will, in time, receive more from us than we now receive from it, and so shall we atone for any error, or informality, or want of financial wisdom. Imagine yourself in my condition, with (for the last year) two churches and a family on your hands, one church edifice going up, for which the minister has to raise all the money, do almost all the running, handle lumber, dig cellar, pile brick, keep up fires by night in the church during the coldest of the weather, et cetera cetèraque, and I am quite sure you will exculpate me, although I manifest not all the precision demanded in Wall street in financial affairs. Thank you that you have done so, and forwarded the draft. It will be used only as you suggest."

CHURCH DEBTS.

Of all times, this is the time to pay off all church debts. Never can it be so easily done again, and never will our churches arise in their strength, beauty, and power, while burdened, harassed, and made selfish by debts. It is a matter of most devout thanksgiving, that so many are now availing themselves of this favoured time to do this most needful thing. Will not every church at once move in this matter, if there be an unliquidated claim upon its place of worship, or the land on which it stands? And let none deceive themselves by withholding from other objects, with a view of paying the church debt the more easily. "There is a giving that does not impoverish."

A church near at hand was in the midst of an effort to raise some three thousand dollars to build a mission chapel, when an appeal was proposed and made in behalf of more distant poor, who were in the same distress, and to which a quick response was made, more than double the amount ever given before for the same object. Immediately the subscription for the home chapel was filled. A church in another city threefolded its highest previous contribution for feeble churches in the West last October, and in January filled up a subscription to cancel a floating debt, and remove a mortgage, amounting to twenty-five thousand dollars. A neighbour church to the latter has added largely to all its former contributions, and has just lifted a crushing debt of twenty-five thousand, and cancelled scrip to the amount of twenty-eight thousand dollars. And in this connection allow me to name particularly the First Congregational church in New Britain, Connecticut, which has laboured and suffered under an oppressive debt of about ten thousand dollars for some six or eight years, and many have been the predictions and fears that the house must be sold. Did the church stay its benefactions? Nay, it gave and trusted; and, under the encouragement and instruction of their devoted pastor, and quickened by the appeals of one of those "troublers of Israel," who wanted money for other churches struggling to live, the membership of the church and parish came nobly up to the work, with a self-sacrificing spirit worthy of the great object to be attained; and the debt was paid, and God was glorified. Their beautiful sanctuary must be a thousand-fold more beautiful in their eyes now than ever before. If this church, and the one named last, could pay off their debts, I know of not one thus encumbered that could not do it, with anything like a similar spirit and purpose. Giving does not impoverish.—Congregationalist.

A GOOD PRACTICE.

We understand, says an exchange, that it is Bishop Potter's settled principle and undeviating practice to require all debts to be paid on a church before dedication, on the simple principle that "we cannot dedicate to God what we do not own ourselves."

A NOBLE WORK.

During the past two months, four churches in New York and Brooklyn have raised, in cash, subscriptions to extinguish debts on their property, a total of ninety-six thousand dollars; and by cancelling scrip and other claims, have removed an aggregate indebtedness of one hundred and fifty-seven thousand dollars.

RESOLUTIONS OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY IN REGARD TO COLLECTIONS.

Treasurer Trustees of General Assembly,
Office, No. 320 Walnut Street.

Philadelphia, April 14th, 1863.

FORM OF BEQUEST FOR DISABLED MINISTERS, OR FAMILIES OF DECEASED MINISTERS.

I give and bequeath to my executors hereinafter named, ——— dollars, in trust, nevertheless that they shall, within ——— months after my decease, pay the same to George H. Van Gelder, Treasurer of the Trustees of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, or to his successor for the time being in said office, for the use of such disabled ministers and their families, as the said, The Trustees of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, shall or may designate.

FORM OF A DEVISE OR BEQUEST TO ANY OF THE BOARDS OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

The State Laws differ so much that no one form will answer in all the States, but in every case it is essential to give the RIGHT CORPORATE NAME.

The oldest Board was originally called the Board of Missions, but is now incorporated under the laws of Pennsylvania under the title of "The Trustees of the Board of Domestic Missions of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

Of the Board of Education the corporate name is, "The Trustees of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

The Board of Foreign Missions is incorporated under the laws of New York, under the style of "The Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

The Board of Publication is incorporated under the laws of Pennsylvania under the style of "The Trustees of the Presbyterian Board of Publication."

The Board of Church Extension of the General Assembly is not incorporated, but the following form of bequest, it is supposed, would be valid.

I bequeath to my executors the sum of ——— dollars, in trust, to pay over the same in ——— after my decease, to the person who, when the same shall be payable, shall act as Treasurer of the Board of Church Extension of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, located in the City of St. Louis, Missouri, to be applied to the uses and purposes of said Board, and under its directions, and the receipt of the said Treasurer shall be a full and legal acquittance of my said executors for the same.

When real estate or other property is given, let it be particularly described.

Contributions should be sent to the Treasurer; or, if more convenient, to

William Rankin, Jr., Mission House, 23 Centre street, New York.

It will be gratifying to the friends of missions, and our churches who sustain the Board in its great work, to know that the correspondence of the missionaries reveals a delightful state of what may be called incipient revival. The stir, the notes of preparation, the sounds amid the mulberry trees, betoken a day of mercy amid disastrous war. For many years there have not been signs so hopeful, and from so large a portion of the field. We cannot speak of revivals in full development, but tokens so pleasant and signs so auspicious, that it would be treason to our King not to praise him for them. There is an undeveloped revival. Let the church pray, and our Jerusalem will be built in troublous times. Surely we may reason: God has not forsaken us, but owns the struggle we make for the precious rights of man, and the wide liberty of the nation. God is in the midst of us. He will help us, and that right early. Rise, Lord, let thine enemies be scattered.

HOPING AMID PLEASANT LABOURS.

Michigan.

My second quarter closed April 1st. I am happy to inform the Board, that I am greatly encouraged by the prospect of usefulness in this field of labour—more so than at any previous time. God's grace can change the heart of man, and can make those hostile to him his willing subjects. There are some evidences of its manifestation among us. My congregation is gradually increasing in the church at I——. At our last communion, many young men and women, not professors, appeared to be deeply affected. We are to establish a Sabbath-school, Bible-classes, etc, and in this way enlist actively many idlers in the Lord's vineyard.

This is in all respects a missionary field. Pastoral visits are actually necessary, and often do more good than real preaching. The great fundamental truths of Christianity must be often presented. Much of my time is spent among the people, imparting information, enlisting their sympathies in behalf of religion, urging the indifferent to action, and pointing out remedies for existing difficulties. One thing pains me. There are a number of families who subscribe liberally toward my support, who attend regularly the preaching, and desire the prosperity of the church, and yet they have made no profession of religion. What a mighty influence could these individuals exert for good in our midst, if their hearts were changed by the power of divine grace, and they, through its influence, thoroughly and actively enlisted, soul and body, in the cause of our blessed Master.

My efforts in C——, I think, are to be greatly blessed. God has, in a wonderful manner, opened a way for me here. I have been very much favoured by all classes. I now preach in this place every Sabbath evening, and usually every seat in the church is occupied. We propose to establish a church in C——. It will be composed of about ten or twelve members, some of whom will join by certificate, and others by profession of their faith. The establishment of a church here is an absolute necessity for the future prosperity of Presbyterianism in this section of country. It will strengthen our church at I——. It will be a home for those of our faith in this vicinity, some of whom are now without a home. The opposition to Presbyterianism will cease as we declare our intentions. May the Lord bless our enterprise, and instruct us by his Spirit.

Fraternally yours.

ENCOURAGING SIGNS.

Wisconsin.

Dear Brother—The progress of the Lord's work amongst us during the past quarter has had some features of encouragement, though many indications of good, which at one time brightened our hopes, have passed away without fruit.

One thing has been a source of comfort and strength to our little band of Christians, viz., the fact that we have held more prayer-meetings during the last quarter than in any previous one during my sojourn here. We know, too, that the Lord who gives the spirit of prayer, has a time to answer; and we are content that the times and seasons are in his own hand, knowing that in due time we shall reap.

In this, however, we rejoice: that we gather a harvest of joy, and faith, and hopefulness, as we go on in the way of duty, which is a sufficient reward for labour and prayer. The important question of church-building has been agitated by me, and the people have taken hold heartily, notwithstanding the pinching times. Now the lumber is contracted for, and the edifice certain to be commenced, and probably finished, before winter. This is a great event in the history of our little church, and it fills us with hope, as though a harbinger of further blessing from the Lord.

On Monday I made a missionary tour into a distant destitute suburb of my field. It lies thirty miles away. I gathered the people in their little schoolhouse, and declared to them the way of life. Some of them came to me and spoke of the joy it afforded them to hear the gospel, and how they had learned to prize it when deprived of its regular services. Thus "blessings brighten as they take their flight." Would that our gospel-surfeited communities could learn to value the privileges that God has granted them. There would then be more sympathy for those whose "eyes do not see their teachers."

We long for more help in our western harvest-field. I myself serve five stations regularly, one of them each Sabbath, and this immense parish would well employ two labourers; but there are adjacent settlements, quite populous, that are more needy than we. May the Lord soon raise up help for the gathering of this perishing harvest!

Truly yours in the Lord.

WINTER, THE SPIRITUAL HARVEST—NEED OF ITINERANTS—ADVANTAGES OF MINNESOTA.

Minnesota.

My Dear Brother—The winter season is one of God's best gifts. Then he arrests many of the ordinary employments of society. "He sealeth up the hand of every man, that all men may know his work." Time is afforded for reflection. The gospel may be preached with less obstruction from the common cares and temptations of men. In this latitude the season is long, and at the same time so clear and dry, as to be peculiarly favourable to attendance upon public exercises.

During the past winter we have had an unusual degree of interest manifested in religion among the people of this community. Early in the season, the Sabbath exercises began to be more fully attended. The way was opened for the appointment of daily meetings for the benefit of all denominations, during the week of prayer; and afterwards for a series of meetings every evening, which continued in our church nearly three weeks, with the aid of brother A——, of R——, and of a Congregational brother. The Spirit of God stirred the hearts of many. Twenty rose to solicit prayer in their own behalf. Three young ladies have been baptized and admitted to membership in the church. Several other persons hope to join with us hereafter. In two of the other churches of the town a number of hopeful conversions have taken place. We trust that the Spirit of God has not withdrawn his sovereign influences to convict and to convert, and pray earnestly that he may return with still greater power. He has put it into the hearts of Christians to maintain a weekly union prayer-meeting on Tuesday evenings, which seems attended with evidences of some feeling, and from which we expect future good. The enemy of souls is stirring up opposition in various forms to what good is attempted. May God glorify his name, and defeat all the devices of hell!

The opportunities for exploring the neighbourhood I have used as far as practicable. Presbyterian families are found scattered here and there in the villages and country. It seems to be exceedingly important that some experienced minister should be constantly kept employed in this work. We who are settled find it impossible to do it justice. Many families are carried off into other denominations, after waiting weary months and years for some shepherd of their own to come and feed and tend them. Cannot you suggest some one that has a heart for such work? And cannot you assure us of the amount necessary for his support?

There exists in the minds of many persons apprehensions in regard to danger from Indians in case of immigrating to Minnesota. I wish to assure such that the southern counties, and those bordering upon the Mississippi for a considerable distance above St. Paul, are perfectly safe. The Indians are so far off, and the preparations to meet them are so full, that we feel no uneasiness whatsoever. Large numbers of people are coming at present into this splendid country, so immeasurably superior, in point of health, to all the States south of it, and are purchasing the best farms and other property. We confidently and cordially invite those coming West to make their homes in it; especially keeping in view localities where they may enjoy religious and educational privileges.

With sincere regard, yours in Christ.

THE FUTURE OF THE WEST OF GREAT MOMENT TO THE EAST.

Iowa.

If it shall be the will of Providence to bring this war to a successful issue in the suppression of the rebellion, and the restoration of permanent peace, we are expecting a considerable immigration to this fertile and healthy region. There is now more inquiry than there has been for some time past for lands, with a view to settlement. We hope that the Lord will dispose the hearts of Christian men and women, in due proportion, to come among us. And let Christian people in the east remember that this vast country will undoubtedly be the future home of many of their sons and daughters. May we not then hope that we shall have their prayers, that we, who are struggling to lay the foundations for long years to come, may be enabled to do it well? We know that we have the prayers and efforts of the Board, and that but for the terrible crisis through which our beloved country is passing, we should have the men and the material aid to extend our pickets, and occupy new points, as the Captain of our salvation beckons us onward.

I. MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

AN ABSTRACT OF THE ANNUAL REPORT OF THE BOARD OF EDUCATION, MAY 1ST, 1863.

The following table exhibits the operations of the Board of Education in the department of candidates for the ministry:

The number of new candidates received during the year has been		38
The number received from the beginning (in 1819)		3202
The whole number on the roll during the past year has been		313
Of these latter there have been,
In their Theological course,	155
" Collegiate "	125
" Academical "	33

The aggregate number of candidates during the year now closed is sixty-two below that of last year, but is almost up to the average aggregate of the past eleven years. For that period the average aggregate has been three hundred and ninety-eight, whilst for the year covered by the present report, the average has been three hundred and ninety and five-sixths. This is a result for which the Board feel that great gratitude is due to the Head of the church. Is it not wondrous, that in a time of civil war, with one-third of the field once occupied by our beloved Zion cut off from communication with us, that the Board should be enabled to announce to the Assembly such a result?

There is one item in the statistics given in the foregoing table, however, which is well fitted to awaken serious apprehension in the minds of the brethren. It will be seen that the number of new candidates, that is, of candidates received during the year, has been unusually small. For the past ten years, the lowest number received has been seventy-four. During the past year the Board have received only thirty-eight. This fact is all the more significant, as it is a link of a descending series, and is consequently indicative of the existence and operation of a law. This descending series stretches back over three years. In 1860, the Board reported to the Assembly one hundred and eighty-one new students; in 1861, they reported one hundred and fifty-six; in 1862, they reported seventy-four; whilst they are able to report, for the year now closed, only thirty-eight. Here, then, is certainly a foreshadowing of an approaching dearth. If this law continues to operate, or if the annual accessions to the number of our candidates should remain at the present stinted measure, the consequences must very soon be felt in all the departments of our church's operations, whether domestic or foreign.

The following table will inform the church as to the comparative annual results of the operations of the Board, both in respect to new candidates, and the aggregate number of candidates for the past twelve years:

Years.	New Candidates.	Whole No. of Candidates.
1852,	69	388
1853,	81	370
1854,	104	342
1855,	125	364
1856,	102	382
1857,	92	383
1858,	103	385
1859,	141	391
1860,	181	492
1861,	156	505
1862,	74	375

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION IN SCHOOLS, ACADEMIES, AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

MOTIVES TO PRAYER FOR COLLEGES.

Extracts from an Address delivered in the First Presbyterian Church, in the City of New York, February 26, 1863, by the Rev. William G. T. Shedd, D. D.

2. A second motive to pray for the conversion of all young persons that are pursuing a course of liberal education, lies in the fact that they are favourably situated for religious instruction and impression.

The academies and colleges of the land, with but few exceptions, are under a Christian regime. Their boards of managers are composed of persons of consideration and standing in the locality, and who, as a general fact, are characterized by a theoretical, if not a practical belief in the Christian religion. We call to mind but one or two instances, in which a literary institution has had its foundations laid in unbelief; and these attempts have been saved from utter failure only by receding from the original plan. The university which Jefferson was the chief instrument in establishing, is now a thoroughly Christian institution; and the college for orphans founded by the late Mr. Girard, has discovered that it cannot live, severed from the Father of the fatherless, the God of the widow and the orphan. Through all our wide borders, we see the academy, the college, and the university built, at least, upon a theoretical Christianity, and in a multitude of instances upon a warm Christian evangelism.

These remarks hold true, in an eminent degree, of academical and collegiate education within the bounds of the Presbyterian church. A system of education that is more immediately related to the character and wants of a particular denomination, can, of course, be brought more completely under doctrinal and religious influences, than one which, like the common-school system, is intended for all varieties of denominations. And we cannot but think it to be one of the felicities of the church which is more particularly convened here to pray for the effusion of the Divine Spirit, that it has so many academies and colleges under its presbyterial watch and care. For these institutions are thereby brought into very warm and living contact with the individual Christian and the local church. Not being under the control of close corporations, who may appoint their own successors, and whose management of the institution is entirely beyond the supervision of the churches that are to feel their influence, whether it be good or bad; but being subject in every respect to the religious bodies that appoint their boards of management, and thereby their corps of instruction, they stand in the most immediate and salutary connection with the Christian brotherhood itself, and the warm evangelical life of the people of God is transmitted through all their veins and arteries. Such institutions are eminently Christian, and respond most sensitively to all that is going on in the churches that support them and control them.

Now in all these facts, we find a motive to prayer for these institutions. If they are built upon the general foundation of Christianity, and are managed by those who cherish at least a theoretical belief in the religion of the Bible, and impart an education that is in harmony with the principles of natural and revealed religion, every man who knows how to pray, may see in such an educational apparatus as this, a noble object to pray for. And if, in addition to this, the academy or the college is built upon the more special foundation of a particular type of Christianity—a type that is dear to the heart of a particular church, then surely that church, while it prays for a divine benison upon any and every institution that teaches any degree of biblical truth—according to our Lord's principle, that he that is not against us is for us—while the prayer of the Calvinist will go up warm and heartfelt for all who hold the head; for all the evangelism there is upon the planet—certainly it will lose none of its warmth, and none of its heartiness, for those institutions that are founded upon his own ancestral faith and creed.

But not only are the youth who are gathered in the literary institutions of the land, favourably situated in respect to religious instruction and impressions, by reason of the Christianity in which the foundations of these institutions have been laid; they are also most favourably situated by reason of the daily routine of discipline and study to which they are summoned.

There is moral power in any steady routine. The farmer, the mechanic, any man who, when the sun ariseth, "goeth forth to his work and his labour until the evening," receives an influence from his occupation that is wholesome and bracing. Nothing is more debilitating, nothing more demoralizing, than doing nothing. There is no feebler creature, and oftentimes no more wicked creature, than a man about town. It matters not so much what the species of labour shall be, as that it be performed with punctuality and uniformity—that it be a routine.

Now the youth that are assembled in the academies and colleges of the country are subjected to a species of influence, from the regular and systematic curriculum of these institutions, that is favourable to morality and religion. They are secluded from the busy world, and escape many of its temptations; and the power of those temptations which are peculiar to collegiate life, is considerably broken by the steady occupation to which the young student is put. He rises in the morning, and the first act to which he is summoned is the worship of Almighty God. The preparation of lessons, the recitation before teachers, the scrutiny of examiners, fill up the waking hours. One duty crowds on after another, and, without being aware of it, the young man is really made to pass through a routine and a drill almost as exacting as that of the military school.

Besides all this, his mind is coming in contact with great truths and high principles. He is engaged in accumulating ideas. The whole tendency of his daily occupation is elevating; for it brings him into communication with the noblest minds of the race, and the loftiest results of their thinking. The corps of his instructors is commonly a body of men of broad views, serious temper, perhaps earnest Christian character. Now, it is true that there is nothing regenerating in these influences. If there were, we should not be assembled here to pray for the effusion of the Holy Spirit upon the colleges of the land. We well know that no amount of mere instrumentalities can convert a proud intellect into a meek and lowly mind; can subdue a high spirit, and fill it with the gentleness of Christ. We well know that the acquisition of human knowledge, if unbalanced by a higher acquisition, tends to pride. Knowledge puffeth up. At the same time, it must be granted, that these thousands of youth of both sexes, for whose spiritual welfare we are offering up our prayers, are in a more hopeful condition, are in a more recipient moral state, than they would be, were they all of them bending their eyes to the earth in search of filthy lucre, like Bunyan's man with the muck-rake, or were they all of them whirling round and round in the giddy vortices of fashion and pleasure. God, even their God, hath caused the lines to fall for them in pleasant places, and they have a goodly heritage. How much more hopeful is the future prospect of the church, from the fact that so many of her children are secluded, during their forming, plastic period, from the sordid and deadening influences of our hard colliding life, and are made more sensitive and recipient in the "still air of delightful studies."

NOTICES OF MISSIONARIES.

These letters state that several members of the mission families in Bangkok, and also at Corisco, had been suffering from sickness, but the latest accounts report their improved health, though Mrs. Mattoon was still feeble. We also learn that Mr. Loewenthal had nearly regained his usual health, after a protracted and severe illness, which attacked him on his return to Peshawar. It is with regret we learn that the oldest child of Mr. and Mrs. Preston, at Canton, has been called away by death.

On the 18th of last month Mrs. Culbertson and her daughters arrived at this port, after a good voyage.

The Rev. W. Calderwood was married at Lodiana, on the 19th of February, to Ernestine, daughter of the late Herr Christian Sauter, of Heilbronn.

ADMISSIONS TO THE CHURCH.

Letters from Liberia have several times referred to special interest in religion at Monrovia and Clay-Ashland. One of the letters now acknowledged mentions the admission of six persons to the communion of the church in Monrovia, besides a number added to the Methodist, Episcopal, and Baptist churches of the same place. Mr. Newton speaks of the baptism, on the last Sabbath in February, of a hopeful convert at Lahor. Mr. Mattoon mentions the baptism, on the second Sabbath in February, of Nai Kao, a Siamese young man, who has lived in the family of Mr. McFarland, and to whom reference has been made by Mr. McFarland in former letters. Mr. Mattoon adds, "We trust he is one of God's chosen ones. At his age, and in such a country as this, he will be exposed to severe trials, and will need the earnest prayers of God's children, that he may have grace to be faithful. He expects to have his mother, who is of the better class of Siamese, to live with him in Bangkok. She, we understand, makes no opposition to his joining us, though she herself refuses to attend our services. Our prayer is, that he may be kept from falling, and made useful to his countrymen. Upon the same occasion we baptized three children—two the children of missionaries, and the third the child of one of our native members."

MAY 1, 1863.

The year which ended yesterday was one of much solicitude to all engaged in the work of missions. The causes of this feeling of apprehension are well known. It is therefore with sincere thankfulness we can now speak of the mission year as so well ended. The receipts from all sources were $188,458; the expenditures, $188,121, including the payment of a balance from the preceding year. This new year begins, therefore, with a small balance in the treasury—instead of a heavy balance against it, as was greatly feared. And for this, in such a year, surely we should give thanks to God.

The Annual Report will be sent to our readers, in an extra number of the Record, as heretofore, upon its receiving the approval of the General Assembly. We need not now give details of the information which it contains. We are sure that it shows, that God is giving his blessing to the work of missions.

On one important point, very much will depend on the course of public events—we refer to the expense of foreign exchange. If the rate should continue as high as it was in the latter part of April, and as it is now, the Board will have to pay $24,000 on bills already transmitted, but not yet matured. Besides this, the cost of exchange on bills that will be sent out for the expenses of the year now commenced must be taken into the account—amounting, at the present rate, to about $48,000. This is in addition to the par value of the bills, or in other words, to the ordinary expense of the missions. Our readers will see, therefore, that it is a truly serious matter. We wish them to see this. It is of deep moment that the whole case should be clearly understood by the supporters of this work. We may hope the rate will come down. If it should not, still we do not give way to discouragement. It is a thing permitted by God. It could not be prevented by his people. It will try their faith, and their faith will not fail.

We recognise this as still a time of need, so far as the cause of foreign missions is concerned. We hope that earnest and continued prayers will be offered for this cause; we are sure they will be. And we trust our churches will continue their pecuniary support, which in many cases has been very liberal; indeed, we know that this will be done by very many, so long as it is possible. We earnestly wish, moreover, that many of our Christian brethren, whose co-operation has not been fully obtained heretofore, would now consider the case, and come forward with their gifts, even as the Lord has prospered them.

The missions cannot safely be further restricted as to expense. The giving up of any of them, we trust, is not to be thought of. On the contrary, let us be strong in faith, and full of hope. The work is waiting for the labourers, and some of these are waiting to be sent into the harvest. Our blessed Lord is manifestly with his servants in this work. His presence and his word of promise make sure the success of their labours. He has granted great success already. His cause will go forward even in troublous times. But we forbear to dwell on thoughts which, we trust, are often in the minds of our readers.

Some of our readers will not live to see the end of the mission year now commenced; most of them, we hope, will see its end; and all of them, we trust, will be able to praise God for his great grace upon the missionary work of his people during this year.

We refer not now to its financial affairs. These, we think, are understood to some extent by the churches, and they will not be forgotten.

But as we look abroad, and fix our thoughts on one mission after another, we are ready to ask, How will this year end as to these missions? We cannot but think with some solicitude of the many and greatly diverse considerations, which concern the prosperity of these missions—though we have not room here to sketch even the briefest outline of them. Next, we dwell in our thoughts on each missionary labourer and his work—we see him among the Indians on our frontier, among the Asiatic emigrants in our far western State, among the Japanese, Chinese, Siamese, Hindus, Africans, the people of South America and of Europe, and the ancient people of God; we think of the uncertainties as to his health and life, the weakness of his best services, the difficulties, discouragements, fears,—yes, and the hopes and joys of his varied efforts to build up the Saviour's kingdom; we think of the powers of darkness arrayed against him, and of the far mightier power that is on his side; we consider how many things may come to pass before the year ends—and we pause to remind ourselves, that these crowding thoughts are all in vain, if they do not lead us to look up to Him, to whom all power in heaven and in earth has been given, and who has promised to be with his servants always while they preach his gospel to every creature. We remember that one of the first and most signal manifestations of his presence with the first missionaries was witnessed when they were clothed with power from on high, and when thousands were converted in a single day. Even so it is still. If our Saviour will but pour out his Spirit abundantly on the churches at home, on the missionaries abroad, on the heathen to whom they preach the gospel, on their churches, native helpers, and schools, then blessed will be the end of this mission year. Or if these longed-for results are not fully manifested, the year will end well, nevertheless, if gospel seed is widely sown, and missionary duty, at home and abroad, is faithfully performed. Let this be a year, therefore, of faith, of prayer, of hope—in large degree.

INDIA—FURRUKHABAD MISSION.

Mr. Ullmann's Labours in 1862.

The Church in the City.

As co-pastor with Mr. Fullerton of the city church, I have taken my part in preaching on Sundays, and delivering a lecture during the week. A full report of the church will be supplied by Mr. Fullerton. We have also continued our weekly prayer-meeting on the mission premises, conducted by us both, alternately.

Preaching in the Bazar

of the city, and in the surrounding villages, has been carried on daily throughout the year, by me, and two catechists, and one Scripture-reader. They have faithfully assisted me in this most important work. Being four in number, we generally went two and two, and hence the gospel was, for the most part, preached every morning in two different places. Very often, also, in the afternoon, has this been done, though then by the catechists only. In former years, I frequently met with a great deal of opposition in the bazar, and many a time I have had to enter into a controversy there, though, as far as practicable, I tried to avoid it, knowing that, generally speaking, not only no real good would result from it, but very often the good effects produced by preaching would be partly or wholly destroyed by it. This spirit of opposition seems at present to have altogether ceased, and though, undoubtedly, to some extent, it may originate in the greater indifference of those who, having heard the gospel so often, have lost the interest which they once showed when the thing was new to them; yet I would fain hope—nay, have reason to believe—that this quiet attention to the gospel when preached, is, to a great extent, the effect of the people becoming more acquainted with, and convinced of, the truth of Christianity, and see how useless it is to oppose a religion which is so holy, and so adapted to our wants. And may we not hope that this conviction may, by the grace of God, in some cases at least, lead sooner or later to conversion, and to the reception of the truth as it is in Jesus. In fact, it has been frequently acknowledged by natives, who, though still apparently heathen, are yet not far from the kingdom of God, that if we only persevere, Christianity must at last conquer all opposition, and overturn Hinduism and Mohammedanism. In regard to the Mohammedan portion of the inhabitants of the city, I can only say that, since the late mutiny, the spirit of Mohammedanism seems to be entirely broken. Very seldom any one of that community now steps forward to defend his faith. Some, and perhaps the most zealous of them, have left the city, probably because they had taken part in the late mutiny; and others have either settled down in not caring for any religion whatever, or are afraid, or too proud, to come forward to be publicly defeated whilst defending their religious system.

The number of hearers in the villages is always very small, there being only few inhabitants; and these few are generally occupied with their agricultural pursuits.

I have been in the habit of daily distributing tracts in the bazar to those who could read, though this could only be done on a limited scale, on account of the very small number procurable from the depot of the Northern India Tract Society. In fact, if the Lodiana Mission had not sent us a supply from their depot, I do not know what we should have done.

Inquirers I have had very few, and it is very doubtful whether even these few came from a true desire to become acquainted with the plan of salvation. Not one has come forward from pure motives, as far as I can see, to ask for baptism. Those who did come, have invariably turned out to have done so from improper motives, and were on that account refused. Yet I am not without hope. Though it is indeed disheartening to go every day to the bazars, and invite the people to come to Christ, without seeing any one caring much about it, yet we have the sure promise of him who cannot lie, that his word shall not return unto him void. We try to do our duty, go out sowing the good seed, and rest upon almighty power, and trust in the divine promises given unto us, and wait for the early and the latter rain to fructify the seed, and pray that soon the promised time may arrive, when also in this land the wilderness and the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose. India also, with its teeming population, shall see the salvation of our God.

Every Sunday I have also delivered a short religious address to the servants and other persons who live in the Burhpore mission compound.

Itineration.

In accordance with the doctor's advice, to give my wife a change of air for the restoration of her health, I took a long tour during the last cold season, travelling down to Allahabad and Benares, and from there up to Goruckpore, and back again the same way to Futtehgurh, which, as we stopped for some time in the different stations, took us about three and a half months. Whenever an opportunity offered I preached the gospel. I have nothing remarkable to report of this journey, but hope and pray that the word of God may not have been spoken in vain.

Boys' School.

Six of the Maharajah Duleep Singh's ten village schools have been under my charge during the past year. They have been, generally speaking, prosperous. The number of boys in these six schools is at present one hundred and ninety-four. Two of them, one in the village of Burhpore, and the other in Chourasee, which were not conducted by the teachers as they ought, have been discontinued, and in their places two new ones established, one in Nurynapore, and the other in Khanpore. The teachers are heathen, because I have no Christians as yet to put in their place, which is to be deplored. The boys learn to read and write in Urdu or Hindee, study arithmetic to the Double Rule of Three, and some of them also the History of India. They daily read either in the gospel or "Barth's Bible Stories," which they are able to relate, and also commit a catechism to memory. Thus they acquire at least a knowledge of the historical parts of the Bible, and as faith is based upon knowledge, we hope and pray that the knowledge they possess may lead them to believe in Jesus Christ. Last cold season a general examination of the Maharajah's ten schools was held in the Burhpore mission compound, which showed that our efforts to impart to the boys useful and religious knowledge had been successful.

Girls' Schools.

There had been formerly a girls' school in the city, conducted on the usual plan of paying a pice, or half-cent, a day to every girl. Considering the principle of paying for attendance not a sound one, and believing that the time had perhaps arrived when parents would send their daughters without expecting us to pay them, I abolished that school, and after some time had elapsed, established three on the non-paying system. I appeared at first to succeed, but soon the number of girls, which had only been small, decreased more and more, when they found that no money was paid to them, and I had consequently to discontinue two of these schools, and the third I could only carry on by allowing the girls half a pice each per day. This is indeed only half of what is usually given in schools of this kind, yet I am sorry that I have not been able to carry out the principle of not paying them at all. I hope the time may soon arrive when we can do away with this—apparently now necessary—means of securing the attendance of girls, and when education will be more generally appreciated also in regard to female children. This one girls' school in the city is at present conducted by a Brahmin. It numbers twenty-eight girls, but as it has been established only six months ago, the children have advanced but very little, the best of them being only able to spell and cypher a little. I purpose, (D. V.,) to put the school under the superintendence of a female native Christian, who is to impart unto them also Christian knowledge.

Besides these boys' and girls' schools, I commenced also one in the Burhpore mission compound, for the children of natives, boys and girls, who are living on the mission premises; and for others outside who would like to attend it. The children of this school made considerable progress; but as some of them left the compound, and the remaining number became very small, and as, with one solitary exception, no outside people could be induced to send their children to this school, I was at last obliged to give it up.

Teacher Class.

At the suggestion of the Vernacular Education Society, to raise the educational standard of our teachers, in the beginning of the year 1861, I formed a class of all those Lallas, Pundits, and Moonshees who, being teachers in connection with the mission, would be willing to go through a certain course of studies, and after a year pass their examination. The course of studies was as follows:

1. Gospel of Luke. (Urdu or Hindee.) 2. Clift's First Geography—Asia and Europe. 3. History of India to the time of Taimúr. 4. Arithmetic: Four Simple and Compound Rules. 5. Pamphlets on Education. Intibáh-ul-Mudarrisin. 6. Teacher to read a passage from a school-book, and to write it from dictation, &c.

This class consisted of twenty-one men. They prepared their lessons at home, and came to me every Saturday afternoon for about four hours, when I heard their lessons, and gave them the necessary instruction. In the month of February this year they were examined by Mr. Murdoch, the Secretary of the Vernacular Education Society here in India, when all, except two, received the promised remuneration, and a certificate according to their proficiency. This class has been carried on also during this year, through a second course, which is as follows:

1. Genesis and Acts of the Apostles. 2. Geography of India. 3. History of India—fifty pages. 4. Elements of Grammar. 5. Arithmetic. Fractions.

They have nearly finished this second course of studies, and hope to pass their examination in January next. Another small class of three teachers has gone through the greater part of the first course, and may perhaps also pass their examination at the same time. All the expenses of this teacher-class are defrayed by the Vernacular Education Society. There is no doubt that in order to raise the standard of our Vernacular schools, we must raise that of their teachers, and already we begin to see some of the good effects of our efforts in this respect.

Writing Books or Tracts.

My spare time during this year I have mostly spent in preparing a few small works for the press.

1. A new and enlarged edition (the fifth) of my Hindee Tract, Dharmtula, or Inquiry into the True Religion, I prepared for the press, to be published by the North India Tract Society. The greater part of it is already printed, and by the end of November the tract will be ready for distribution.

2. A second tract, a new one, named Qaid-kushâinda, or Deliverance from Bondage, written in Urdu, has just been received by the Committee of the North India Tract Society, and will be printed as soon as practicable.

3. A Catechism in Hindee—bearing the title of Gurngyán, written for our Bazar schools, has been printed at the lithographic press of Futtehgurh, and is ready for distribution.

4. I have just despatched the manuscript of a book of Hymns and Songs, with their Tunes, for Native Christian Children, which will be printed in the Roman characters, by a printer in London. On about ninety pages it contains sixty songs and hymns, partly original and partly free translations, into Hindustanee or Hindee, of some of the most favourite hymns in the English and German languages. The edition will be three thousand copies, of which two thousand have already been subscribed for. It will be sold for four or five annas per copy—twelve or fifteen cents.

I have also devoted some time to the instruction of one of our Scripture-readers, Heeralall, in order to enable him to pass his examination before Presbytery, for becoming a Catechist.

J. F. Ullmann.

Futtehgurh, November 5th, 1862.

MISSION IN SHANTUNG, CHINA.

Its First Year's Record.

We have received the annual report of this new mission, which was drawn up by the Rev. J. L. Nevius, and a good part of which we here insert. The preceding part is omitted for want of room; it gives a touching account of the sickness and bereavements in the mission families. These have been made known to our readers by letters of earlier date. Mr. Nevius then speaks of the climate of Shantung, of which a favourable report is made. The prevalence of the cholera for a few weeks was to be regarded as exceptional. He next takes up the missionary work of the year.

Chapel Preaching.

The chapel which we obtained during the first part of the year has proved a very satisfactory place for preaching, and much labour has been expended there, with no little encouragement. When it was first opened the attendance was very large, and the night audiences were very interesting. During the literary examinations of the summer, the city was thronged with scholars from all parts of the promontory; and the chapel was kept open from morning till ten or eleven o'clock at night, with large audiences of interested listeners most of the time. The native helper, Tsao, lives in the building, with his family. Much assistance has been rendered at the chapel, especially during the time of the literary examinations by Mr. Gayley's teacher, Mr. Ling, who is a decided Christian man and a literary graduate. The young man from the Ningpo school, Chang Ning-kwe, who arrived here in May, now speaks this dialect quite fluently, and has commenced his work as native assistant. The audiences at the chapel are now comparatively very small, as the interest of novelty is gone. We trust, however, that the attendance will increase again this autumn, and that we may soon learn that the seed that has been sown there is springing up and bearing much fruit.

Itinerating.

During the spring two missionary tours were made, including in all a circuit of about six hundred miles, in the course of which nearly all of the cities, and many of the larger towns of the promontory, were visited. As in other parts of China, the first visit of a foreigner draws large crowds of eager and attentive listeners. We were everywhere treated with respect, and in some instances were received with a cordiality and interest quite unusual. The country is not so thickly populated as in the southern provinces, but thousands of villages are open to the bringer of glad tidings, and the people, as far as can be judged from outward appearances, are as ready to receive the gospel as perhaps in any other part of China. In the course of these missionary tours, and at the chapel, a great deal of Christian knowledge has been disseminated, and a great many tracts have been scattered through all parts of the country.

The Church.

By the blessing of God, our time of sowing has also been a time of reaping. Six persons have been received into the church by baptism, most of whom give very pleasing evidence of piety and growth in grace. Besides these, one aged man, whom we expected to baptize soon, died early in the winter, and two inquirers were taken away by cholera. A few more are in a more or less hopeful state, and we humbly trust that, with God's blessing, this little vine of his own hand's planting may soon strike deep its roots, shoot forth its branches, and bear abundant fruit to his glory.

Schools.

We have all felt that this is a field peculiarly favourable for the establishment of schools. The people speak a written language; they are an unusually energetic and hardy race; provisions are cheap, and teachers' wages low. We trust we may be authorized to commence immediately a day-school for boys, and perhaps one for girls, and a boarding-school for boys, as soon as possible.

The Rebels.

We are very thankful to be relieved from any immediate danger from the rebels who visited us last fall. It is now ascertained that these plunderers had no connection whatever with the Nankin insurgents, but were simply independent predatory bands. The supposition, almost universal at the time, that they belonged to the Nankin insurgents, or, at least, that they regarded foreigners in the same light, cost the lives of our dear brethren, Holmes and Parker. This body of banditti has now been very much broken up and dispersed; and we have no further cause for alarm, except the general fact that the country is in a state of disorganization.

The Field open to Missionaries.

It is a very encouraging fact, that while access to the interior from Ningpo and Shanghai is now almost impossible, a wide field for the development of missionary labour is opened in the north. God seems, in this way, to be directing us by his providence to enter in and possess the land. Perhaps, in the present disturbed state of the country, it may not be desirable to occupy posts far separated from the open ports. Some points however might be occupied immediately, without any special risk, and with very great advantage. Pekin is now open to missionaries, a place which must be regarded as second to none in the empire, as a centre of influence. At Pekin, and in this part of Shantung, missionaries can live unmolested; engage immediately in their work; itinerate freely through regions of indefinite extent; and learn a dialect by means of which they can make themselves understood to the inhabitants of half the empire. Here as large a body of missionaries as the church can send out could find immediate employment, and could be preparing themselves, without being subjected to the influences of an inhospitable climate, for occupying any fields which might be hereafter opened in the north.

We are very happy to welcome to this field, as fellow-labourers, Dr. McCartee, who is now seeking a residence at or near Yin-tai, and Mr. Mills, who, having come from Shanghai with impaired health, is now staying here, with the hope of being released from his connection with the Shanghai mission, to make this his future field of labour. We are but very few to occupy so large a field. It seems very important that we should have a strong mission at Pekin as soon as possible. While it is very probable that the north will be supplied, in a great measure, by missionaries from the south, who can no longer labour there to advantage, on account of impaired health; it seems very desirable that some should come here at the beginning, to learn this as their first dialect, and devote the energies of their whole lives to this field. As far as we can learn, Pekin, though not possessed of as pleasant and salubrious a climate as the promontory of Shantung, may be regarded as decidedly healthful. It is entirely free from miasma, and the weather is dry and bracing. Compared to this place, however, the winters are cold, the summers hot, and the weather changeable, while the inconvenience from dust in the atmosphere is incresaed almost tenfold. Communication with the south by water is also suspended during the winter, while steamers and sailing vessels come to Yin-tai during all the months of the year. Again, then, we would urge the Board to send more men to this part of China, trusting that God, who has so sorely tried us, will visit us in mercy, and make this field as distinguished for rich spiritual blessings, as it has been for severe chastisements.

JOHN L. NEVIUS.

A JOURNEY ON THE YANG-TSZE, BY THE REV. H. V. RANKIN.

Along the two hundred miles between Nankin and Nganking, the Great River flows with beautiful meandering, sometimes reaching the breadth of a mile, embosoming many islands, and watering a broad extent of fertile fields. There is one serious drawback, however, from the inundations to which the country is subject during the summer. As we proceeded the country became more mountainous, and we were ere long greeted with a sight of the "Little Orphan," a precipitous rock in the midst of the river, which in the distance resembled a huge hay-mow. Not far beyond, among the high hills on the south side, is the entrance of Poyang lake, whose clear waters contrast pleasantly with the muddy river on which we were steaming against a very strong current. At a little distance up the lake we could discern the "Great Orphan," looming up like its little sister, and, like her, crowned with a Budhist temple. All these charming sites in the empire were early appropriated by the priests of this false religion, and are annually visited by thousands of her votaries. In less than an hour we had passed the pagoda of Kiu-kiang, and were anchored off the foreign settlement. I had a cordial welcome from the agents of Messrs. Olyphant & Co., and from the American consul, Mr. Breck, whom I had known at Ningpo, and from Mrs. Breck. She is the only foreign lady resident there. During the two or three days of my sojourn, I rode on horseback over the surrounding country, and formed a very pleasant impression of it. The soil is dry, and loose, and fertile, while the absence of rice-fields, and the undulating character of the ground, ensures a healthy region. In the summer months, a portion of the suburbs is submerged during the great river inundations, though this does not extend to the foreign residences, nor to the city. Fourteen miles off, a high mountain looms up several thousand feet, while the Poyang lake, which is sixty or eighty miles long, and about twenty broad, is visible from the neighbouring hills, and both are occasionally visited by the foreign residents. The name of the city, Kiu-kiang, (nine streams,) is probably derived from a number of streams or lakes in its vicinity. During the past summer, which was very sickly along the coast, the foreign residents there were quite exempt from disease, and they all speak favourably of the climate. The hardy appearance of the people contrasts also finely with the more delicate constitutions we are accustomed to in the Ningpo plain.

Kiu-kiang is an important centre of trade. By observing the map, it will be seen that the connection of Canton with the Yang-tsze is through the Poyang lake, and, as already observed, many steamers are now constantly discharging and taking in freight at the wharves of this port of entry. At the foot of the lake are two or three important cities, Nan-chang, the capital of Kiang-se province, Yiao-chanfoo, Wu-ching, &c.; and green teas, hemp, paper, crockery, and other productions and manufactures, are brought largely into market, and shipped to Shanghai. Already a score of foreign mercantile houses are represented at this port, and residences and godowns are being rapidly built in the western suburb. The land is consequently very expensive in that position, though not improbably it will be cheaper in the city, where even better sites for missionaries could be procured.

There is much waste land within the city walls, which are about six miles in circumference, and indeed the whole population within and outside the walls does not exceed fifty thousand. The villages, too, are few and small, and meanly built. Formerly the city is said to have been densely peopled, but now the greater part lies waste. This desolation was occasioned by the rebels, who held Kiu-kiang for a number of years; and since its recapture by the Imperialists, the ruins of the houses have been taken to repair the city walls. During the two years, however, since it has been made a consular port, the population has probably increased tenfold. I found the people affable, and ready to receive books, though probably the use, by Taeping, of the sacred nomenclature of our holy religion, will to some degree repel those who have seen the horrors occasioned by their oppressors. The dialect of Kiu-kiang is somewhat similar to the mandarin spoken at Nankin. Altogether I was highly impressed with the importance of this city as a mission field, and I feel ready to recommend it as such to our Board.

The great emporium of Hankow, one hundred and fifty miles further up the river, is represented by three English missionaries, who are already beginning to reap fruit in the soil which they have faithfully sown for a year past, but at Kiu-kiang no Protestant missionary is as yet located. The Romanists have, with their ordinary foresight, already built a chapel near the foreign hongs, to say nothing of their stations up the lake; and there are twenty-five English and American residents engaged in trade, but the cause of our blessed religion has no distinct representative. I felt strongly inclined to offer myself for services there, and received encouragement and the promise of a temporary home from my kind friends, but of course could make no definite arrangement without first referring the matter home. Nor am I sure that our Board can, at this critical period of its history, enter upon any new fields, however interesting and important they may be. Yet what a call there is for recruits to enter this vast field, and for increased means wherewith to carry on the work. I have been inclined to urge upon the brethren of our mission to send two native labourers to Kiu-kiang, with a view of labouring there a few months, and who might be able to feel the pulse of the people better than I could do during my short sojourn. It may be that from their experience we shall be able to send a more satisfactory report of the plan to the Board than this letter contains. If we have men to spare, I doubt not that good can be done by them, and I believe they would be aided in any emergency by mercantile friends. We have, however, just detached one of our most promising assistants, elder Zia, to aid Dr. McCartee at Chefoo, and another ruling elder from Sanpoh, with a useful teacher, have been carried off by the rebels; while a fourth assistant has been laid up with sickness, which seems to grow upon him, for a number of months. Moreover, the rebels have been driven from all the cities contiguous to Ningpo, which will again open the field there, so long desolate, and call forth all our remaining energies.

There is, however, a blessed resource in these times of anxiety, respecting the great work committed to us, as we view the broad harvest spread out along these mighty rivers; and I would that the church at home might fully enter into the spirit of it as taught her by our blessed Lord. "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth labourers into his harvest." It is His harvest, and the labourers and other means are in His hands, and to Him must we first look in our distresses. Nor must we forget that the great mass of these workmen will be raised on mission ground, and it is for native helpers, as well as foreign missionaries, that we should earnestly pray.

Since my return from this trip up the river, the steamer "Takiang," from Hong Kong, has brought to me Mrs. Rankin and two of our children, the same benevolent owners, already mentioned, having furnished them with a free passage up the coast. They reached Hong Kong more than a month since, after a very pleasant voyage from New York in the "Hotspur." I am thankful to report them all in the enjoyment of excellent health. I should be glad to write as good news of myself, but during the last two months the climate has affected me more seriously and continuously than at any time since I first came to China, in 1848. Nor has absence from my field for six weeks past much benefitted me. My visit at Shanghai has, however, been exceedingly pleasant, under the hospitable roof of Mr. and Mrs. Tyers, and I have had much enjoyment in communion with my missionary brethren here. It has been a further privilege to meet our old friend, Dr. Happer, who came up the coast two weeks since, and who is now also on a visit up the river, other kind friends having, in his case also, provided the necessary means. He will probably visit us at Ningpo.

From that post I learn that the rebels have been driven from Shang-yii, the city above Yuyiau, but our native Christians have been probably taken with them. Blind A-yiu, formerly a pupil in our female school, was recently taken away from a life of much suffering. She was a true Christian, and her end was peace.

I remain very truly yours,

H. V. RANKIN.

Rev. W. E. Schenck, D.D.

Dear Sir—I have received the package you so promptly forwarded to me. Part of it is already in the hands of earnest readers. The books form a little library, which I find a most valuable auxiliary in my work. Two young men are now in my tent selecting books from those you sent me. Both of them are consistent members of church. They belong to the 4th Regiment, which lies next us. They are without a chaplain. I have hunted out the religious men in this regiment, (4th) and formed them into a Bible-class. I have also two Bible-classes in my own regiment, (the 3d.) They meet me in my tent. If I had room, I could have each class more than doubled.

The field is a hard one to cultivate; yet I take more pleasure in the work, and have met with more encouragement than I did in my pastoral charge.

The chaplains in the field who are truly devoted to the work of their Master, would feel more encouraged if they were conscious of the fact that they were upheld by the prayers of the ministry and Christian people at home. Many persons find fault with chaplains; few, I fear, pray for them.

Let us be encouraged by the spiritual offerings of prayer, as well as by the material offerings of the church.

Yours, in brotherly love. J. J. P.

FROM A DISTRIBUTOR AT MEMPHIS, TENN.

Fort Pickering, Memphis, Tenn.

Dear Brother—I was glad to get your letter and the Primers by mail, and your promise of more books. I am like the horse-leech, crying, "Give, give." It has afforded me great pleasure daily, to draw from your precious box. Hundreds have received from it, and have gone away rejoicing in the gift of a "Soldier's Pocket-Book," or tract, or paper.

A daily prayer-meeting is now sustained at our front door, between the house and the Mississippi river, under some beautiful evergreen trees, through which, and over the heads of the sitting group of worshippers, we see the rapidly rolling waters. Our meeting was commenced on the 16th inst. It is a union-meeting of chaplains, other officers and soldiers from the five regiments in the fort, and from the convalescent camp and hospital tents within the fort. In this inner fort, are some fifteen hundred sick and debilitated men. Every one of these would gladly receive a Pocket-Book, in English or German; but I have designed to give one in each tent only.

We use these soldiers' Pocket-Books at our prayer-meetings, because they are more generally found among the men than any other one book. We have near a hundred present daily, and have a charming spirit of prayer in some officers and privates.

Col. M., of the 117th Regiment, Illinois volunteers, is an earnest Christian, and all his staff, except one, are professed followers of the Lamb. He was a Professor in McKendrick College, near Alton, Illinois; others from that College, are in the regiment, and many are professors of faith in Christ.

I have now an appointment for preaching each Sabbath in the convalescent camp, and yesterday, in addition, preached in the measles hospital. Other prayer-meetings are sustained with increasing interest.

One man in our meeting, this morning, said: "I was a wicked man when I came into the army, but I thank God, that now I believe I love God, and that Christ loves me." Yesterday, distributing books and papers, I found one party playing cards, and one pitching quoits. Asking each party if they would not prefer to be reading, rather than playing, they said, "Yes," and soon their games were suspended, and their minds occupied with healthful thoughts. Prevention is better than cure. It is probable, that if their tents had been well supplied with reading, they would not have been tempted to play on the Sabbath.

More than one thousand men of our army have been buried in this city since it was occupied by our troops less than a year ago. And now, there are five or six thousand sick in hospitals and tents: so that I ask, though so generously supplied by you with books, What are these among so many? Any of your publications you may send me, I shall joyfully circulate, though I have been a great loser, of late, by my efforts in this work. I had tied my horse near the wharf-boat on the levee, and carried books, &c., on to the boats loaded with Quimby's Division, bound to Vicksburg. Absorbed in my work, the boat had left the wharf before I noticed it, and I was carried forty miles down the river before I met a returning boat. At 2 o'clock, next morning, I reached Memphis, but found no horse; all saddled, he was a tempting prize, and was doubtless stolen! So now I carry my basket of books and papers on foot. It is a trial of my faith and patience; but how small my loss, compared with those who have lost son, or brother, or husband, in this great struggle! It was not till after réveille, that I could relieve Mrs. P.'s mind about my mysterious absence over night.

The Pocket-Books, the tracts, the sheet music, the Recruiting song, &c., will, each and all, be most joyfully received and circulated, if God kindly spares me to continue in this blessed work.

Yours truly, J. P.

FROM AN ARMY DISTRIBUTOR.

In Camp near Falmouth, Va.

Dear Sir—Your letter of the 17th inst. was received on the 20th. The package came this morning, in a very good state of preservation. As I spread out on my bed the precious treasure you so kindly sent me, my eyes feasted upon it as a rare gift. I thought of the eager joy with which the men would possess themselves of the "Soldier's Pocket-Book,"—of the happiness they would have in singing those sweet songs of Zion, and reading those delightful series of soldiers' tracts. And I assure you, I was not disappointed; for when I stood outside the tent-door, and called to the men of my company, "Now, all of you who want a 'Soldier's Pocket-Book,' come and get one," they crowded around me, and it was not long until every one present had his little book in his hands, open. Their faces were all one big smile from forehead to chin. Not long after, one could hear, from all sides in the company, the voices of men reading and singing. God bless them! Now, as I write, the sweet strains of "Rock of Ages" fall gently on my ear. May he who sings, place his feet quickly upon that sure Rock, and there stand for ever. Co. A., being from the same town as my own, next demanded attention; and as they have diminished considerably in numbers, since they left home, I was enabled there also to give every man a "Pocket-Book." I need not tell you they were gladly received.

It is spring-time here in the heart. The ground is well open, and the seed even will take good hold. We are about to move, as we suppose, against the enemy, and the mind naturally turns to the thought of the possibility of death. As the element here is largely Presbyterian, and the young men have been piously educated, they now recollect their early teachings, and in the presence of death, are striving to profit by them, and are glad of any proffered aid which they think may do them good.

Oh, that the children of God at home would become more alive to the true interests of the soldier! It is true, some have acted a noble part, and still continue to do so. But it is also true, that the majority of those who bear the sacred name of the Divine Philanthropist, yet love themselves more than their neighbour, in a remarkable degree. We thirst for the water of life, and beg for the cup to be placed to our lips. If it is done, it will be very quickly drained. We hunger for that heavenly bread, and will eat all that can be given. There is really no creature on earth so susceptible of either good or bad influences, as the soldier. And as the evil tendency of the camp is known and deplored by all persons at home, why do not they strive, and that earnestly, to check it? It can be done; and if it is not, well may some poor soul, at the Judgment, say, "No man cared for my soul."

I must thank you sincerely for your gift. God will surely bless it. May he bless you and our Board in your labour of love. I would be very happy to hear from you, and any particular occurrence I may note here, I would like to send you. If we have an engagement soon, and I do not write soon afterwards, you may be assured I am either killed or hurt.

I would love to labour here for Christ, and if I can when my term of service is expired, (May 1st) enter the army missionary ranks, I will do it. But if I am killed, I am content, for I know if this earthly house of my tabernacle were dissolved, I have a house in heaven.

My sincere love to you. Pray for me, and may our Father bless you.

I am ever yours in Christ, C. McC.

A CHAPLAIN'S APPEAL.

Alexandria, Va., 1863.

Gentlemen—This hospital has four hundred and seventy-five patients. I am getting up a library for it, and I wish the greater part of the reading should be evangelical. These wounded men read all the time. They have nothing else to do. One fine fellow was here seven months, with a wound in his ankle, and in that time read more than a hundred books.

We expect our hospital will soon be full of wounded men. If the "boys" could have some of the publications of your Board, they would not read miserable novels, as now many do, to pass away the time. I have already a few books, about two hundred, which are the nucleus of what shall be a fine library. They are numbered, and given out to the soldiers at regular hours, and according to regulations, such as are prescribed for ordinary libraries.

Every book you give me for this hospital, will be acknowledged and preserved with care, and read a great many times. Can you not send me a few volumes? Do send me a few. Send me fifty, or forty, or twenty, or peradventure, ten.

Yours, C. B. T.

Chaplain of Hospital.

LITTLE GIRLS AT WORK.

A few months since, the "Juvenile Mite Society" of Toledo, Iowa, forwarded one dollar to aid our Board of Publication in its great army-work. The letter accompanying the donation, was published in the Visitor. The dear children of that little Society do not become weary in well-doing. They do not forget a good cause, or think they have done all that is necessary, when they have contributed to it once. They keep right along in the good path. And, what is of vast importance, they pray over their donations. How many of our friends, old and young, will follow their example?

The following letter accompanies an additional donation of one dollar from our little friends in Iowa:

"Toledo, Iowa, March 23, 1863.

"Dear Sir—The little girls in the "Juvenile Mite Society," have made up another dollar for the soldiers. As you can best judge how to appropriate it for their good, we leave it with you, and hope we shall do something more in this place soon.

"Your letter was duly received, and interested the children much. We try to pray, not for the soldiers only, but for those who are labouring for their spiritual good. May the Lord protect you, and make you an instrument in the salvation of many, is the prayer of E. H. D."

A WORD FROM KENTUCKY.

Rev. Dr. Schenck, Cor. Sec., &c.

I send the following extract from a letter I have just received from one of our ministers in Kentucky. It is to be hoped that all who read it, will resolve that such a work shall not languish for want of funds. W.

"An officer, whose name I have lost, related to me the value of your last visit to the troops, so far as came under his observation. 'Never,' said he, 'had your church such a field for usefulness. Every book tells, and impresses a sense of obligation to the church which is the donor.'"

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

I. Comfort for Afflicted Youth, in Letters from a Father to his Children. 18mo. pp. 36. Price 15 cents.

The title of this little book sufficiently describes its contents. It is well written, and in a tender, sympathizing tone, which clearly indicates a fellowship of the writer in the sorrow he endeavours to alleviate.

II. Tract No. 251. The Universalist; or, A Word in Season. By N. L. Y.

A very impressive exhibition of the power of divine grace, exhibited in a brief narrative of religious experience.

III. Tract No. 252. The Soldier's Comfort.

In this production of a female pen, the sick and wounded soldier is pointed, in words proceeding from a tender and sympathizing heart, to the Lamb of God as the source of all genuine comfort. Would that tens of thousands of this tract might be speedily distributed in the army hospitals.

DEATH OF A COLPORTEUR.

In a letter lately received from the Rev. I. O. Fillmore, of Syracuse, New York, he says:

"The Rev. J. A. Avery, lately your colporteur, was taken sick a little more than two weeks since, and after suffering for four or five days, he died, and was buried on the 1st day of May. Mr. Avery was a good man, and died in great composure, relying on the mercy of the Saviour, whom he had endeavoured faithfully to serve."

Donations received for General Colportage, and for Soldiers and Sailors, by the Presbyterian Board of Publication, from April 10 to May 12, 1863.

BOARD OF CHURCH EXTENSION.

Corresponding Secretary—Rev. H. I. Coe.
Treasurer—David Keith, Esq.
Rooms of the Young Men's Christian Association, corner of Fifth and Olive Streets, St. Louis, Mo.

EIGHTH ANNUAL REPORT OF THE BOARD OF CHURCH EXTENSION.

In presenting our Eighth Annual Report to the General Assembly, we are compelled to record the death of one of the most efficient and valued members of the Board, the Rev. John F. Cowan, of Carondelet, Missouri. He died on the 29th of September, 1862, in the peaceful triumphs of the gospel he had preached for more than a third of a century. He was a man of remarkable purity of character; of unwearied diligence in the work of the ministry; and his labours had been blessed to the conversion of many souls. We greatly miss his cheerful face and trustful spirit from our councils. His death leaves a vacancy to be filled in the class of members whose term of service expires May, 1865.

APPLICATIONS.

The number of applications for aid put on file from April 1, 1862, to April 1, 1863, was seventy These applications were from churches in the bounds of twenty-one Synods, thirty-seven Presbyteries, and fifteen States and Territories. These seventy churches ask for aid amounting in the aggregate to $24,954.40, averaging $356.49 each.

Besides these new applications filed during the year, there were sixty-one previous applications, calling for $24,991.75, undisposed of, April 1, 1862. The Board, therefore, had before it, during the twelve months under review, one hundred and thirty-one applications, calling for nearly $50,000.

During the year, six applications, asking for $8625, were declined, chiefly for want of funds; and thirty-seven applications, requesting aid to the amount of 13,691.75, were stricken from the file, because they had not furnished the requisite information in the two years allowed for that purpose.

There remained on file and undisposed of for want of the usual information, April 1, 1863, applications from thirty-two churches, calling for $12,750.

APPROPRIATIONS.

During the year under review appropriations amounting to $10,308.40 were made to forty-six churches, in the bounds of seventeen Synods, thirty-one Presbyteries, and sixteen States and Territories. The average amount appropriated to each of these forty-six churches was $224.09.

Appropriations amounting to $625 were, during the year, withdrawn from five churches. To one of these, however, a new appropriation was soon after made. The names and localities of all these churches will be found in the appendix to this report.

The unusually small number, and consequently diminished amount of appropriations, is almost entirely owing to the uncertainty of the times, which delayed the execution of the plans of churches about to build, and prevented their furnishing the necessary information as promptly as they expected. We should, however, add, that the Board found it necessary during the year to make an unusual number of informal pledges of aid on special conditions, which ought fairly to be counted in its liabilities, yet cannot appear among the formal appropriations we report in the appendix, until further action is taken in reference to them.

From April 1, 1862, to April 1, 1863, thirty-seven churches drew their appropriations. The amount credited the Treasurer on account of payments to churches during the year is $7631.65.

In view of the state of public affairs, the Board continued to refrain from anticipating its income and made no appropriations until the funds were in the treasury to meet them.

RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURES.

The appropriated balance in the treasury, April 1, 1862, was $10,756 29. The receipts from all sources during the year were $19,225.22, of which sum $14,240.27 was from churches. The available means therefore of the year were $29,981.51.

The expenditures of the year, as shown by the Treasurer's statement in the appendix, were $9474.93. The balance in the treasury, April 1, 1863, was, consequently, $20,506.58. There were, however, unpaid at that time liabilities amounting to $14,172,66, leaving as the unpledged balance, April 1, 1863, $6333.92. Thus, for the first time in our history, we close a fiscal year with a considerable unpledged balance in the treasury. This state of things arises from the fact that the Board does not now make appropriations until the means are in hand to meet them; from the further fact that nearly two-thirds of this balance was received at the treasury within thirty days of the close of the fiscal year, and from the additional fact that the condition of public affairs prevented churches seeking aid from responding to our usual inquiries as promptly as heretofore.

Moreover, cases of desperate necessity occur so frequently, that we feel that we would be wanting in ordinary wisdom as stewards of the General Assembly, if we did not aim to keep, in these uncertain times, a small sum to meet such cases.

In view of the statements of this report, that the fiscal year closed with applications on file (which may be perfected in a single week) amounting to $12,750; that applications calling for $8650 were declined during the year, chiefly for want of funds; and that the applications filed were $6528.07 in excess of the donations received, no reasonable man can infer from our temporary balance that the contributions for church extension have outrun the wants of our houseless churches. So far would such an inference be from the truth, that the Board could, with advantage to our Zion, appropriate the entire balance at a single sitting, if it were deemed wise and just to do so.

COST OF CHURCH EDIFICES.

Since the organization of the Board, July, 1855, appropriations have been made to four hundred and eighty-six different churches. Of these sixty-six were aided by special appropriations, for which the Board took no responsibility. As nearly as we can ascertain, the remaining four hundred and twenty churches cost $817,252, or $1946 each.

The reported average cost of the church edifices aided by the Board during the year under review is $1687.01. This is an advance of $559.11, or nearly fifty per cent. over the reported cost of those aided during the previous year, and was to be expected from the general advance in the price of labour and materials.

CONCLUDING SUMMARY.

A comparison of some of the items presented in this report with the corresponding statements of the previous year may not be uninstructive. It shows that notwithstanding the continuance of our tremendous civil war, the necessity for houses of worship, and for aid in their erection, is so urgent, that the number and amount of applications has increased, rather than diminished; the number of applications being seventy against sixty-nine, and the amount $24,954.40 against $24,572.45, while the average of aid sought is $356.49 against $356.12. It has recently come to our knowledge that the strangely erroneous impression that the Board was bankrupt, and unable to give aid to needy churches, has been somewhat widely prevalent. We have, therefore, reason to believe, that if the truth had been known, the number of applications for assistance would have been still larger during the year.

Such a comparison shows further, that the number of contributing churches this year is five hundred and sixty-six against four hundred and eight and the amount of church contributions $14,240.27 against $11,177.40 last year. This is an advance of one hundred and fifty-eight, or nearly forty per cent. in the number, and of $3062.87, or more than twenty-seven per cent. in the amount of church gifts.

The most important fact, however, developed by such a comparison, is the necessity for increased aid to our feeble churches. As we have already seen, the cost of church-building has risen fifty per cent. within a year, when to this is added the further fact that nearly all of our houseless churches have sent forth some of their best members and supporters to the war, and that not a few of these have fallen in battle or by disease, it will appear evident that the protecting establishing influences of the sanctuary can be secured for our weakened flocks only by enlarged aid from their wealthier and more favoured brethren. We are persuaded that if the real value of sanctuaries for our feeble churches could be felt, and the real poverty of most of those who ask aid could be known, the Board would speedily be enabled, with the hearty consent of contributors, to cheer their fainting brethren with more liberal appropriations. By order of the Board,

W. H. Parks, President,
H. I. Coe, Secretary.

ABSTRACT OF ANNUAL REPORT.

In a world so changeful as this, we are reminded, in making our Annual Report, of the vacancies created by death in the list of the members of the Board, who in their day and generation cheered us in our great work of sending the gospel to the destitute, and who, ceasing from their labours, have entered on the everlasting reward which a gracious Master permits his servants to receive—Rev. Dr. Thornwell, in the southern portion of the land; Rev. Dr. Steel, forty years pastor of a church in the neighbourhood of the city where the office is located; William Richardson, of Louisville, Kentucky, for years an active member of the Western Executive Committee, and an earnest friend of missions; and lastly, the venerable Dr. John McDowell, who for thirty years presided with rare punctuality over the Executive Committee, and since the death of Dr. Janeway, President of the Board—warm in his attachments to the cause, wise in counsel, and invaluable, from his long connection with the Board, to those who in later days have been called to overlook its interests. Identified, in God's providence, with the early struggles of the Board, he lived to rejoice in its enlargement, and gave thanks for its successes. God thus impressively speaks to those who survive, in these annual notices of departed saints, to work while our day is lasting, and ere the evening shadows warn the worker that his service is performed, and the reckonings of eternity are beginning.

The whole number of missionaries in commission since March 1, 1862, is 409.

The number of churches and missionary stations in whole or part supplied (so far as reported) by those holding commission, is 676.

Twenty churches are reported as having been organized during the missionary year.

The number of admissions on examination is 1242, and on certificate 777; a total of 2019.

The whole membership in churches connected with the Board, is 17,755.

Sabbath-schools number 279, with 2453 teachers, and 16,680 scholars.

The number of baptisms reported is 2105.

The amount promised to the missionaries from March 1, 1862, to March 1, 1863, has been $53,663.48. This shows a material decrease on last year, and more so, in comparison with former years, caused by the former embarrassments of the Board, and the disturbed state of large portions of our country. An inspection of our resources will manifest we have done what we could, and according to the ability which the church has accorded us.

The amount of money received from all sources during the fiscal year, was $71,210.78.

The amount paid by the treasury, including the Presbyteries of West Jersey and Transylvania, was $59,072.70; leaving a balance in the treasury of $12,738.21. As already stated, the missionaries reporting to March 1, 1863, have been in full paid. As their reports are being constantly received, our obligations to them are as constantly maturing; and all the receipts, on which we can reasonably depend for the next six months, will fall short largely of the amount to be paid in that period to those who bear the commission of the Board.

The aggregate receipts, it will be seen, in the whole field, which we have been permitted to cultivate, have been less, as compared with those of the former year.

In legacies received, there has been an increase of $3872.41, and a decrease in miscellaneous and individual donations of $4239.48. We are pained to add, that the returns from the churches have been less, as compared with the year preceding, by $13,754.78. This is the saddest feature of all—variation in the amounts yielded by payment of legacies, and from wide-hearted individuals, is to be expected in the mutation of human affairs—the main and surest reliance of the cause, in a wise and prudent administration of missions, must be upon the inflow from churches annually contributing. Sudden rains may swell the stream and encourage temporary ventures, but the rills and rivulets in mountain solitudes and remote untrodden wildernesses, must feed the river, where floats the commerce of half a continent. What we can reasonably expect from the churches, year by year, must be the measure and gauge of our ordinary movements. Legacies are apt to involve litigation, and occasion much delay—compromise with greedy heirs-at-law is often a prudential necessity. We dare not calculate on these till actually paid. The measure of the Board's ability will ever be the amount which a cheerful church will place in our treasury, and as the almoner of her benefactions, will we gladly dispense them, and do all we can to make our land Immanuel's land, and a joy on all the earth.

The Board are compelled to say, that in very few instances have they felt able to establish new missions. Fewer applications have been made, because, among other reasons, the war has absorbed the surplus in chaplain service, and some of the missionaries have left their stations at the urgent request of regiments which were formed in their neighbourhoods and among their own flocks—some have been driven from their fields—the Border States have thus suffered, and fields once cultivated, must await the halcyon days of peace, ere man can predict their future. Reconstruction must take place, and arrangements be made, of which we cannot now speak for want of information, and, therefore, in submission to God's will, must we quietly await the evolution of that Providence who can bring light out of darkness, and order from manifold confusion. So far, we fear, that years of missionary labour have been destroyed, and the foundations swept away by the upheavals of internecine war. When peace comes, a responsibility will devolve upon the Board and God's church, involving labour of no ordinary kind, and likely to task the wisdom and skill of those to whom the missions to the destitute have been committed.

Our foreign population has not been overlooked. We have two missionaries among the French; one among the Belgians of Wisconsin; and twenty-four among the Germans. The results are not so cheering in all cases as we could wish, nor can we feel that the future is so bright as many might desire; there are difficulties of which it is hard to speak, and which, perhaps, we do not understand. The evident policy and interest of our country are to sink, as speedily as possible, these nationalities into one American mass, and not to encourage the use of imported languages. It may be, our hope of reaching these different foreign elements will be in their children; when uttering our language, and feeling the pressure of our institutions, they will be emancipated and disenthralled from the old habits of Europe, and turn with more readiness to the instructions of the missionary.

Itinerant labour, which the last Assembly pressed upon our attention, has been employed only to a limited extent. Few applications have been made, and the difficulties in the way are neither few nor light. Beside involving large expense, the work to be done well, requires peculiar habitudes, otherwise we waste our strength and lose our money. Men of no ordinary qualifications are needed to expatiate over those wide fields, and judiciously accomplish this important work. Many of our missionaries make excursions over the territory which outlies their own and assigned fields. The Board venture to suggest, that in these unsettled times, and while the war unhappily afflicts us, our Presbyteries, after the example of our forefathers, and in the fashion of their primitive habits, might gratuitously perform this service, by sending their members on frequent tours to preach in the scattered hamlets and neighbourhoods, which are found even in the older and more established States, and more especially in the broad expanse of new States and Territories, whose population increase at such amazing rates.

Two distinct and important departments are committed to the Board.

I. The cherishing of feeble churches in the older and more settled portions of the land, in the support of pastors or stated supplies, with the hope, however, that in no great length of time, they may attain a spiritual independence, and the grizzle of feebleness may harden into bone of self-sustaining manhood. The scattered and sparse nature of her population accounts in some measure for this service, conjoined with the poverty of the people. It is painful to say, that some of these seem to give no evidence of ever reaching maturity. The partiality of Presbyteries, the fear of giving offence, causes them to continue from year to year these recommendations, and even to press them upon the Board. Pique, and unworthy motives, often rend feeble congregations, which united, might creditably support the gospel, and thus relieve our treasury. Men, good and able men, are constrained to fields of unlikely growth; and all their energies are dwarfed and stunted. Churches have received aid for fifteen years and more, and are apparently as far from self-support as ever. The evil is serious, and needs correction; and it has become no uncommon occurrence for individual donors, in making large contributions, to stipulate that these funds be expended on distant and promising missionary fields. Unless the treasury be largely replenished by a new and awakened zeal in the church, it is to be feared, from the above statement of facts, that our church will not keep abreast of other sections of the American church, and thus large portions of the new States and territories will be unblessed by our labours. It is respectfully submitted, that Presbyteries inquire more narrowly into the condition of applying churches, and profitably unite, under the episcopacy of one brother, two or three contiguous and feeble churches.

II. The traditions of our church, as already remarked, in her early history, have favoured missions to the destitute, and in the regions beyond. It is the pure mission work, which sends forth the missionary to the other and scattered sheep, whom Christ has, and which are not of this fold. It is going forth to lay foundations where no man has laid—to gather new churches in the waste places and among the struggling emigrants, who build their rude cabins on land just vacated by the red man, as he steadily retires before the advance of Anglo-Saxon enterprise. It seeks out the destitute, and goes about and afar to preach the gospel to our brethren, whose necessities or energy have borne them to those rude fields where to lay the foundations of empire.

Until our civil war, we doubled our population every twenty-five years, and in some portions and localities, quadrupled. The increase, in some instances, would be fabulous, if not sustained by the rigid demonstrations of the Census Bureau. Towns and villages spring up like magic, and maps of yesterday become obsolete on account of rapid change. Plains and prairies bloom with new life, and ask for the hope and consolations of the gospel. As the States on the eastern side of the great river of the West fill up and demand attention, the vast regions beyond that river, stretching, if not to the Rocky Mountains, at least to the arid plains which cover their eastern slope, are objects of increasing interest and profound solicitude. An inspection of the map will reveal these regions, and information from reliable sources tell of their wonderful resources; the presence of abundant gold between the parallels of 102° and 116° west longitude, and from latitude 38° to 48° north, is attracting men by thousands and tens of thousands, ensuring eventually their filling up, as in California. With the march of this advancing population the church must keep step; and it has been no small grief that, for the last two years, we have been unable to do more for those wide regions, and thus send forth our missionary brethren in the front of this wonderful tide. It is said, that information in the possession of the State Department foreshadows an immigration from Europe, this year, beyond past precedent. The close of the war will stimulate this movement, and larger masses than ever will be urged upon the States beyond the Mississippi. We have the authority of the Emigrant Agent of the United States Government, when we affirm, that one hundred thousand will cross the plains this year in search of homes and wealth in the new regions which God has given us. The war itself has taught lessons of incalculable worth, and revealed the vast resources of our country, and started into active being productions which may revolutionize the manufactories of our land. If God will grant us deliverance from this war, our country will emerge from its trial, strengthened and purified, with lessons of self-reliance impressed upon us by the selfishness of European governments, and taught to cultivate the broad continent God has given us to possess, and find in its soil of marvellous fertility all we require for sustenance, and comfort too. No man can realize the future before us, unless we provoke God by our sins. A few years will give us a population greater than France, and equal with Russia, and a work for the people of God to perform, grand beyond imagination, and glorious beyond the fame of earth.

BOARD OF EDUCATION.

Letters and Communications for the BOARD OF EDUCATION on the subject of Ministerial Education, or of Schools, Academies, and Colleges, may be addressed to the Secretary, Rev. Dr. Chester, or Rev. Thomas McCauley, No. 821 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

Remittances of Money may be made to William Main, Esq., Treasurer, No. 821 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

I. MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

PLEA FOR THE INCREASE OF CANDIDATES.

This aspect of our prospects as a Church, gathers around it a still deeper darkness, when it is considered that the demand for labourers is very soon to be great beyond all parallel in our past history. The mind of the nation is at present naturally absorbed with the actual and prospective material and domestic desolations of the land. The arrest laid upon commerce, and agriculture, and manufactures, throughout a large proportion of our common country; the destruction which wasteth at noon-day, which has laid, and is still laying, homesteads waste and hearts desolate, awakes a nation's apprehension, and claims for the suffering children of sorrow, a nation's sympathies. Whilst the church shares with the nation all these feelings, and cherishes all these sympathies, there are aspects of the national woe which open upon her vision alone. She weeps for the heritage of Zion laid waste. Her wail is the wail of Rachel for her children, which are not. She looks for her sons, who were wont to fill up the ranks of the army of reapers, as, wearied with the toils of harvest, they laid down the sickle, and, at the bidding of their Lord, went home to their reward. She looks for them, but they come not. She calls, but they shall never, never answer. Their voice was hushed amid the tempest of battle, and they were laid away to rest, in gory, nameless graves. The response which is given back, by the academies and colleges of our church is "our young men are fading away."

Whilst these fountains, from which the ranks of the ministry are to be recruited, have been drying up, the demand for labourers will very soon be great beyond all precedent. It is believed that the prepared harvest will not have to perish through lack of reapers. The Lord of the harvest will not fling wide the gates and beckon the church to enter in vain. The reapers will be forthcoming. The only question is, "who will have the honour and the reward of furnishing the reapers and equipping them for the work?" The Lord of the harvest has indicated the rule of his administration in the gathering of the golden grain. Whilst it is his to send forth the labourers, it is ours diligently to employ the means which he has ordained for their increase. The church is pointed to the whitening fields, and urged to beseech Him, who alone can give the call, or the grace to obey it, to send forth the labourers. Here, then, in the audience of the voice of his providence, is the true posture of the church. In the exercise of prayer, and in the use of the means placed at her disposal, let her arise and gird herself for the conflict of the latter days. Let the family, the school, and the church, be animated by the prospect of an opening harvest-field. Let every agency within the compass of our ecclesiastical organism be laid under contribution to this one great all-absorbing interest. From the Parochial School to the University, let our youth be trained under the inspiration of the motto, "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few."—From the Annual Report.

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION IN SCHOOLS, ACADEMIES, AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

MOTIVES TO PRAYER FOR COLLEGES.

Extracts from an Address delivered in the First Presbyterian Church, in the City of New York, February 26, 1863, by the Rev. William G. T. Shedd, D. D.

(Concluded.)

3. The third and last motive that we shall mention—to pray for all young persons that are pursuing studies in the educational institutions of the land—namely that this class contains in it a greater proportion of baptized persons than any other similar class.

The rolls of our academies and colleges show that religion and learning go hand in hand. It is the pious parent who is most anxious that his child should obtain wisdom rather than rubies. It is the serious or the pious child that sets the highest estimate upon knowledge and instruction. How often does the conversion of a parent change the whole current, the whole future of the children's lives. Before, he was anxious mainly that they should grow up men of wealth, and women of fashion. Now he is anxious mainly that their minds should be developed by all good methods of education, in the hope and the faith that the heart will in this way be most likely to become changed by the renewing grace of God. How often does the conversion of a child deaden his interest in merely material pursuits and material wealth, and make a scholar of him. There is no more striking proof of the affinity between religion and learning, than in such facts as these, which strew the annals of our churches and our educational institutions. Would you see an utter indifference to liberal education? go into an earthly, money-loving, money-hoarding community; go into a family where greed is the ruling passion. Would you see a respect for culture, and a quick sensibility towards it? go into a Christian population; go into a religious household.

Hence it is, that that class of youth who are engaged in the pursuit of knowledge, contains a much larger proportion of baptized children, children of Christian parentage, than any other class of young persons. The irreligious parent places his son where he will accumulate wealth; the religious parent sends his child where he will accumulate ideas. The irreligious youth prefers the bustle and excitement of material existence; the pious youth hungers after wisdom, human and divine. From the ranks of the church, then, issue the great majority of those who are obtaining a liberal education. Infidelity, with all its professed respect for reason and truth, neither seeks education, nor imparts it. It founds no universities, it produces no literature. The utmost that it attempts, is to wrest to its own purposes the institutions and the literature that have come into being from a Christian source, and whose vitality flows altogether from Christian ideas.

In the encouraging fact, then, that so many of these youth have been sprinkled with the baptismal water, and have been consecrated to the adorable Trinity, in the covenant which he himself has made with his people, we find a strong and overcoming motive to fervent and effectual prayer for them. We surely need not enlarge upon this motive in such a presence as this. We are speaking to Christian parents, who believe that the promise of mercy is to believers and their offspring. We are addressing churches, to whom the covenanted mercy in the sacrament of baptism is precious as the apple of the eye; to whom it is a strong tower, into which they bring their children, that they may be safe from the darts of the evil one, and the snares of the destroyer. All that you have ever heard from the Christian ministry; all that you have ever read in the Scriptures, and the recorded wisdom of the Christian church; all that you have ever observed in the dealings of God with his elect people and their children; all that you have ever known in your own personal experience of God's faithfulness to his covenant; all that bears in any manner upon the doctrine of covenanted mercy to believers and their offspring, applies with its fullest force to that class for whom we are met to pray. They are the children of Christian parents; they are the children of prayers and tears; they are the children who have been taught the Scriptures from infancy; they are the children who have been guarded and watched over in reference to the habits they should form, and the company they should keep; they are the children who have been taught to prefer instruction to riches, intellectual to material advantages. They are the élite youth of the country, and we are here to pray that they may become the elect children of God.

Is it not plain that this annual union and concert of prayer for the outpouring of the Divine Spirit upon the educational institutions of the land, is second to none in importance? Recapitulate these motives to pray for the many thousands of youth in academies and colleges. This class is destined to exert a thousandfold more influence in church and state than any other one of the same number. The learned professions are to be supplied from it, and the majority of our legislators will come from its ranks. This class is very favourably situated, by reason of its seclusion from the distractions and temptations of the world, the steady, exacting nature of its daily routine, and the theoretical, as well as practical Christianity under which it is trained, for the reception of distinctively evangelical truths and gracious influences. And lastly, this class of persons is most immediately related to the church of Christ itself, by virtue of birth, blood, and covenanted mercy. Look at these motives one by one; then place them in combination, and ask what more interesting, what more promising object of prayer, can be presented to the minds of God's people, than this one?

An annual concert of prayer supposes an unceasing daily prayer. The monthly supplication for foreign missions, implies that the church goes every day into the closet, and prays for the great consummation. These special seasons are merely the times when the steady and constant devotion of the people of God concentrates itself with an unusual intensity, that it may gather itself up for another and a stronger movement; they are like the knots in the grapevine, which show that the living principle is so forceful and so everflowing, that it accumulates upon itself, and bulges out in the growing wood. So should it be with the church, in reference to all these monthly or annual unions for prayer and Christian coöperation. The daily zeal and the daily supplication should be so unceasing and cumulative, that these occasional opportunities should be the vents through which we discharge our surcharged and brimming souls; not the mere formal, and mechanical, and rarely-occurring seasons, in which we lash ourselves up to an unwelcome duty.

That, therefore, for which we pray now and here, should be, will be, if we are alive in Zion, the continual burden and the constant supplication of our souls. Let us bear through all the days and months of the coming year these educational institutions, and these thousands of young persons in them, upon our hearts, before the throne of God. Then this day will be the beginning of days to Zion, and she shall arise and shine, her light being come. Then all her children shall be taught of the Lord; and great shall be the peace of her children. (Isaiah liv. 13.)

THE MISSION SCHOOL AMONG THE BELGIANS IN WISCONSIN.

This school is located at Robinsonville, a French Belgian settlement, about twenty miles northeast of the village of Green Bay, Wisconsin. In this region, including nearly the entire peninsula between Green Bay and Lake Michigan, there is a French-speaking population, composed of Belgians, French, French-Canadians, and "Half-breeds," of some 20,000 souls, and most of them are Romanists of the most ignorant and superstitious class. In the winter of 1861, the Rev. Henry Morell, a missionary of the Presbyterian Board of Domestic Missions, was sent into this region, and a mission was commenced the following spring, under the care of the Presbytery of Winnebago, the supervision of which was afterwards transferred to the Synod of Wisconsin. Mr. Morrell found, on his first visit, a little company of Protestant Belgians, who had been brought to a saving knowledge of the truth, by means of evangelical labours in Europe, and who had brought with them to these northwestern wilds, their French Bibles and evangelical hymn-books; and who were assembling together every Sabbath, to sing, and pray, and read the word of God, and who, for many months, had been praying to the Great Head of the church, to send them a minister who should break to them the bread of life in their own language. They regarded the missionary as sent to them in answer to these prayers, and received him with open arms, or, as they expressed it, "as an angel from God."

During the following summer, a Presbyterian church, of some twenty-six members, was organized, which has since been increased to about forty. Here is an excellent nucleus and basis for missionary operations into all that region. Steps were also taken, from the very beginning, to provide a permanent place of worship. Ten acres of land, centrally located, were purchased, and a building commenced, which, however, owing to the extreme poverty of the people, and other causes, was not completed so as to be occupied until last fall. This building, in the erection of which they were aided by the churches in Wisconsin, and by the Board of Church Extension, is designed to serve a threefold purpose—as a house of worship, a house for the minister, and a school-house—and it is now thus occupied, the missionary's family, the church, and the school, being all gathered under the same roof.

At the outset of this work, one of the most serious obstacles was felt to be in the fact, that all the public schools were in the hands of the Romanists.

The liberal school laws of Wisconsin afford, perhaps, as great facilities for public schools, in the new settlements, as in any other State in the Union; but the schools in each locality are of course controlled by the majority of the voters, and in these French settlements, the majority being largely Roman Catholic, they take care to put in only Catholic officers, who will employ only teachers of a like faith, which places all the schools under the entire control of the priests. Our only relief from this state of things is, to establish schools of our own.

Such a school was commenced in January last, under the auspices of the Board of Education, and a Committee of the Synod of Wisconsin.

Mr. Nicolus Cloudel, a native of France, who seems well qualified for the work, has been secured as teacher, and some twenty-five pupils have been gathered. The enterprise is as yet in its infancy, but, with the blessing of God, we believe a great and important work is before it.

Its superiority, in marked contrast to the miserable Romanist schools around it, we hope will attract pupils, and soon make it a powerful auxiliary in spreading the light of the gospel through all that dark and benighted region.

The school is conducted in the French language. It is opened with prayer and the reading of the Bible, and as soon as the catechism can be obtained in the French language, it will be taught. In the meantime, it is designed to give in its place, proper oral religious instruction.

Fraternally yours,

H. M. Robertson.

Chairman Committee of Synod of Wisconsin.

NOTICES OF MISSIONARIES.

We regret to learn the death of Mrs. Williams, wife of Mr. James Williams, assistant missionary at the Iowa mission. She died on the 23d of May. The Rev. S. M. Irvin says: "She was enabled to bear her sufferings with uncommon patience and fortitude, and with a strong confidence in her Saviour. She has been a most faithful labourer in the mission. Her work is done, and we may well hope that she has entered into the 'rest that remaineth to the people of God.'"

The Rev. A. G. Simonton and his wife embarked at Baltimore for Rio de Janeiro in the barque Cricket, on the 23d of May. They will be remembered, we trust, in the prayers of our readers.

CONVERTS ADMITTED TO THE CHURCH.

Mr. Herron's letter from the station at Dehra, India, reports a most encouraging state of things. On the 5th of April seven children were baptized, and three adult inquirers. On the evening of that Sabbath, seventeen persons were admitted to the communion of the church, viz., "the three persons just mentioned; two, who had been under discipline; three, who had been in communion with other churches; and nine who had been baptized in infancy, and with the exception of two in connection with our own missions. Six of these are pupils in the girls' boarding school. It is cheering to see the youth of the church coming forward and taking the Lord to be their God." Mr. Herron speaks of fourteen more who had applied for admission to the communion, and who are under instruction.

DEATH OF A YOUNG CONVERT.

The last number of the Record contained an interesting notice of the baptism of a young Siamese at Bangkok, of the name of Kao. The letters now acknowledged report with much regret the removal of this young man by death. They speak of him as having "maintained his Christian integrity to the last, and died in Christ, with the hope of a glorious resurrection and eternal life. . . . His sickness was short, and when told by the doctor that he could not live, he said, 'It is no matter, I am not afraid to die; I love Jesus and am happy; I am going to heaven.'" Mr. McFarland, at Petchaburi, speaks of having much encouragement as to a Siamo-Chinese, who has been under instruction for some time.

MISSIONARY JOURNEYS.

The letters from India and Siam make mention of several journeys to preach the gospel. A number of Karen villages in Siam were visited by two of the brethren, and the gospel was made known, for the first time, to their secluded inhabitants. Of the great fair at Hardwar, India, on the Ganges, one of the brethren who visited it for the purpose of preaching the gospel to the pilgrims, says, "I never saw so small a gathering at that celebrated place."

MEDICAL MISSIONARY WORK AT CANTON.

A copy of a "Report of the Medical Missionary Society's Hospital at Canton, for the year 1862, by John G. Kerr, M. D.," has been received. It is a document of much interest, and one showing that a great work of humanity has been performed—a work directly and indirectly connected with our mission at that city. We can only state here that the attendance of "out-patients at the Hospital in Canton, and at the Dispensary in Fuh-shan," was no less than 22,133, of whom 2969 at the Hospital were females. The number vaccinated was 658.

ANNUAL REPORT—ACTION OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

We send to all our non-clerical readers an extra number of the Record of this month, containing a copy of the Annual Report of the Board. A copy will be sent to each minister in another form. We would respectfully ask for this Report a careful perusal.

The General Assembly, at its recent sessions in Peoria, expressed a very earnest and cordial interest in the progress of the cause of foreign missions. We need give no particulars here, as they have doubtless been seen already by our readers, in the weekly newspapers. We trust that, as the year goes on, it will be made manifest that the Spirit of God is calling his people, and enabling them, to do more for the promotion of this cause than ever before. We purposely place the next paragraph after this one.

URGENT CALL FOR MORE MEN.

The brethren of the Furrukhabad mission have made an urgent request to the Executive Committee, that more men should be sent to join them in their work. Three of their already too small number are in a serious degree unfitted for work, by reason of impaired health. And the work is great. The same request is made from other missions. More men are needed in the Lodiana mission. In the Corisco mission, also, there is great need of a reinforcement. But we need not re-state the case, which will be found more fully presented in the Annual Report. "Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth labourers into his harvest."

OUR MISSIONARY WORK NOT RETROGRADING.

At the late meeting of the General Assembly, one of the brethren made the statement very strongly, that as a church we have gone backward in the missionary work within the last eight years. The question of going forward had been presented by a previous speaker. Referring to this, it was urged, that we must first "stop retrograding." We observe that one of our religious newspapers endorses this remark, editorially.

This statement is erroneous, and it is a matter of regret that it could not have been corrected in the Assembly. It is true indeed, as it has been heretofore more than once, that certain missions are in a somewhat critical condition for want of more labourers; but it is not true, generally, that the church is going backward in this work, neither is it true of the particular mission referred to—the mission in India—that it is greatly weaker now than it was in 1855. The facts in the case are conclusive, as we shall now briefly show. We take the following figures from the Reports of the Board for 1855 and 1863, which include the period mentioned of eight years, and from the Minutes of the General Assembly of 1855 and 1862—those of 1863 being not yet published.

1. As to Pecuniary Support.

In 1855 the number of communicants was 231,404; the amount contributed by the churches and 'miscellaneous'—that is, by the living members of our body—was $106,173.

In 1862, the number of communicants, in churches supporting the missions, was 227,590; the amount contributed in 1863* by these churches and 'miscellaneous' was $129,750.

This shows an average contribution by each communicant—in 1855, of nearly 46 cents: in 1863, of a little over 57 cents. This is an increase of nearly twenty-five per cent. in eight years, which is certainly an encouraging fact under any ordinary circumstances, and a fact highly encouraging in view of the financial revulsion of 1857, and the dreadful troubles of the last two years. Indeed, we have reason to believe, that very many members of our communion have exercised greater self-denial, and greater liberality towards this cause, during the last two years, than during any former period. We speak of this to the praise of God's grace vouchsafed to his people.

2. As to the Number of Missionary Labourers.

In 1855, the number of ordained missionaries was 59; in 1863, it was 67. This statement, let it be remembered, shows the number connected with the Board in each year, beginning and ending the period of eight years. Between these years two great special losses were incurred; first of four ministers in the Sepoy mutiny, and next of sixteen ministers connected with the Southwestern Indian missions. But for the present war, these sixteen would be on the list—making the increase of ordained missionaries 24; as the case stands, the increase is only 8.

A less number of laymen and of female assistant missionaries is reported in 1863 than in 1855, by reason of the suspension of the Southwestern Indian missions.

This, however, is more than compensated by a considerable increase of native missionary labourers. In 1855, these were 43; in 1863, their number had increased to 97.

3. The Case of the Missions in India.

In 1855, there were 26 ordained ministers of our church connected with the missions in India; in 1863, there are 25, and one medical missionary. In 1855, there were 34 native missionary labourers; in 1863, there are 71.

4. General Results—Loss and Gains.

Of ordained missionaries, there is one less in India in 1863 than in 1855; and there are five more in South America, four more in Africa, five more in Siam, two more in China, one more in Japan, in other missions there being no change of numbers—showing, as above, a gain of eight, notwithstanding the

* If the amount contributed in 1862 were taken, the result would be so little different as not to affect the point in question.

heavy losses in the Sepoy mutiny and the South-western Indian tribes.

Of native labourers, we are permitted to speak only of gains—ten in Africa, one in Siam, eleven in China, and thirty-seven in India.

It is no doubt true that the growth of liberality in our communion is much less than the missionary cause requires. Would that all our Christian brethren were constrained by the love of Christ, and by compassion for perishing souls, to come forward with their gifts, even as the Lord has prospered them. We trust they will yet do so. But in the meantime, we are thankful, hopeful, and encouraged in no small degree, in view of the progress already made. We believe it is of God's grace to our Christian people, and we look for still greater advance in the time to come. The subject has respect to the past and to the future, and it suggests many remarks, but we forbear to enlarge on it.

No doubt, also, in some of the missions there is now urgent need for more men. In India several of the brethren are in precarious health. This is true, also, of some of the missionaries in other fields. Moreover, the missionary work itself is growing. God's blessing is evidently resting upon it. It is calling for more labourers. And there are some new labourers ready to be sent forth. Does not this brief review of the past eight years afford encouragement as to sending them out? It is true, the Board has not yet the funds needed for this purpose, but may we not believe that these will be provided?

We need not go back eight years, however, for encouragement. As we pen these lines, we recollect the deep fears and darkness of the months of April, May, and June, 1861, when it seemed as if the whole work of missions would be broken up. How has God protected this cause! How has he enabled his people to support it! How has he heard their prayers for its success, so that never before were the proofs of his converting grace more remarkably manifested at many of the missionary stations! We think all this is most cheering. Let us thank God and take courage.

MISSIONARY LABORS IN 1862 AT FUTTEHGURH, INDIA.

Preaching and Schools at Rakha.

At the Rakha branch of the Futtehgurh Station, the Rev. J. L. Scott and his wife, and several native Christian assistants, continued their usual labours last year without interruption. Mr. Scott gives a report of these labors, from which we take the following extracts:

Preaching.

As in former years, two services have been conducted on Sunday, and a prayer-meeting on Thursday evenings. For a short time, during the latter part of the year, I have been assisted in these services by Baboo Iswari Das, and I have reason to hope that he will hereafter render this assistance regularly. His ministrations are, I believe, acceptable and profitable to the church. This is a beginning towards carrying out the wishes of the Committee that, as soon as possible, the churches should be put under the care of native pastors. We are anxious that such should be the case whenever circumstances may warrant.

The attendance of the congregation has been pretty good, though there are some who absent themselves more frequently than they ought to do. As in Christian countries, so here, some are indifferent to the ordinances of the house of God.

The statistics of the church are as follows:—The whole Christian congregation is 223. Of these there are, communicants 74, non-communicant adults 15, children 134. Total 223. Children baptized during the year, 10; children buried during the year, 6; adults baptized during the year, 2; adults received to communion during the year, 5.

Several cases of discipline have occurred during the year, and one has been excommunicated. . . . . Generally, however, the conduct of our church members has been moral, but there is not as high a tone of Christian earnestness among many as we could wish.

As there were some signs of danger from the spread of intemperance in our community, the members of the mission at this station, after consultation, determined to establish a Temperance Society. All the members of our communities, both at Rakha and in the city, have cheerfully joined this Society, and, with one exception, we have not heard that the pledge has been broken. We hope that this effort will be attended with great good to our people, as we think it has already been; and we have heard of one or two other stations where the example has been followed.

In connection with the church there is a Sabbath school, attended by all the children of our people, who are of a suitable age. It numbers from sixty to seventy scholars. The children have, since this school was commenced, gone through the Assembly's Shorter Catechism nearly twice, and have committed to memory the whole of the gospel of Matthew, and nearly twenty chapters of the Acts of the Apostles.

A Bible class also, for the men not engaged in teaching in the Sabbath-school, is conducted by myself. We have gone through several books of the New Testament, and are now engaged in a somewhat critical study of Isaiah.

Preaching in the Bazars and Villages has been regularly conducted by the catechists and readers. What effect has been produced, the judgment-day will reveal. During one month, I made a tour, in company with Mr. Brodhead, among the villages surrounding Futtehgurh. We had with us twelve men, who were all able, more or less, to preach the gospel. Some of them did it with much acceptance, and all I hope with profit. An account of this journey has already been published.

I have also under my direction two colporteurs. . . . They carry with them parts of the Bible, and all the tracts and religious books we have; and these are either sold at a merely nominal price, or, if the case seems to justify it, given away. These men are, I believe, doing a good work. The number of books sold is indeed very small, but they reach a class who are likely to read them.

Schools.

The schools under my own and Mrs. Scott's charge are eight.

1. The Rakha Christian Boys' School, is mainly for the boys of our native Christians, and for the orphan boys, of whom we have 22; but it is open also for others, and a good many come from Futtehgurh, and the villages around. The number on the roll is 80—the average attendance about 64. Of the 80, 52 are Christians, and the others Hindoos and Mohammedans. The whole school is divided into six classes. The first four, besides Urdu and Hindi, study English also; and the last two, consisting chiefly of the orphans, only Urdu and Hindi.

The progress of the classes, during the year, has been satisfactory.

The head teacher of this school is Baboo Ishwari Das. He is assisted by two other Christian teachers—one for Hindi and one for Urdu. There are also three monitors, and a blind man, who teaches the Catechism and hymns to the younger children. All the teachers are Christians. I consider myself happy in having one so faithful and capable as the Baboo is, to take the main charge of the school.

The school is undoubtedly one of great importance to our people, and to the mission. It would be a poor policy to allow the children of our native Christians to grow up without giving them the best advantages in our power.

2. The Rakha Christian Girls' School, is composed entirely of the girls of our people, and a few orphan girls. The number is 35. The teachers are Mulchand, Sarah and Jesse—all Christians. It is divided into four classes. . . . All the girls learn the Catechisms—either large or small—and hymns, as well as to attend to sewing and knitting. The course of study, if not extensive, partakes largely of the religious element. It will be also manifest that our object is to give them some knowledge of things which they need to know, in their own language, rather than attempt a knowledge of English, which could at best be only a mere smattering, insufficient to give them any true knowledge, and rendering them ridiculous, as well as unfitting them for their proper sphere.

As to the importance of this school, the same remark may be repeated that was made in the case of the boys' school. It is a matter of prime moment that the children of our Christian people should not be neglected.

[The report next gives an account of a bazar girls' school, and of a village girls' school, containing together 43 scholars, and taught by native Christian teachers; and also of four village boys' schools, which are supported by a Hindu prince now in England; these four schools are attended by 95 scholars. Much Christian truth is taught in connection with the lessons of all these primary schools.]

Church and Schools at Burpur.

At the Burpur branch of the Futtehgurh station, the Rev. Messrs. J. F. Ullmann and R. S. Fullerton and their wives, and several native Christian assistants carried on the missionary work last year. Mr. Ullmann's report was published in the last issue of the Record. Mr. Fullerton's report, which is now inserted, completes the narrative of the year's labour. It is with regret that we find it necessary to omit some parts of it, on account of our limited space. The sub-station of Burpur is near the city of Furrukhabad, in which most of the work of these brethren is conducted.

Preaching Services—The Case of one who is not a Stony-ground Hearer.

Two regular services have been conducted on the Sabbath, and two other on other days of the week, during the year. Our Sabbath morning service is held in the building occupied by the high-school, for the benefit of the teachers and pupils, but is attended by as many of our native brethren as are able to be present. The number of our hearers, at this service, is about the same as in former years.

The sin and folly of idolatry, the necessity of repentance and of faith in Jesus Christ, are the subjects upon which we have mainly dwelt. And although we have not spared the systems of religion to which most of our hearers adhere, we have always received a respectful hearing, and in the case of some of our hearers we have been encouraged to hope that they were not stony-ground hearers. One of these is a young man of great promise, who was connected with the school, first as a pupil and afterwards as a monitor, for several years.

His convictions, some months since, were very deep, and he more than once told us that he was almost persuaded to be a Christian. When his friends learned the state of his mind, they insisted on his leaving, not only the school, but the station also; and through the influence of some of the leading men in the city, they secured a situation for him in a large place some thirty miles off.

They hoped by this means to place him beyond the reach of our influence, but while yielding to their wishes, so far as leaving the station was concerned, he was determined not to go alone. He bought a Bible of us and paid for it, and took it with him as his companion in his new home. He has since visited us several times, and has asked us for grants of books and tracts for himself and others,—which have not been withheld. He says that he is at heart a Christian, and that he will ere long openly embrace Christianity. But we have so often been disappointed in such cases, that we have our fears that he may never do so. Still we hope and believe that he will be the means of doing good wherever he goes. A Hindu may say what he pleases against his religion as long as he outwardly adheres to it, and we have reason to believe that his influence, so far as it goes, is in favor of Christianity. At our last interview he asked us to send a catechist to live in the place where he resides, and promised to exert his influence in his favour, and to do all in his power to aid him in the discharge of his duty.

The Case of Another Hearer.

Another hearer who regularly attended this service for two or three years, led us to hope during last summer that he would, at an early day, renounce Hinduism and become a Christian. He read our books, attended our services, associated with our people, and went so far as to eat with them in private, and we sometimes felt that he was not far from the kingdom of heaven. He at last asked us to allow him to take his wife and go to Mynpoorie for the purpose of being baptized, as he feared the opposition of his friends and neighbours in the city. To this we consented, and he soon after left for that place; but shortly returned, saying that his friends had waylaid him the night he left, and brought him back, and that they had taken his wife from him and refused to let him have her again. He subsequently entered suit against them, but could prove nothing, and consequently lost his case. Since then he has not attended any of our services, and seems to avoid us. Why he does so, we are at a loss to know, and our confidence in him is much shaken. His friends say that he was actuated in what he did by a desire to extort money from them, hoping that they would pay him handsomely for remaining a Hindu, and it may be that he was influenced by improper motives in doing what he did, but we cannot believe that such was the case. We are, upon the whole, inclined to think that he had not counted the cost of becoming a Christian, and that when he came to face the difficulties in the way, his heart failed him. The missionary is in this way often disappointed and discouraged, and turning to his little band of native brethren is ready to ask, "Will ye also go away?" But though cast down, he is never in despair, for he knows that the barren mountain top and the streets of the populous city, beaten hard by a thousand passing feet, shall in due time yield their fruit.

Second Service—Church Members—Evening Service.

Our second service on the Sabbath is held in another part of the city, and is attended principally by native Christians, and the families of the missionaries, though it is open to all, and is attended by some of the Hindus and Mohammedans living in that quarter.

The number of native Christians, old and young, connected with the congregation is 46. Of these 26 are communicants, nine of whom were received during the year—six from other churches, and three upon the confession of their faith.

The latter are: Margaret, a daughter of James, catechist; Eshrie, a son of Hera Sal, reader, and George, a son of one of the other members of the church.

We have, we are sorry to say, admitted none from the heathen since our last report was written, but we are cheered to see the children of our little church, as they arrive at years of maturity, come forward and acknowledge the God of their fathers as their God. Two of our members, a man and his wife, were suspended from the communion of the church, for conduct unbecoming the character of a Christian, but both were, after some months, restored,—having confessed their fault and manifested their sorrow for having committed it. Three children have been baptized. There have been several cases of serious illness among us, but none of our number have been removed by death.

Our Wednesday and Thursday evening services, held, one in the city and the other at our residence outside of its walls, have been well attended, and the one falling on the first Wednesday of the month, has been observed as a concert for prayer for the conversion of the world.

Schools.

[An account is next given of the schools. Three of these are bazar or common day-schools, containing in all 105 boys. The high-school has 350 pupils on the roll; of these 156 are in the English department, 95 in Urdu, and 99 in Hindi. In addition to the usual studies, Mr. Fullerton says:]

The Bible and the catechism are taught in all the classes. Many of our pupils understand Christianity as a theory, and often compare it with their own system, which they admit to be full of error. But none of them have during the year embraced it. This we deeply regret, but knowing that even a grain of mustard seed, which is for a time lost in the earth, "becometh a tree so that the birds of the air come and lodge in the branches thereof," we are encouraged to hope that the labour and money expended on this school have not been expended in vain.

Recapitulation.

Number of Christians connected with the city congregation, exclusive of the missionaries and their families, 46. Including the latter, 56. Received from other churches, 6. Received on confession of their faith, 3. Children baptized, 3. Suspended, 2. Restored, 2. Present number of communicants, exclusive of missionaries, 26. Including the latter 30.

CORISCO MISSION—AFRICA.

A General View of its Progress in the year ending September 30, 1862.

In the kind providence of God we are permitted to report another year of missionary labour at Corisco. We would record our gratitude to the Giver of every good for the degree of health which we have enjoyed during the year; we have had no serious case of illness among us, and of the labourers on the ground not one has been laid aside during the year, or kept from duty on a single Sabbath from indisposition. At the same time that we speak of the health of the mission in this favourable manner, we would have it remembered that we are in a sickly climate, in which a white labourer never feels the same vigour, and is never able to perform the same amount of mental or physical labour, which he can do in a temperate climate. Our good health is to be understood always as good health for Africa, and which is perfectly compatible with lassitude and languor, and frequent feverish feelings. We would also express our gratitude for the unity of council, and harmony of feeling, and for the brotherly love which have abounded in our mission during the year.

Just as our year closed, we enjoyed the agreeable episode of a marriage in our little mission community. On the 17th of September, Mr. Nassau and Miss Latta were united in wedlock. For the year now closing, their labours are reported separately—in future reports of our mission, in many of which we trust they will be spared to join, their reports will be combined.

The following brief notices will show the distribution of our forces during the year.

Just at the commencement of our mission year, Dr. Loomis, on account of impaired health, and Mrs. Ogden, with her young babe, sailed for America. In May, Mr. De Heer and Mr. Clemens also sailed. The former needed much to recruit his exhausted energies, after a residence of over six years in this climate; the latter, whose wife had preceded him to America over two years, hoped speedily to return, accompanied by her, after making arrangements to leave their child in America. [The sad news of Mr. Clemens' death had not reached Corisco when this report was written.—Ed.]

The departure of these brethren left our force on the ground much weakened—too weak to carry on the work we have in hand efficiently. Since their departure, Mr. Clark has occupied the station at Alongo alone; and the Ugobi station, made vacant by Mr. De Heer's absence, has been kept up by Andeke. The Sabbath services have been usually conducted by Mr. Nassau, but the superintendence of the boarding-school, and conducting the evening meetings, have devolved on Andeke. He has been assisted in teaching by Endombanene, a young man formerly a scholar in the school. The mission had appointed Andeke to Cape Esterias, should the way be clear for his going, as you have been previously informed, but the departure of Mr. De Heer made necessary this change in our plans.

At Evangasimba there has been no change made from the appointments at the beginning of the year. Here the principal part of the business of the mission is transacted. Here our communion services, which are usually seasons of much interest, are held quarterly, and from this station medicines are dispensed; and since the arrival of Dr. Nassau, they are dispensed from both the houses connected with the station. At Itândâluku, the new buildings erected for the girls' school, Mr. Nassau has had charge of the general affairs of the place, assisting also in the school. Miss Latta has had the principal oversight of the girls, and Mrs. McQueen of the domestic affairs, assisting also when necessary with the girls.

As has been our custom in years past, each labourer reports his own part of the labours of the mission for the year. We have thought that this plan would give you a fuller view of the work of each labourer, and also of each department of our work.

Labourers at Evangasimba.—Rev. James L. Mackey and his wife, Rev. R. Hamill Nassau, M. D., Mrs. Georgiana M. McQueen, Miss Mary C. Latta; Ubengi, teacher of day-school and interpreter; Ibolo, teacher of girls, part of the year, and interpreter.

Labourers at Ugobi.—Rev. Cornelius De Heer part of the year; Andeke, licentiate, after Mr. De Heer's absence; Andombanene, teacher.

Labourers at Alongo.—Rev. William Clemens, part of the year, Rev. Walter N. Clark. Makendenge, teacher.

Out-stations.—Ilobi. Ibia, licentiate; Bombango, teacher.

In the Kombe Tribe:—Hanje. Belevi, Scripture reader part of the year; Iumba and Ume, Scripture readers.

In the Mbiko Tribe:—Ukaka. Ekela, Scripture reader.

Statistics.—Whole number of church members on the roll, end of the year, 74. Admitted during the year, 13. Excommunicated, 8. Suspended, 4. Children baptized, 3. Adults baptized, 13. Scholars in Sabbath-schools, 160. Boarding scholars in the schools, 91—60 boys, 31 girls. Day scholars, nearly all irregular, 50. Adults receiving instruction at stations, not included as boarders, 10.

MISCELLANY.

HOW THINGS ARE GOING IN BELGIUM.

Belgium has had a good constitutional government, with a wise Protestant king at the head of it, for nearly thirty-three years. Freedom of speech, freedom of the press, and freedom of religion have existed during this period in that little kingdom of four millions and a half of people, who were more universally Romanists than any other nation in Europe, save those of Spain and Portugal, at the epoch of the Revolution of 1830, which put Leopold on the throne. And what has been the effect of all this upon the interests of Rome in that country, which for ages was one of the most priest-ridden in all the world? It has been just this: The intelligent classes have been gradually opening their eyes to the ignorance, bigotry, and domineering spirit of the hierarchy, and have begun to withdraw their necks from a yoke which they long felt to be too heavy to bear. It has contributed to this result, no doubt, that Protestantism has been gradually gaining ground the while, through the distribution of the Scriptures and the preaching of the evangelists and ministers of the gospel.

One of the most remarkable manifestations of this disposition on the part of certain classes in Belgium to cast off the spiritual despotism of Rome, is seen in the formation of associations or societies of men, who agree to call in no priest on their death-beds to administer the sacraments of the Roman Catholic church. They even further oppose the calling in, on the part of their families, of priests to perform the funeral services at their burial. In many places these societies have burying-grounds of their own, into which they will not allow a priest to set his foot for the purpose of performing a service for the dead. This is carrying their hatred of the vile practices of the priests at the death-beds of the people to a great length; and yet something of the sort seemed necessary to disenthral the laity from the bondage of Rome, and sustain them in their efforts to be free against the power of the priesthood.

The late M. Verhægen of Brussels, one of the richest men in Belgium, who had held the highest offices in the State, and was the founder of the University of Brussels, was a member of one of these societies, and although forty thousand people attended his funeral, among whom were Ministers of the King, Senators, Representatives, Judges, and the most eminent of the citizens, there was no funeral service according to the Roman Catholic church. And this was in accordance with the strict injunction of the deceased. It is easy to see how great must be the influence of such an example upon the people. Of course the Romish hierarchy is enraged at all these things; but instead of mending their ways and their manners, so as to secure the intelligent and sincere respect which is due to the true church of Christ, they betake themselves to their old practice of abusing, of cursing, and blasphemy. It is by her perversion of Christianity, by her worldliness, her avarice, the worthless conduct of her priests, her hostility to every thing like true liberty, civil and religious, that Rome has lost the vast influence she once had in France, and is now losing her power in Belgium, in Italy, in Mexico, in the United States of Colombia, and in Brazil.—Christian World.

SCOTCH FREE CHURCH MISSION AT CALCUTTA.

The Free Church Record contains a comprehensive view of the work at Calcutta, from the pen of Dr. Duff. On the rolls of the institution, there are not fewer than 1530, of which 183 belong to the higher or college department. The daily attendance is from one-fifth to one-fourth less than this number, the rest being detained by sickness, and other necessary causes. In all the classes, from the highest to the lowest, scriptural knowledge is imparted. When the boys are able to read, the Bible is put into their hands, and daily taught by a Christian teacher or catechist. In the higher classes, works on the evidences, and on Systematic Theology, are successively added. Such works as those of Horne, McIlvaine, Thompson, Tulloch, Edwards, Chalmers, &c., have been studied with accompanying prelections.

Dr. Duff states, that at all the country stations, as well as in Calcutta, the gospel is directly preached, through the medium of the vernacular, to the adult population. The gospel is preached in scores of villages, and listened to by thousands (in the aggregate) of villagers.

MISSIONS IN INDIA.

The Bombay Guardian compares the statistics of missions in 1861 with those of 1851, collected by Dr. Mullens:

	1851.	1861.
Missionaries,	363	418
Churches,	366	890
Communicants,	14,711	21,252
Native Christians,	91,295	118,893
Boys in Schools,	87,062	54,888
Girls in Schools,	11,193	14,723

According to the rate of advance exhibited by these statistics, the native church might be expected to double itself every twenty-five years; the native Christian body, about three times in a century. The number of boys at school is believed to be much under-estimated.

A LETTER FROM COLUMBUS, KY.

The following letter was addressed to the District Superintendent of Colportage, who has, during the past year, been labouring among our soldiers and prisoners in the valley of the Mississippi. Its statements are such as should encourage us, and stimulate us to greater efforts. We hope our churches and Sabbath-schools will not forget this great work of the Board—now more encouraging and urgent than ever, in view of the large number of fresh troops about to be called into the field.

Columbus, Ky.

Dear Brother—Your kind letter arrived the day after I left home for Presbytery, which accounts for my delay in answering it. We had a most interesting meeting of Presbytery. Inquiry was made as to what our Board of Publication is doing for our soldiers, and a desire was expressed by some that Presbytery should apply for books, as the members present nearly all needed them. I stated to Presbytery that in the regiments which I had visited, I had found more books of our Board than of all other denominations. And not a book is given that does not link the soldier closer to the Presbyterian church. These books are read with more reflection by soldiers than by any other class. I frequently hear sick and dying soldiers speak of the impressions made on their minds by some good book. One dying soldier the other day, who died, I trust, a child of God, ascribed his awakening to a little book given him by a man in company with myself, and, from the circumstances, I knew that you were the man who gave the book. It is mostly in hospitals, and when the soldier is sick or wounded, that I find out the value of previous efforts, and see, on the moral soil, the same effect from your distributions that I have witnessed on the natural soil where the planter has scattered his fertilizers. Nor is there now a man who dare accuse you of sectarian efforts, who has seen, as I have, the need of such books to preserve from demoralization, and lead sinners to Christ Jesus.

I have not yet received the box of the publications of our Board which you promised to send me. I hope there will be a sprinkling of German publications. The Pocket (Hymn) Book is valuable, and is greatly sought for by Methodist chaplains, and all others, and is almost entirely used when it can be obtained.

May God long spare your life and health for the great work in which you are engaged.

A WORD FROM NORTHERN INDIA.

Some months ago, on application of the missionary brethren at Lahor, in Northern India, the Board granted them a lot of electrotype castings for use in illustrating their publications in that far-off land. The following acknowledgment of this grant has lately been received.

Sabathu, April 3d, 1863.

My Dear Dr. Schenck.

It was made my agreeable duty, at the late meeting of our mission at Lahor, in January, to write to the Board of Publication, and express the thanks of the missions for the kind present of picture castings, which it was my privilege to receive in their behalf, for the use of the mission press. Will you be pleased, as the organ of the Board, to convey to them the expression of this sentiment on the part of the mission. These plates constitute an important addition to our working machinery at Lodiana; and through them our books are beginning to be quite extensively illustrated. The natives, many of them, are capable of taking an interest in, and appreciating this kind of thing, much the same as we do, and not merely as children; and our books are thus rendered more attractive to them.

The department of publication is decidedly on the advance in this part of the world. We had a Panjab Bible and Tract Society established the other day, through the instrumentality of the Missionary conference held at Lahor, (representing many missionary bodies,) just before the annual meeting of our mission. There had long ago been a Calcutta auxiliary to the British and Foreign Bible Society, and of late years one for the upper provinces. Now we have one for the Panjab, the special field of our mission—a field shared with us by the Church of England missions, Church of Scotland missions, and some others.

We mourn, with our dear friends at home, the fearful judgments under which our beloved country is suffering; wondering, the while, that the work here is not more affected than it is in consequence. But it may be that we shall yet feel it sorely. Our comfort still must be, that the Lord cares for and loves his own cause far better than we can, and so from amid these awful and heart-rending scenes new glories for Zion must arise.

I remain, Rev. and dear brother, in Christian bonds, very sincerely yours,

LEVI JANVIER.

COLPORTAGE IN IOWA.

——, Iowa, April 1, 1863.

It now becomes my duty to send you an account of another three months' labour under your care. This period has been spent mostly in C—— and J—— counties—principally in the former. In that county there is, I believe, no organization of our church at present, and I have found but few Presbyterian families within its bounds. I mention this to show what must naturally be the result, as they are generally the most intelligent part of the community. So you may justly conclude that religious knowledge is very limited. The people, not being accustomed to the visits of a colporteur, look upon his work as having some selfish end in view, and they regard him as without any desire to better their condition, till his conduct convinces them of their errors. With all these difficulties in the way, and many more, known only to those who see and hear them, any one must naturally conclude that the work of a colporteur in such a field is very laborious, and one requiring constant prayer and great perseverance, that he may prove a faithful and useful labourer in the Master's vineyard.

Though all these difficulties and prejudices are to be contended with, your colporteur is not discouraged. There are abundant tokens of success, and many evidences of usefulness, witnessed by him almost daily, to encourage him to persevere with greater energy among such a class of people as I have attempted to describe. I have been labouring for some time, and not without evidence of success.

During the last three months I have scattered the publications of our Board in more than four hundred and eighty families. I keep on hand a good supply of tracts for gratuitous distribution, and, as I go from house to house, I always leave some tracts where I cannot leave a book; thus, I hope, spreading light and knowledge along the path I travel. From the other portions of my field, to which I now go, I hope to be able to report more favourably. W. J.

LETTER FROM A CHAPLAIN.

Camp near Upton's Hill, Va.

Dr. Schenck:

Dear Sir—Permit me to acknowledge the receipt of tracts, &c., so kindly forwarded by the Board. The inquiry contained in your letter I cannot definitely answer. Still, it would assure your own heart, in the great work of saving souls by this agency, and it would give increased energy to the efforts of the church, could they see with what earnestness the soldiers seize these messengers of truth and salvation. We have conversions in our regiment. Backsliders have been reclaimed, and others have faithfully promised to examine the great question, "What must I do to be saved?" We have need of every appliance to help forward this great work of humanity and of God. No doubt you are labouring shoulder to shoulder in this important field with kindred associations. We constantly need these important helps. To-day I could distribute threefold the amount you forwarded some time since. We are constrained to say, "What are these among so many?" Yesterday I distributed thousands of pages, and only visited four companies of our regiment, now sadly reduced. Can you send me more small books, tracts,—the small children's paper published by the Board, &c. A newspaper is even more inviting than a tract. I could circulate hundreds—yes, thousands.

W. A.,
Chaplain 8th Reg't P. R. C.

A GOOD EXAMPLE.

At Toledo, a small town in the interior of of Iowa, a group of little girls are accustomed to meet once a fortnight at the house of the pastor of the Presbyterian church, and spend an hour in singing and receiving instruction from his wife and efficient helpmeet, on various religious subjects. At these little gatherings, matters of benevolence, and our obligations to do good as we have opportunity, are not forgotten. This Juvenile Mite Society has just forwarded its third liberal donation, within the last twelve months, to aid our Board of Publication in its great work of giving religious reading to our soldiers in camps and hospitals, and thus leading them to Christ. Surely these dear children will have their reward. Will not many imitate their example?

ONE TRACT.

A young mountaineer chief in Burmah, when two hundred and fifty miles from his own home, was taught to read by a missionary's wife. The little tract she used in teaching him caused the scales to fall from his eyes, and showed him the way to Jesus. He went back to his mountain home a converted man. A little tract saved him! When he reached home he told the story of Jesus, which he had learned from the tract, to his people. Crowds flocked to hear him speak. The Holy Ghost was with him, and in one year one thousand five hundred souls were hopefully saved—saved as the result of the influence of one little tract. Scatter tracts! Scatter tracts! Who can tell but your hand may give a tract that shall be the means of saving many a soul? God does his great things by little agencies. Work, then, work! The time is short.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

SAILORS' SERIES. No. I. Price 25 cents.

SAILORS' SERIES. No. II. Price 25 cents.

These are two packages, containing 17 tracts each, prepared with especial reference to the benefit of sailors. Some of them are doctrinal, some are hortatory, but the larger part are narrative. They are admirably adapted to arrest the attention of "them that go down to the sea in ships," and to benefit their souls. We trust that God's people will cause them to be scattered by thousands among the sailors.

THIRD ANNUAL CIRCULAR.

St. Louis, June 10, 1863.

To the Session of —— Presbyterian Church.

Dear Brethren—The last three General Assemblies set apart the first Sabbath of July as the time for the annual collection in aid of Church Extension, in all our churches that have no other fixed time for the purpose. In obedience to their requirements, allow us to call your attention to the wants of our five hundred houseless churches. The single point we desire now to urge, is their need of increased aid. This need arises partly from the increased cost of building. The applications received last year show a rise of fifty per cent. in the cost of labour and materials, while those received thus far this year indicate a still greater advance. This need of increased aid arises further from the ravages of war. In the North-west, where most of our houseless churches are, the number of volunteers has been immense. This drain has fallen heavily on our feeble churches, nearly all of whom have sent forth many of their best members and supporters, and lost not a few by disease and in battle. One result is, that an unusual number of our houseless churches seem ready to perish. With no sanctuary to shelter them, and form a nucleus about which to cluster, they seem ready to sink under the reflex tide of demoralization war ever engenders. As a last earthly hope for continued life, they are striving for a sanctuary. Another result is, that they cannot build with the amount of aid the Board has hitherto been enabled to give. Thus far our grants, payable when they complete the house free from debt, have averaged about one-eighth of the cost of the structure. With this assistance our enfeebled flocks cannot now get through, and therefore hesitate to begin. From the facts before us, we judge that fully one hundred houseless churches to-day await the decision of the question whether enlarged aid shall be given, as a question of life or death. Shall they live or shall they die? The answer rests in part with you, and we await your response at the appointed time as your messengers of joy or sorrow to your struggling brethren.

Permit us to add, that for the present at least, arrangements have been made by which the officers of the Board serve without charge, and your contributions, if sent to David Keith, Treasurer, St. Louis, Missouri, or to any of our Receiving Agents, will go undiminished to needy churches.

Praying that the grace of God may abound to you, I remain, in behalf of the Board, yours fraternally,

H. I. Coe, Secretary.

ACTION OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF 1863 ON THE REPORT OF THE BOARD OF CHURCH EXTENSION.

The Moderator appointed as the Standing Committee on the Report of the Board, the following persons, viz.

Ministers—J. M. Lowrie, D. D., J. Corey, R. S. Manning, G. P. Hays, J. F. Jennison.

Ruling Elders—Johnson Harvey, Robert Graham, William W. Pinneo, A. Hall.

On Saturday, May 23d, this Committee reported, and their report was unanimously adopted by the Assembly, and is as follows, viz.

1. We recommend that the Assembly approve of the minutes of the Board as kept by the Secretary, and that the report also be approved and published as usual.

2. We call attention to the facts that more than two-thirds of our churches are still entirely delinquent in contributing to the funds of this Board; that the small amounts given—less than ten churches reaching the sum of $100—indicate that the merits of the cause are too little laid before our churches; and, that the increased cost of building makes larger contributions more important than before. We recommend, therefore, that the Presbyteries be directed to inquire at their fall meetings what churches have taken the collection enjoined by the Assembly for July, on behalf of the Board of Church Extension, and to urge a more general attention hereafter to the wants of this Board.

3. The Committee are gratified to learn that the Board of Church Extension, in view of the difficulties of the times, has made special efforts to conduct their work economically, and express the assurance that if the churches knew how carefully their contributions are applied to the purposes of the Board, and how needy are many of the recipients of their benefactions, this knowledge would result in a great increase of the Board's funds.

4. The Committee would further call attention to the efforts, so remarkably simultaneous—often so liberal and so generally successful—which have lately been made all over the land for the payment of church debts; would express their gratitude to God for his special favour upon these efforts; would recognise that prayer has had a most special and delightful agency in leading to these results, and would express the hope that other churches, labouring under such disadvantage as a church debt, may be encouraged to endeavour to throw off the incumbrance. This would certainly tend to the comfort of all these churches, and prepare them to give more efficient aid to others in less favoured circumstances than themselves. At what less should the Presbyterian church aim than a house of worship for every organized church in the land, and no house indebted to the community around it for anything else but love?

PAYING CHURCH DEBTS.

A remit-ting fever has seized the churches; they are determined to remit the money they owe to their creditors, and we hope the epidemic will spread, till every church pays its debts, and is able to worship in a house that is the Lord's only.

The Broadway Tabernacle church, in New York, recently undertook to raise $25,000 toward their debt, and having subscribed $18,000, the pastor, the Rev. Dr. J. P. Thompson, at the close of his sermon Sunday morning, made a brief statement, and asked for the remainder. It was raised on the spot. On Tuesday evening the congregation had a congratulatory meeting, at which the Rev. Dr. Buddington assisted, when he surprised the pastor, by presenting him, in the name of the people, with $1500.

The congregation of the Rev. Dr. Bellows, in the same good work, recently met, and having received a legacy of $10,000, left by Mr. Goodhue, they also received from M. H. Grinnell, Esq., the amount of their indebtedness to him, the sum of $23,000. They then subscribed $16,000, making $49,000.

The Methodist church, (St. Paul's) the Rev. Mr. Ridgeway, met last Friday evening, and raised $30,000 toward their debt, Daniel Drew, Esq., giving $10,000.

Churches in Newark, New Jersey, and in other places, are successfully making efforts in the same direction.—New York Observer.

TO ANY OF THE

BOARDS OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

The State Laws differ so much that no one form will answer in all the States, but in every case it is essential to give the RIGHT CORPORATE NAME.

The oldest Board was originally called the Board of Missions, but is now incorporated under the laws of Pennsylvania under the title of "The Trustees of the Board of Domestic Missions of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

The Board of Foreign Missions is incorporated under the laws of New York, under the style of "The Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

The Board of Publication is incorporated under the laws of Pennsylvania under the style of "The Trustees of the Presbyterian Board of Publication."

The Board of Church Extension of the General Assembly is not incorporated, but the following form of bequest, it is supposed, would be valid.

I bequeath to my executors the sum of ——— dollars, in trust, to pay over the same in ——— after my decease, to the person who, when the same shall be payable shall act as Treasurer of the Board of Church Extension of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, located in the City of St. Louis, Missouri, to be applied to the uses and purposes of said Board, and under its directions, and the receipt of the said Treasurer shall be a full and legal acquittance of my said executors for the same.

When real estate or other property is given, let it be particularly described.

THE

OF THE

Presbyterian Church in the United States of America.

VOLUME XIII. No. 7.—Extra. | PHILADELPHIA, JULY, 1863. | PRICE PER YEAR, Fifty Cents.

TWENTY-SIXTH ANNUAL REPORT.

The Board of Foreign Missions have received from the Executive Committee a Report of the Foreign Missionary work, as conducted by them during the last year. The Report has been considered and approved by the Board, and it is now submitted to the General Assembly.

They would also report the death of two respected members of their body, the Rev. Robert Steel, D. D., and the Rev. John McDowell, D. D.

New York, May 4, 1863.

REPORT OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

The Executive Committee lay before the Board of Foreign Missions the following report of the missionary work under their charge for the year ending April 30, 1863.

FINANCES.

The Receipts from all sources have been $188,458 93; the Expenditures, $188,121 95; leaving a balance in the Treasury of the Board of $336 98. For particulars of these accounts reference is made to the report of the Treasurer, which is herewith appended.

The special embarrassment of the year in the financial matters of the Board has been the unprecedented rise of exchange on foreign remittances. This has greatly increased the cost of remitting funds for the support of the missions, and it threatened great injury to the missionary cause. Almost the only thing that relieved its serious aspect was the fact, that it was a matter entirely beyond the control of the Committee. It was to be regarded, indeed, as ordered or permitted by God, and doubtless for wise and gracious purposes—especially for the trial of the faith of his people. The Committee adopted timely measures to apprize the churches of this great peril, and they are thankful to report most liberal contributions from many churches and individual donors. These have contributed greatly to relieve the treasury from embarrassment. It is still necessary, however, to ask particular attention to this subject. The funds remitted for the support of the missions by Bills of Exchange may be placed in two classes, one consisting of bills matured during the year, and the other of bills falling due at various dates within the next few months. On the former, no less than $26,500 were paid for exchange above what would have been required on the same funds a year ago. As to the bills not yet matured, the Committee have funds in the treasury sufficient to pay them when they become due, at the rate of par; but a sum of not less than $24,000 will have to be paid for exchange on these bills, should the present rate, April 27th, still rule to the 1st of next October. This sum of $24,000 is not included in the amount reported by the Treasurer as remitted. The rate of exchange has for some time been subject to great changes, and it is difficult to form an opinion of its course hereafter. It may rise much higher, or it may greatly decline. In either case these bills must be paid when they mature. If the rate should continue unfavorable, the cost of exchange on the bills already sent out but not yet matured will prove a heavy legacy of debt from this year, to be borne by the next. The Committee are anxious that the attention of the churches should be directed to the financial situation of the Board, as affected so seriously by this matter. They may add that the missions are all placed on carefully restricted estimates for their expenditures; and that bills of exchange for the support of the missions in the East have been sent out as heretofore, as the best means of transmitting funds for their support.

Liberal donations have been received from European friends in India, to be expended in aid of the missions in that country, for which the Committee would make grateful acknowledgments to the respected donors. A considerable part of these donations was intended to supply deficiencies in the support of those missions, the limited income of the Board not furnishing what was needed.

The amount received from the Government on account of the loss of property in the Southwestern Indian Missions, which is referred to elsewhere, was a welcome addition to the means of defraying the unusual expenses of the year.

The Fund for a Professorship in the Waldensian Theological School has received an increase of $800, through the liberality of one of the clerical friends of the Board. This Fund now amounts to $15,300, and the Fund for the children of missionaries to $12,820. The Interest received on account of these Funds, has been expended for their purposes respectively.

PUBLICATIONS.

The Foreign Missionary has a monthly circulation of 3,250 copies; and the small newspaper of the same title, made up from the pamphlet edition, and furnished free to Sunday-Schools contributing regularly to the treasury of the Board, a copy to the children of each family, circulates 28,500 copies each month. The Record, published for all the Boards by the Board of Publication, will be reported by its publishers. The number of pages occupied by the Board, both in the Record and the Foreign Missionary, was reduced on account of the enhanced cost of paper. The last Annual Report was published as heretofore, in two editions, 3,050 as a pamphlet, and 8,250 as an extra number of the Record.

MISSIONARIES AND ASSISTANT MISSIONARIES SENT OUT.

[Four ministers of the gospel, three of them with their wives, and three female teachers were sent forth. Their names will appear in connection with their respective missions.]

UNDER APPOINTMENT AS MISSIONARIES.

Of the brethren referred to in the report of last year as having been appointed as missionaries, three have relinquished the expectation of going out on account of the health of those connected with them; three are not yet ready to go; three have concluded to labour in the ministry at home, as they could not conveniently wait until the Board could send them out; three, whose names are given above, have embarked for different fields of labour; and one is expecting to embark in a few weeks. Four brethren were appointed as missionaries during this year, one of whom will not finish his course of theological preparation until next year.

The number now under appointment is eight,—of whom two will not finish their theological preparation until next year; two will probably embark at an early day; and four could probably go forth without much delay, if the Board had funds with which to send them out.

The Committee have felt much sympathy with those amongst these brethren, who have been kept for some time unavoidably in suspense in regard to their being sent forth. In all cases, for the last two years, appointments to missionary service have been made on the express condition of the Board's having the means of sending out more labourers. It is a reason of thankfulness that so many approved persons still offer themselves for this work. It is to be regarded by the churches as an answer to their prayers, and as an incentive to increased liberality in their gifts.

Missions among Indian Tribes.

CHIPPEWA AND OTTAWA MISSION.

Grand Traverse.—Rev. Peter Dougherty and Mrs. Dougherty; Mr. George Craker, farmer, and Mrs. Craker; Miss M. E. Gibson, and Miss Susan Dougherty, teachers; Mrs. Ann Morgan, and Miss Louisa Porter, assistants.

Little Traverse.—Mr. Andrew Porter and Mrs. Porter; Miss Ann Porter, teacher; Mr. Rodd, interpreter.

The health of Miss C. A. Gibson failed during the last year, and with much regret to herself and all her associates she was obliged to leave the mission. Miss Susan Dougherty, with the consent of all concerned, has taken the place of Miss Henrietta Dougherty.

Grand Traverse.—No important changes have taken place in the missionary work during the year. The church at Grand Traverse consists of forty members, and no additions were reported last year. The congregation varies from eighty to one hundred. The members of the church conduct themselves well, and the congregation is orderly and attentive. The regular religious services have been continued as usual. Preaching on the Sabbath morning and afternoon has been continued. Sabbath school, and prayer-meetings on Friday, and, on Wednesday, a prayer-meeting by the leading members have been continued.

The school consists of twenty-five scholars—eleven girls, and fourteen boys. The usual instruction has been given to them when in the school, and much care is taken to instruct them in laboring, according to their ages and sex, so as to make them industrious members of the community. These Indians have, each family, a farm of three hundred acres from the government, in payment of lands sold by them to the United States. The training of the school makes them good and industrious farmers and farmers' wives. Besides the habits of industry acquired, they receive a common education in learning to read and write, with the knowledge of arithmetic, and an outline of geography, and with these a thorough knowledge of the great truths of religion, in its most simple and practical form.

The farm under the management of Mr. Craker has been very productive, the season has been favorable, and the produce of the arm abundant.

Little Traverse.—This station, also known as Bear River, is fifty miles from Grand Traverse. The church as stated in the last annual report consisted of twenty-one members. Two have been added during the year. The church members, for the most part, in their walk and conduct, act consistently with their profession. The settlement is small, and the Indians for the most part are poor, they are however living on their own farms, and are slowly improving them. Their religious instruction, by Mr. Porter, who speaks their language, is carefully attended to on the Sabbath by reading and explaining portions of the Bible, singing and prayers. The Sabbath-School takes up part of the day, in which the children are much interested. Some of the parents also attend and are glad to receive instruction. A prayer-meeting is held once a week.

The average attendance at the school is twenty-eight. The children live with their parents. At noon they receive their dinner at the school-house. Like other children some of them learn with great facility, others with more difficulty. Their advantages are not of course as good as those enjoyed by scholars in a boarding-school; but still, though it takes longer time, they obtain a common education, which will be a great benefit to them in after life.

This school is supported in part by the school funds of the tribes, so that the expense to the Board is comparatively small. The agency of the Mission has been much blessed. The church, though few in number, is still a light shining in a dark place. Without the school these children would have grown up in the darkest ignorance, instead of being, when they leave the school, intelligent members of the community.

INDIAN ORPHAN INSTITUTE.

Highland.—Rev S. M. Irvin and Mrs. Irvin; Mr. James Williams, farmer, and Mrs. Williams; Miss A. M. Turner and Miss E. Diament, teachers; Mrs. R. R. McCreary, assistant.

Miss Patterson, after three years' faithful and efficient labors as a teacher, at her own request, was released from her connection with the school in September. She carried with her the best wishes and sincere regards of the Executive Committee. Miss Turner reached the mission in May, and Miss Diament in September. Both are well qualified and efficient teachers, and they were for some time employed as teachers among the Southern Indians.

For two years the superintendence of the school and management of the farm were under the care of Mr. Williams. The school during this period was conducted by two female teachers, though a part of the time there was but one female teacher. During this time Mr. Williams conducted the affairs of the institution, including the farm, with much ability and untiring energy. But the labour and the responsibility were too much for one man, and it was with much satisfaction that in January last the Rev. S. M. Irvin and Mrs. Irvin and Mrs. McCreary were again obtained for the institution. Besides his other labors, Mr. Irvin will be able to visit the Iowas and Sacs on their reservation. To both these tribes he is well known, and by the Iowas, whose language he speaks, he is much esteemed.

Religious Exercises.—For two years past there was regular preaching at Highland, two miles from the mission, at which the scholars and teacher attended, when the weather was favorable. Since Mr. Irvin's return their exercises are as follows:

Besides regular family worship, morning and evening, they have singing and prayer with the children before they retire to rest. Prayer-meeting on Wednesday evening. On the Sabbath, preaching in the mission chapel at 11 A. M., Sabbath-school at 3 P. M., and a lecture in the evening. The children are attentive and well-behaved. "And now," adds Mr. Irvin "will not God's people unite in earnest believing prayer of faith, that God would be pleased to pour out the Holy Spirit on this instrumentality, that his great name may be loved and honored here."

The school consists of forty Indian children, twenty-one boys, and nineteen girls; their ages, from five years up to eighteen, one half of them being under twelve years of age. They are natives of the following tribes: Iowas, Sacs, Sioux and Blackfeet. The girls are divided into two classes, and the boys into three classes. Every care and attention is bestowed upon them when in school. Training in appropriate labors is equally important, to enable them to support themselves when they leave the school. The great object is to give these children a good common education—reading, writing, and arithmetic, with an outline of geography. Their training is continued at all times, from their entrance in the school till they leave it. Their religious instruction, by word and example, holds the first place.

The farm under Mr. Williams's management has produced abundantly: wheat, 400 bushels; oats, 400 bushels; rye, good, but yet in the sheaf; corn, very fine. The crops this year have been excellent, and they have abundance of everything from the farm, peaches and apples included.

Should the means of the Board permit, or should assistance be received from the Civilization fund, at the disposal of the Indian department, the number of these orphan Indian children could be greatly enlarged. The mission house would comfortably contain one hundred pupils. This is the only institution of the kind for the benefit of the orphan children of the various Indian tribes residing on the border of the white settlements. These tribes must be brought under Christian influence, and civilization, or be exterminated by war, at three times the cost to the government that their Christian instruction and civilization would require.

OMAHA MISSION.

Blackbird Hills.—Rev. Robert J. Burtt and Mrs. Burtt; Mr. Isaac Black, teacher, and Mrs. Black; Mr. Joseph Betz, farmer, and Mrs. Betz; Miss Naomi Diament, teacher.

The church at this mission consists of white members only. But there is an increasing religious feeling among some of the pupils of the school as well as among some of the adult Indians of the tribe.

Religious services are regularly conducted by Mr. Burtt. The Sabbath-school is held on the morning of the Sabbath, which is attended by all the pupils, and is a service of much interest to them. A large number of them can read the New Testament. They are fond of singing, and mostly have good voices, and it is gratifying to see them at the morning and evening prayer, and on the Sabbath, with their song books singing the songs of Zion, with their teachers and others who assemble on the Sabbath for the worship of God. Soon after the exercise in the Sabbath-school, preaching and religious worship are held in the mission chapel. The afternoon is devoted to preaching and religious services for the Indians at one or other of their villages or settlements, and in visiting or calling on the Indian families. Mr. Burtt is always well received, and the Indians are orderly and attentive hearers. Though no one of the adult Indians has given evidence of a change of heart, yet these labors have not been without fruit. Three of the boys, who at different times were removed by death, gave comfortable evidence of an interest in Christ. The Spirit of God can touch the hearts of the Indians and their children thus instructed in the knowledge of the only true God, and of Jesus Christ whom he has sent.

The school consists of fifty scholars; for a time it numbered fifty-six. Some sickness and other causes have brought the number to fifty, and the chiefs have agreed to keep the number at fifty as the limit. These children are most thoroughly instructed in the branches of a common English education, by Mr. Black, teacher of the boys, and Miss Diament, of the girls. Besides this, the boys spend part of each day in labor, and the girls are trained in the various duties proper for their sex. This is an important part of their education. The Indian of the hunter tribes is too proud to work. Even when he sees the advantages of labor to his white neighbors, it is with great reluctance that he gives up his preference of a life of idleness, or of hunting the buffalo and the deer.

The mission and the schools are both encouraging. Their superintendent, teachers and farmer, and the female members of the mission, are faithful and untiring in their labors to promote the best interest of these benighted Indians. These laborers are engaged in nf arduous work, and they greatly need the prayers of God's people, —the blessing of the Lord on these labors will make this moral wilderness to bud and blossom like the rose.

The farm, under the efficient management of Mr. Betz, has been more than usually productive. The corn crop was abundant and the wheat will supply this large family with flour. Of pork of their own raising they will have an abundance for the supply of their wants; of potatoes they have none, a severe hail-storm destroyed the vines. About one hundred and thirty gallons of sorghum and Imphee molasses have been made, and of good quality, not unlike sugar-house syrup. Abundance of hay for the stock, is made from the long grass of the prairie.

At the request of the Executive Committee, the Rev. Charles Sturges, M. D., formerly superintendent of this Mission, spent a few weeks at the station in October and November. His impressions of the missionary work there are very favorable, and his previous experience gives the greater value to his views. These were published in the Foreign Missionary of February.

SOUTHWESTERN INDIAN MISSIONS.

The last report mentioned the breaking up of the missions of the Board among these tribes, and the compulsory withdrawal of twenty-five missionary labourers from the Choctaw and Creek missions, whose names are enumerated on pages 14 and 15 of that report. All of these Christian friends have since engaged in other pursuits, with the best wishes of the Committee for their comfort and usefulness. One of the teachers, Miss Turner, is now connected with the Indian Orphan Institute, as mentioned above. From the other missionary labourers, whose names are given on page 14 of the last report, as still remaining in the Indian country, the Committee are not able to give any information. They are not receiving any support from the funds of the Board.

A claim was presented to the Indian Department of the Government, which holds certain funds of these Tribes, for the remuneration of the pecuniary loss incurred by the Board in consequence of the forcible breaking up of these missions. This claim was allowed by the Department, and the sum received by the Board, this year, on this account is stated in the Treasurer's report.

Missions in South America.

MISSION IN NEW GRANADA.

Bogota.—Rev. Thomas F. Wallace and his wife. In this country, Rev. William E. MacLaren, and his wife.

The Rev. Horace B. Pratt's connection with the Board is only nominal, and furnishes no remark in addition to what was mentioned in the last Report. Mr. MacLaren, referring to the discouraging aspects of this missionary field and also to reasons of personal interest, returned with his wife to this country, arriving on the 20th of January. He will, as the Committee hope, find useful work here in the ministry of the gospel, leaving the question of his return to New Granada to be decided by Providence.

A brief report of the mission has been drawn up by Mr. MacLaren since his arrival, which may be found in the Foreign Missionary of May, and to which reference is made, and to some extracts from Mr. Wallace's letter, of later date, as giving valuable information concerning the missionary field and work in this country.

Mr. Wallace's time was chiefly occupied with the study of the Spanish language. He also conducted the English service during a good part of the year; at the latest date the attendance on this service had again increased. Mr. MacLaren began preaching in Spanish about the first of April, with an attendance of but a few persons, who soon mostly ceased coming. The death of his child and his own illness interrupted this service until the middle of August. Then notice of it was published by handbills and the room was crowded on the first Sabbath, but the attendance again diminished until it ceased entirely. Some knowledge of gospel truth, however, was in this way disseminated.

In connection with this service public notice was given of the tract prepared by Mr. MacLaren, "What is Protestantism?" and about 800 copies were circulated. It called forth denunciatory sermons from the priests, and one or two feeble replies to it were printed. The depôt of the B. and F. Bible Society, placed under the charge of the missionaries, was kept open, and a few copies of the sacred Scriptures were sold. Mr. Wallace speaks of increasing calls for Protestant publications in the last two months, and asks for further supplies. He says, "The other day a man from Antioquia bought over ten dollars' worth of Testaments, 'Noches,' [Seymour's Nights with Romanists] and other small books. He took the last of the 'Noches.' We ought by all means to have some more. More than half of the Bibles and Testaments sold the last year were sold in the last two months"—before February 7th.

Conversations on religious subjects were also held with individuals, as opportunities offered. These were but limited, but were more frequent towards the end of the year under review. Mr. Wallace says, in February, that he had lately made the acquaintance of several natives, one of whom is a young man of intelligence who was anxious to attend the Spanish service while it was held, but was deterred by fear. Afterwards he came to the house of the missionary by night, but now he is not ashamed to walk with him in the streets of the city. In connection with this subject, Mr. Wallace says, "As I am becoming better acquainted with the natives, and have repeated inquiries made about Mr. Pratt, as to whether he will not come back, and hear them speak so highly of him, and express the wish that he may return, I begin to feel that success here depends a great deal upon ourselves; and I have made it a matter of much study and prayer, to know how the most good may be done among this people. One thing I am very certain of—it is necessary to go much among them and be sociable with them." A most weighty truth is thus expressed by the missionary, and it is a truth of deep moment to the success of the missionary work in every field of labour.

Mr. MacLaren mentions the admission of one person to the communion at the English service—the number of communicants being eight, none of whom are natives.

In reviewing the short history of this mission one sees a good deal to try the faith of the people of God. Among the discouragements must be reckoned the presence of Romanist ecclesiastics of various grades, ever ready to withstand the gospel preacher. The unsettled state of the country by reason of civil war has also hindered the extension of evangelizing labours. The changes in the ranks of the missionaries have stood in the way of their best usefulness. The first returned three years ago to this country and is now in the southern states. The second died. The third recently returned, as reported above. All these were thus withdrawn from the country, in the ordering of Providence, just when they had fairly learned the language, and were ready for the work before them. The fourth is still on the ground, and is making good progress in preparation for active labour. Perhaps the moral condition of most of the people might be taken as a ground of discouragement—great ignorance of religious things characterizing them, coupled with the debasing power of a corrupt church over them; but the greatness of their spiritual wants should not be considered a reason for discouragement, so much as a plea for the speedy communication of the gospel to them. These discouragements notwithstanding, there are reasons of hope in the prospects of this mission. Its continued existence, indeed its existence at all in a Roman Catholic country, is a token for good; a few years ago, Protestant ministers would not have been tolerated at Bogota. To some extent the power of Rome is under restraint, as shown not only by this toleration of missionaries, but still more clearly by the exile of the Jesuits, the transfer of large landed property from the "dead hand" of the church to the use of the state, and the withdrawal of government favour to a considerable extent from the priests and nuns. The toleration of free discussion, at least in some degree, the progress of enlightened public opinion, and the recent termination of the civil war—leaving the door still open for missionary labours, are things to be considered as favourable to the introduction of the gospel. To these may be added the many prayers offered by the churches in behalf of this particular mission, and above all the promises of the word of God concerning the spread of the gospel in the world. The Committee, therefore, express their conviction that this mission ought to be maintained, and prosecuted in the faith and hope of success.

MISSION IN BRAZIL.

Rio de Janeiro.—Rev. Alexander L. Blackford and his wife. In this country, Rev. Ashbel G. Simonton and his wife.

San Paulo.—Rev. Francis J. C. Schneider.

Mr. Simonton arrived in this country on a visit in May, and expects to embark on his return with Mrs. Simonton in two or three weeks. Messrs. Blackford and Schneider were occupied with labours of the same kind as were described in the report of last year. These labours they were able to fulfil without any hinderance, and with marked evidence of usefulness.

The English service at Rio was discontinued, as imposing too heavy a burden on the missionary. It was the means of doing good, and it probably will be resumed, though not under the direct charge of the mission. The Portuguese service has been kept up, and the attendance considerably increased. Earnest heed is given to the word preached. In the report of the mission it is stated, that "at each communion season, applications have been made for church privileges, and of these applicants several have given such clear evidence of a change of heart that they have been joyfully admitted to membership in the Church of Christ." The number thus admitted was eight. The example of these communicants has been happy in extending the influence of the mission amongst their own people. A colporteur supported by the British and Foreign Bible Society, under the direction of the misionaries, and another during part of the year, supported by the Board, were usefully employed. They found many opportunities of circulating the sacred scriptures, and of pointing their countrymen to the Saviour of sinners.

Mr. Schneider's work is in the province of Sao Paulo. His station, most of the year, was at Sao Joao de Rio Claro, a convenient point from which to visit several settlements of Germans. These settlements contain from ten to a hundred families each, the larger part of whom are nominally Protestants. They have been sadly neglected heretofore, "living without church or educational privileges," and "ignorance, immorality, indifference, and infidelity have proved in most cases effectual hindrances to their conversion." In most respects they differ little from their Catholic countrymen, and both classes stand in much need of missionary labours. Mr. Schneider has indeed met with discouragements, as was to have been expected, and yet he has been permitted to preach the gospel to many of the Germans, and by example as well as by precept to point their minds to the things that are of supreme importance. It should be considered that these German settlers form a permanent part of the population of Brazil, and one which will exert an increasing influence in that country. Mr. Schneider has also given some attention to the study of the Portuguese language, in order to be able to preach the gospel amongst the native Brazilians, as opportunity may serve.

During his visit in this country Mr. Simonton superintended the printing of a revised edition of the Shorter Catechism in Portuguese, at the expense of the Board. He has in preparation a course of expository lectures or commentary on one of the gospels, which he hopes to publish at an early day. There is nothing of this kind in the Portuguese language. Indeed, the field of effort through the press is almost boundless. An evangelical literature in this language is yet to be created.

In a general view, the missionary work in Brazil encounters obstacles from human nature, as everywhere else, from ignorance, immorality, and worldliness, and from Romanism, which, however, has there less than its usual hold of the public mind. On the other hand, the liberal policy of the Government in a good degree opens the door for evangelizing labours. Perhaps in no other Roman Catholic country are the people less prejudiced against the gospel. And in no other have more encouraging "first fruits" of the harvest been so early gathered. These are weighty reasons for the vigorous and hopeful prosecution of the work which is set before the Church of Christ in Brazil.

Missions in Western Africa.

LIBERIA MISSION.

Monrovia.—Rev. Amos Herring; Mr. B. V. R. James, teacher of the English school; Mr. M. M. Witherspoon, principal of Alexander High School.

Kentucky.—Rev. H. W. Erskine; Mr. J. Deputie, teacher.

Harrisburg.—Rev. James R. Amos; Simon Harrison, licentiate preacher Mr. F. A. Melville, teacher of the native school.

Mount Coffee.—Rev. Armistead Miller.

Sinou.—Rev. James M. Priest; Mrs. Mary Parsons, teacher.

Settra Kru.—Mr. Washington McDonogh, teacher.

Niffau.—Rev. Thomas H. Amos.

The Rev. Edwin T. Williams is still in this country, in the south; his connection with the Board continues but nominal, as was mentioned in the last Report.

Monrovia.—The church in Monrovia reports no additions in the last year, the number of church-members being fifty-four. But when last heard from the church was enjoying a precious revival of religion. Much interest on the subject was shown by the full attendance on religious meetings, and many inquiring what they must do to be saved. Among these were thirty-four young men, some of whom expressed a hope of their interest in the Saviour. The Rev. Messrs. Erskine and Miller had been for some time assisting the pastor of the church in preaching and conducting social meetings for prayer and exhortation. Other Christian churches had shared in the same work of God's Spirit, and special attention to religion was apparent generally in the town of Monrovia and parts adjacent.

The Sabbath-school was well attended, and is in a prosperous condition. The English school, taught by Mr. James and his assistant, has sixty pupils, the number to which it is limited. It is well and carefully taught, and is highly prized, and is an efficient agency for good to the community.

The last Annual Report mentioned the temporary suspension of the Alexander High School, and that it had afterwards been decided to open it as heretofore. By the time that notice reached Monrovia the former pupils had been to some extent dispersed, and the health of Mr. Witherspoon was far from being good. It was therefore decided not to resume the school till a suitable building could be erected on the St. Paul's river, at the head of tide water, twenty miles from Monrovia. Circumstances were favourable for commencing the building at once. The health of Rev. James R. Amos and that of his wife had suffered so severely at Niffau, that he was obliged to return to the United States. While waiting for a ship at Monrovia he thoroughly examined the localities at the head of tide water on the St. Paul's. His report in favour of this position for the High School agreed with the opinion of the other missionaries in Liberia as well as the opinions heretofore expressed by the Rev. D. A. Wilson, and Rev. Edwin T. Williams, while in the service of the Board. The voyage to the United States had restored the health of Mr. Amos, and he was anxious to return to any station in Africa where he could be useful. He is a practical carpenter, and has had experience in various other kinds of work. After full and repeated interviews with him, it was deemed important to place under his direction the building for the High School. He returned to Liberia in November, furnished with supplies that will go far to meet the entire expense of a brick building. He will employ his Sabbaths in preaching at different settlements within reach of the station.

Harrisburg.—There is a small church at this station in which Mr. Harrison preaches statedly. No additions to its members have been reported for the last year. The Sabbath-school is still large, and is doing good. The boys' boarding-school consists of twenty scholars, viz.: eleven Congo boys, and three Congo girls, three boys and two girls from the Golahs, an aboriginal tribe now included in Liberia, and one boy from the Veys. The school is taught by Mr. Melville, a former pupil of the Alexander High School. When out of school, the pupils are under the care of Mr. Harrison, who takes charge of their lodging, food, and clothing. It is not in a very prosperous condition. Mr. Harrison is now an aged man, and the labour and care required by such an institution are perhaps too great for him. The Alexander High School will be placed in this neighbourhood, and its influence will, when established, be of great service to the boarding-school. These youth of the recaptured Africans, as well as the native tribes, are all now peaceably residing at Liberia, under the protection of the laws. Their Christian instruction and their welfare and improvement are proper and important objects for the labour of the missionary.

Kentucky.—Mr. Erskine has still three places of preaching as heretofore—Clay-Ashland, Caldwell, and Congo Town. The native villages in reach of his station still receive his visits as far as he is able to make them. The number of church-members is not reported; eight have been added during the past year. The church at the last dates was sharing richly in a revival of religion, similar to that described at Monrovia. The Sabbath-school is reported to be in a prosperous condition.

The English school under J. Deputie has thirty pupils, and is in good operation. It is a great blessing to the place, and its privileges are highly prized by the community.

Sinou.—The church at this station has had three additions to its membership, and three have been dismissed to join other churches, leaving sixty remaining, being the same number of members as reported last year. The Sabbath-school has fifty-two scholars, and is efficiently and well conducted. The day-school under Mrs. Parsons is doing well. The number of pupils is forty, to which the school is limited, or a much higher number would be reported.

Mr. Priest has under his care four Congo and eight Akoo boys. Many of the recaptured Africans, as well as of the native heathen tribes, are settled in the neighbourhood. Some of these attend the church and Sabbath-school, but they are not regular in their attendance.

Settra Kru.—The small school is still continued; the pupils are from six to eight, mostly active and promising boys. This is a difficult and discouraging field of labour. The men are scattered up and down the coast, at great distances from home, seeking employment in war and merchant vessels. They make fearless and active sailors, and when they make some money they return home to spend it. They are, however, very friendly to the mission, and are much improved in some things, having mostly abandoned the worst of their heathen customs. Formerly the charge of witchcraft was very common, and to drink sasa-wood water was the test of their guilt or innocence. The consequences for the most part were fatal. But for the last five years only two instances of this ordeal have occurred. When they have preaching many of them attend and are well-behaved and attentive hearers. A minister of the gospel is greatly needed to labour among this active and remarkable people.

Mount Coffee.—This station is placed among the natives of the Golah tribe, and is fifty miles east of Monrovia, but within the limits of Liberia. Four recaptured Africans are in Mr. Miller's family, supported by the Board, and eight others for whom he receives some support from the Liberian Government. The native Golahs are numerous, and are very anxious that their children should be received into the boarding-school, and the youth are quite willing to labour on the farm for their own support. There are also ten orphan children, whose parents were, one or both, from the United States, who are also most desirous to be received into the mission school. A few of them have been received, increasing the school to twenty. To take charge of the education of these youth, a competent teacher to assist Mr. Miller is greatly needed, and as soon as the funds of the Board will permit, one will be appointed.

The church consists of seven members, three of whom are scholars from the school, received during the last year. Regular preaching in English is kept up in the forenoon of each Sabbath, and in the afternoon at one or more of the adjacent villages, through an interpreter. A very earnest and encouraging state of feeling exists at the mission and in the neighbourhood, in which the school has largely shared; three of the youth united with the church.

Niffau.—The discouraging state of this station was mentioned in the last Annual Report. A further trial, however, was made to continue the missionary work among this wicked and unfriendly people. Mr. James R. Amos suffered so severely from fever that he was authorized to leave for the United States. His return to Africa and his employment there have been stated under the station at Harrisburgh. Left alone at Niffau, Mr. Thomas H. Amos tried most faithfully to sustain the station by continuing the school, preaching to the people, and visiting them and conversing with them separately. But every aspect of this work was discouraging. Few, and sometimes none, would attend preaching. The boys attended the school when they pleased, and would submit to no control. In the midst of these labours, the health of Mr. Amos suffered severely. In these circumstances it was decided to give up the station at least for the present. Mr. Amos will return to some place nearer Monrovia. There is abundant room and missionary work for him there. His station will be designated after hearing from himself and the brethren of the mission.

CORISCO MISSION.

Evangasimba.—Rev. James L. Mackey, Rev. R. Hamill Nassau, M. D., and their wives; Mrs. Georgiana M. McQueen; Ubĕngi, and Ibolo, teachers.*

Ugovi.—Andĕkĕ, licentiate preacher; Andombanĕnĕ, teacher.

Alongo.—Rev. Walter H. Clark; Mackĕndĕngĕ, teacher.

Out-stations:—Ilobi, in the Corisco Bay,—Ibia, licentiate preacher; Bombango, teacher.—Hanje, in the Kombe tribe—Jumba, and at Meduma in the same tribe, Yume, Scripture readers.—Ukaka, in the Mbiko tribe,—Ekela, Scripture reader.

In this country:—Rev. Cornelius De Heer; Mrs. Walter H. Clark.

This mission met with a great loss in the death of the Rev. William Clemens, who departed this life on the 24th of June, while on the voyage to this country on a visit. He was a missionary of great devotedness and efficiency, and one whose labors were useful in no ordinary degree. Mrs. Clemens, as was stated in the last report, was here with her friends and was looking for her husband's arrival, when the sad news of his death reached her. The Rev. C. De Heer arrived on the 22d of August, visiting this country for his health. The Rev. R. Hamill Nassau, M. D., and Miss Mary C. Latta, were united in marriage on the 17th of September. The Rev. C. L. Loomis, M. D., is still in this country, though not calling for any support from the Board.

The Church.

The members of the church live at different stations and out-stations, but meet at Evangasimba for the communion once in three months. The number of communicants reported last year was 82, of whom 74 were natives. Some of these Mr. Mackey says, "have gone back to their heathen customs, and it became necessary to excommunicate eight of them, and to suspend four more. The report of the station at Evangasimba, complains of the want of the religious interest which was manifest among the people two or three years ago, but the presence of the Holy Spirit was not withdrawn. Thirteen hopeful converts were admitted to the church during the year by baptism, of whom six were fruits of seed sown at the out-station at Hanje, and one at that of Ilobi; three others were connected with the station at Alongo. The whole number of native communicants at the end of the year was therefore 79. Three children were baptised.

The advance of the members of this church in the divine life and in useful labours for Christ, is a subject of deep interest. The preceding statements show that both shade and light are marked in the history of the last year, and this is further shown by Mr. Clark's reference to the character of the communicants at Alongo: "One desideratum in the missionary work, and not at all a secondary one here, is to see some growing up to the stature of men in Christ Jesus, to be patterns and guides to the mass who cannot but be weak babes in Christ. In this respect there is progress, and decided encouragement in our work, sufficient to call forth the gratitude of all who feel any interest in Christ's cause here."

Native Missionary Assistants.

The Corisco church has already given great encouragement to its friends, by the number of native helpers it has raised up for the service of the mission. Enumerated above are two licentiate preachers, five teachers, and three scripture readers, or catechists. Of the latter class of assistants, four were reported at the beginning of the year, "of whom, one died, one has been released temporarily, another has been dismissed; two have been added." Their work is that of reading the Scriptures to their people, adding explanations and exhortations, according to their ability, under the supervision of the missionaries. They stand in much need of further instruction and supervision themselves, being but partially educated and inexperienced Christians, and exposed to peculiar temptations. The brethren express much regret that their manifold labours leave them so little time for this part of their work. One of the Scripture readers is spoken of as a candidate for the ministry. The one who died, Belevi, after running well for a season, and doing much good, at length fell into the sin of intemperance, and was dismissed from his post, after patient but apparently useless efforts for his reformation had been made. On his death bed, however, he expressed much penitence.

None of these native brethren appear, as yet, to be called to the pastoral office, nor does the time seem to have come for organizing the native communicants into separate churches at the different stations. The firm planting of the gospel amongst the people greatly depends on the establishment of such pastoral charges; in every missionary field this is a matter of the greatest moment; but many things have to be considered before measures are taken for this purpose.

The Schools—Works Printed in Benga.

In the Sabbath schools, 160 scholars are reported; in the board ing schools, 60 boys and 31 girls; in day schools, 50 scholars—nearly all irregular; adults under instruction at the stations, not otherwise enumerated, 10. Some particulars concerning these schools, and also concerning other efforts to spread the gospel, will be found further on, under the notices of stations.

The Benga language is spoken by the Corisco people, and by some of the people on the mainland. The dialects of several neighbouring tribes are so nearly allied to the Benga, that it can readily be used by them. It was reduced to writing by the missionaries a few years ago, and the gospels of Matthew and Mark have been printed in it, besides a Primer.

The lamented Mr. Clemens expected to supervise the printing of some additional works during his visit to this country. This good purpose has been fulfilled by Mr. De Heer, under whose editing a translation of the gospel of Luke, and of the book of Genesis, and a part of the book of Exodus, printed by the American Bible Society, a translation of the tract "Come to Jesus" by the American Tract Society, and a small collection of hymns, at the expense of the Board, have been published. The translation of the Scriptures and of the hymns were prepared by the joint labours of the missionaries; that of the tract, by Mr. De Heer.

Notices of Stations.

At all the stations religious services are maintained, and the preaching of the gospel forms a large part of the missionaries' work. These services are attended commonly by small audiences, at Evangasimba varying from 40 to over 100 persons, and by various degrees of interest, but the word preached will not be in vain.

Evangasimba.—Of the day school for boys the report of this station, after referring to their irregular attendance, expresses the opinion that such schools will not prosper, until the people feel more deeply the importance of education. The native children have "perfect license, from their birth, to go where they please, and do what they please," and their parents do not yet prize knowledge of books enough to force their attendance at school. Mrs. Mackey has met with gratifying success in collecting in a day school "the girls and women who are the wives of polygamists," having secured the attendance of about fifteen. An hour and a half are spent each day, "in imparting religious instruction to them and teaching them to read the word of God in their own language."

Mr. Mackey's labours at this station are greatly increased by his being the treasurer of the mission. All the business transactions required in so large a mission, especially in the purchase of supplies of food for the boarding scholars and the mission families, have to be made by means of barter. Money is not in use, but goods are exchanged for what is required—a process consuming much time, and often not a little trying to one's patience. He was able to make excursions on the main land for preaching, and attempted to reach the Pangwe country in company with a European botanist, but this effort was frustrated by the unfriendly feeling of natives on the border.

Mr. Nassau, Mrs. McQueen, and Miss Latta prosecuted their work at Itandaluku, a sub-station of Evangasimba. The girls' boarding school has well repaid the missionaries for their labour and patience in its in-door and out-of-door duties, but for details reference must be made to the station report as published in one of the missionary periodicals. For a time there was much feeling on the subject of religion among the scholars, and three of them seem to retain these impressions. Mr. Nassau's medical skill was often of great service, but he considered it inexpedient to go out among the people in medical practice to any great extent. He could not countenance the fetich ceremonies usually employed by the natives in time of sickness.

Ugovi.—Mr. De Heer's earnest labours were continued at this station in the former part of the year. Afterwards Andèkê was placed here, where he has charge of a boarding school for boys, thirteen in number. Mr. Nassau preached at this station, Andèkê taking the service in his absence. The Sunday school, instruction in the Catechism, and other labours are in Andèkê's charge.

Alongo.—Mr. Clark took the charge of this station in May, after Mr. Clemens left it. The boarding school here contains scholars from seven main-land tribes. Thirty-one scholars were under instruction, and seventeen at the end of the year—of whom nine are communicants, and one is a hopeful inquirer. The five most advanced scholars receive Mr. Clark's special instruction every week-day evening except Saturday, and they have made good progress,—in some cases very marked. The want of sufficient text-books in the native tongue stands in the way of their progress. The attendance on public worship has not been large, but a daily prayer-meeting at noon, in Benga, has been kept up with spirit.

Out-stations.—At Ilobi, Ibia, the native preacher, reports six persons as inquirers, one of whom he regards as a hopeful convert. One person was admitted to the church from this island. The school is small, but not without promise of good influence. Bombango was placed here to assist Ibia in the school, at least for a time. The outstation at Hanje among the Kombe people, 50 miles north of Corisco, after being marked by signal blessings from on high, was then marked by hardly less signal decline, resulting from the fall of poor Belevi, the Scripture Reader. Towards the latter part of the year, the labours of Jumbe seemed to be successful in awakening new interest in the gospel. The native assistant at the out-station of Mavika, on the river Muni, was transferred to the mouth of a small river, Eyo, among the Kombe people, 18 miles above Hanje; but his health has become too feeble to allow him to attend to his missionary work, though he still lives at that place. Another Scripture reader, Yume, was placed in October at Medume, 12 miles still further up the coast, also among the Kombes, where he is meeting with a cordial welcome, and the people attend well to his instructions. Ukaka, on the south bank of the Muni, near its mouth, was occupied for a time, but was unsupplied at the close of the year, the native helper having been withdrawn for yielding to the temptation of engaging in trade.

The foregoing statements show that much patient labour has been devoted by the brethren to this missionary field, and also that their labour has not been in vain in the Lord. There are discouraging things in their post of duty,—particularly the injurious influence of the climate on their health. At the latest advices, in February, most of them had recently suffered from illness induced by this cause. But Corisco is probably more favourable to health than any place elsewhere accessible. Eventually it will be found practicable to penetrate into the interior of the country and reach the higher or table land, which will prove to be a healthful region. In the meantime, the Church should feel grateful for the good results thus far gained and the good work in progress, and earnest prayer should be offered that nothing may be permitted to hinder further success. Some apprehension exists of interference with the mission through claims of jurisdiction over this part of the African coast, by one or two of the Roman Catholic nations of Europe; but our own government could not tolerate unjustifiable interference with the peaceful occupation of its citizens, on an island which was never occupied by any foreign power; and it is easy for the Supreme Ruler to ward off the threatening danger.

The Committee have appointed a female teacher, who is waiting for an opportunity of going out to Corisco—where she will make her home in the family of her brother, one of the missionaries. Another ordained missionary should be sent to this mission, without delay.

In the list of stations, Agra is no longer reported, for reasons to be mentioned further on, and Etawah now first appears. This is a city of 30,000 inhabitants, which of late years has been rapidly growing in importance, and which the brethren have long desired to occupy as a missionary station.

The missionary work in this country sustained a great loss in the death of the Rev. James R. Campbell, D. D. He departed this life on the 18th of September, after more than twenty-six years of service as a missionary. He was an able and faithful labourer in the spread of the gospel, and his labours have not been in vain in the Lord. His widow and his eldest daughter are still engaged in the missionary work at Saharunpur. The Rev. J. H. Morrison while in this country has preached in many of the churches on the subject of missions. His health is improved, and he hopes to return to India this summer. The Rev. G. O. Barnes also hoped to return about the same time, and his health is much improved. His illness was so severe and peculiar, however, that the Committee do not feel at liberty to sanction his return until his recovery is fully tested. In the meantime, he will readily find a useful sphere of labour in the ministry at home. The Rev. Edward H. Sayre and his wife embarked for India September 2d, and reached their station early in February. Mr. Reese Thackwell, licentiate preacher, was ordained as an evangelist by the presbytery of Lodiana, in January, and the presbytery at the same meeting licensed a native teacher as a probationer for the ministry. During most of the time covered by this report the brethren occupied the stations as enumerated in the list contained in last year's report. A few changes in the posts of labour of the missionaries were made at the annual meetings of the two missions, at the end of the mission year, as will be perceived by comparing the list above with that of last year.

Churches.—Native Pastors Needed.

Some changes are reported in the membership of the churches; a few communicants have departed this life, some have removed to other stations, and others have been received. The statistics are not in all cases fully reported, but are nearly as follows:—

* Returns of last year.

In general a good report is given of the members of these churches, especially with reference to their apparent sincerity in their religious profession. They do not commonly attain a high degree of Christian excellence and usefulness, however, but there is reason to believe that a good work of grace is indeed commenced in the hearts of many, if not all, of these native Christians.

It is with regret the Committee have to report that none of these churches are placed as yet under the sole charge of native pastors, except the church of Jalandar, and the minister of this church is not supported by it. At Saharunpur, however, the native minister was associated with Dr. Campbell, as co-pastor of the church. There are difficulties in the way of such pastorates being formed, owing partly to the want of ability in the churches to support their ministers, and partly to the want of suitable qualifications for the office of the ministry among the converts. The former might be relieved in some degree by the judicious allowance of aid from other sources, in supplementing for a time the salaries paid by the churches. The latter is of a more serious nature. Unqualified men ought not to be set over the churches as pastors; but the standard of qualification, so far as talents and scholarship are concerned, is a relative one, varying in different nations, and it should have particular reference to the degree of intelligence which exists in the churches themselves. In respect to this subject, our church system places both the missionary and the native minister in the same presbytery, and extends the supervision of the presbytery over the native churches, thus furnishing an admirable safeguard against evils and making provision for the best results. The Committee do not intend, however, to enter on any discussion of the subject, though they are anxious that the attention of the church should be directed to its importance. It justly receives the earnest consideration of the missionaries. These native churches can have no stable existence until pastors are obtained and supported by themselves. The missionaries, moreover, have before them other important labours; and these in some cases do not well consist with their being pastors of these local churches. Their not being of the same habits, language, associations, &c., with the communicants, is also a matter of great moment in the case.

Native Missionary Assistants.

The Committee observe with great pleasure that seventy-one native Christian assistants, besides two ordained ministers and one licentiate preacher, are reported in connection with these stations. These are of three classes, all of the lower grades of work—catechists, teachers, and Scripture readers. It is not stated that any of them have been taken under the care of the presbyteries, as candidates for the sacred ministry; neither is there, in most cases, a report of the measures pursued for their special instruction as missionary labourers. Both of these points, doubtless, receive the anxious attention of the missionary brethren. These native labourers must be regarded with deep interest, whatever may be their imperfections, and they should be remembered in the prayers of the churches.

Missionary Education.

This work is continued, as in former years. Educational efforts are made in three classes of schools: those in which boys learn English, and the somewhat higher branches of education either in English or the vernacular; those in which elementary instruction is imparted, to either boys or girls, commonly called bazár schools; and those in which the scholars are under the full control of the missionaries, boarded, clothed, and taught by them, as in the orphan schools. A large proportion of the scholars are in schools of the first of these classes. The following returns show in some degree the extent and importance of this department of missionary work:—

School for Native Christian Girls.
Dehra,	30

* Returns of last year.

The scholars in the girls' school at Dehra are supported chiefly by their parents. The usefulness of this school is highly commended in the report of that station. The number of girls under instruction in all the schools is still but small, though it is increasing. The inveterate prejudices of the people against the education of females must eventually give way. A large part of the expense of nearly all the schools is defrayed by the liberality of European friends in India, and in some instances the missionaries availed themselves of the grant-in-aid, which is afforded by the government under certain conditions. In all the schools, it is needless to add, the religious instruction of the scholars continues to be the main object. It is difficult to overrate the influence of the Christian truth thus implanted in the minds of so many of the children and youth of this country. It continues to be one of the marked features of this missionary field, that heathen and Mohammedan parents should be willing to send their children to these Christian schools. Though the number of hopeful conversions has never been large, at least from the scholars attending the day schools, yet in manifold ways will the leaven of divine truth produce the happiest results.

Missionary Journeys.

The plan of making tours in order to preach the gospel at places within reach of their stations is still pursued by the missionaries. The colder months of the year, November to February, are the best season for this kind of missionary work. The length of time thus spent by different brethren depends on various things, but it is considered a part of their regular duty and is highly valued as a means of doing good. One of the brethren is referred to as being chiefly occupied in this way. Many hundreds of villages and towns have been visited by the missionaries and their native assistants, who sometimes spend several days in the midst of a circle of villages, preaching publicly, or holding conversations privately; and often these services are of great interest. In general, more respectful attention is paid to the gospel message than in former years, and less opposition is encountered. The seed is thus sown beside all waters.

The Press at Lodiana.

The number of copies of different works printed was 99,575, making 9,137,875 pages. The size of these publications varied from 1 page to 519 pages each—the largest being Barth's Scripture History in Urdu; six others contained over 900 pages in all, and six were under 12 pages each; the rest, thirteen, varied from 18 pages to 97. These issues of the press were mostly in the Hindu, Urdu, and Punjabi languages. The number of copies sent out from the depository was upwards of 63,000, which were widely circulated in the Punjab and in the provinces south-eastward, as far down as to Oude. It is an encouraging fact that there is an increasing demand for these Christian publications.

The press is under the efficient supervision of Mr. Rudolph. Messrs. J. Newton, L. Janvier, and J. Newton, Jr., took part last year in the editorial duties of this establishment, "including the heavy task of proof-reading," which can seldom be trusted exclusively to native agents. It is gratifying to know that this press is highly appreciated by missionaries of all denominations and other Christian friends in the North-west provinces; its publications are extensively used by them as auxiliary to their labors in the cause of Christ.

Notices of Stations.

Peshawar.—The revision and correction of his translation of the New Testament in Pushto occupied a part of Mr. Loewenthal's time. This work is now probably through the press, and it will doubtless be an invaluable gift to the Afghan people, though it is one which they do not yet appreciate. The missionary also gave attention to preaching, both in Peshawar and elsewhere. On account of his health, he went, early in the summer, to the valley of Cashmere, where he could still prosecute missionary work to some extent. He returned to Peshawar on the 1st of November, and was almost immediately attacked with a fever which prevailed there. This continued for two months and a half, when he was so far recovered as to be able to make a visit to some of the other stations of the mission, in the hope of regaining his usual health. No special change is reported in the aspect of the missionary work for the Afghans.

Rawal Pindi.—Two Mohammedan women were admitted to the church by baptism, and some members were received from other churches. One of the church members was removed by death. One of the native helpers, an aged man, has not been able to persuade his wife and children to become Christians nor even to live with him. "In his old age he is left quite alone; and yet not alone, for he speaks much of the presence of the Lord, and doubtless finds that he did not forsake wife and children and home in vain." A school was opened in the cantonments under favorable circumstances. Some efforts were made to make the Gospel known to Cashmerians and Hill people during a part of the year at Murree; a service was conducted there in English, and a meeting for native Christians.

Lahor.—Two adults were admitted to the church by baptism. Another died before the arrangements were completed for his baptism; he had once been a pupil in the English school. The priest of the chief mosque, with whom the missionaries frequently conversed, sent for one of them to pray with him on his death bed, and requested to be buried as a Christian. The schools have had an increased attendance, particularly one for adults. One of the missionaries was challenged to engage in a public discussion of points of difference between Mohammedanism and Christianity, and considered it best to accept the challenge. His opponent was one of the most learned Mohammedans. After nine evenings he ceased to attend, thus virtually acknowledging his want of success. The discussions were largely attended, and it is hoped that good was done by them. Referring to the general attention paid to their preaching services, at the station and on tours, the brethren in their report specify as encouraging "the kindly feeling manifested by so many of the people, and the diminution of the virulent opposition mentioned so often in our reports." They also refer in grateful terms to the continued warm and liberal interest taken in their work by European friends at Lahor and elsewhere. The female Scripture reader is supported by some ladies in London, and her labors among the native women are not without encouragement. The two colporteurs are supported by the N. I. Bible Society, and they have succeeded in selling many copies of the Scriptures. The Missionary Conference, held at this city at the end of December, was a very interesting assembly, and its proceedings were well adapted to promote the cause of Christ. It was attended by civilians, military officers, and other laymen, as well as by chaplains and missionaries of different churches.

Kapurthala.—At this interesting station, no great change has occurred in the missionary work. The Rajah continues his liberal support of the mission families, and gives countenance to all their missionary labors; but he has not yet professed his faith in Christ by baptism, though he avows his belief in Christianity, and is commonly regarded by his people as a Christian. He attended the Missionary Conference at Lahor. The church will soon be completed. In general, the brethren speak of progress in the right direction, though they cannot report instances of hopeful conversion. The young princes, two sons of the Rajah and their cousin, of the ages of fourteen, eleven, and nineteen, are highly commended for their progress in their studies and for their intelligence and love of knowledge. A special interest in the prayers of the church is requested in their behalf. The medical services and the average daily attendance of patients at the dispensary are about the same as in past years.

Jalandar.—No report from this station has been received. Last year the report was after much delay received, and it is printed in the Foreign Missionary of August. It shows that the native brethren, the only missionaries at this station, were conducting their various labors as usual, and mentions the addition of one member to the church.

Lodiana.—Four adults were admitted to the church, and five children were baptized. The brethren earnestly ask for the prayers of the churches on behalf of their native Christians, that they may attain a higher degree of piety and devotedness. They also refer to the indifference with which the gospel is heard by most persons at the station, as if they had become hardened against it. On their journeys to preach among the villages, they often met with encouraging attention. The schools were considerably interrupted by sickness, which prevailed to an unusual extent. The High School is spoken of as in an improved condition. A normal class, for the benefit of the junior teachers in both the English and Vernacular departments, was exerting a happy influence on them and on the whole school. The orphan girls' school received eight new scholars and lost five by death; fifty-one remained at the end of the year—a very interesting family. One of these girls, who is near her death, gives pleasing evidence of piety, and there are some others, the missionaries say, "of whom we entertain the hope that they seek the Lord." Most of these orphans are young children. Needlework and housekeeping matters are parts of their learning. Their religious training receives particular attention.

Ambala.—Four of the five hopeful converts admitted to the church were servants in the family of a gentleman of the civil service. This gentleman and his wife took a deep interest in their welfare, having their servants meet with them daily for religious instruction and family worship. Their head-servant was baptized about three years ago, and he still runs well; he "was doubless an important instrument in bringing these four to the Saviour of their souls." The devotedness of a leper is mentioned, one who was baptized two years ago; he labours zealously to bring the other inmates of the poor house to a knowledge of the great physician. One of the principal schools would have been closed for want of funds, but for the liberality of European friends at the station. A village school for girls was collected by Mrs. Janvier, reaching the number of eighteen scholars, but it was necessarily closed on her removal to Sabathu.

Sabathu.—This station was re-occupied in June; previously a native assistant was in charge of it. In addition to his other labours, the missionary has given a part of his time to the reading of proofs for the press at Lodiana. Much indifference is reported to the gospel message, though at times "power has appeared to attend it." A Sabbath school, a day school chiefly for native Christian children, and another for native girls, were conducted by the ladies of the mission—the two latter schools having ten scholars each. Seven inmates of a poor house are under the missionary's charge at the expense of European friends, and receive Christian instruction.

Saharunpur.—The death of Dr. Campbell has been already mentioned. This was the marked event of the year at this station, where he had so long been a laborious and successful missionary. To all its interests, his removal is a very great loss. It devolved on his pupil, and his co-pastor in the charge of the native church, Mr. Wylie, the native minister, to prepare the annual report of the station. This paper gives a satisfactory account of the varied services and labours which have here received attention. Eight communicants were admitted to the church, seven of them by baptism, the eighth had been baptized in infancy; five of them were orphan boys in the school. Some inquirers had been under instruction. A meeting of young persons, formerly educated in the mission school, was established by themselves to investigate the claims of Christianity. The orphan boys' school is mainly supported by funds from friends in the Reformed Presbyterian church and to some extent from friends in India. The services of Miss Campbell have been very efficient in this school.

Dehra.—Three members of the church fell under censure for unchristian conduct. A young Musulman inquirer, intelligent and apparently earnest, disappointed the hopes of the missionary, and publicly renounced Christianity in one of the mosques. Three persons were regarded as inquirers at the end of the year. The congregation is larger than it has ever been, about seventy persons usually attending. The school for boys has an increased number of scholars; and its head teacher, a native Christian, educated at the Scotch Free Church school in Calcutta, is highly spoken of; he declined an offer of a much larger salary in a government school, in order to continue in missionary service. The school for native Christian girls is described in the report of the station as "conferring unspeakable benefits on the native Christian community." An increased attendance of scholars was expected. A cordial tribute is paid in the report to Miss Miller, a Scotch young lady, who had been a teacher in this school, but had accepted another post of labour better suited to her health. Miss Beatty succeeds her in this school. The building for native Christians was greatly injured by fire, and a second time it was nearly destroyed by the same agent, during the year, probably the work of incendiaries; in both instances the liberal gifts of English friends, amounting to about $400, aided in repairing the loss. It has now a fireproof roof. A touching case of inquiry concerning the way of salvation by a native woman, under the preaching of a native assistant at a fair, is mentioned in the report, but she withdrew from the public notice she had attracted and could not afterwards be found.

Roorkhee.—Mr. Caldwell's absence from this station four months, on account of his health, led to a diminished attendance in the English department of the school, and this department was afterwards discontinued. An evening school was opened, with an average attendance of thirty scholars, making the number under instruction in both schools about the same as last year. No additions to the number of communicants, nor any inquirers, are reported. "Far less interest than formerly," the missionary writes, "has been manifested by the people of this place in the things that belong to their eternal peace."

Agra.—This station was formed in 1846, with special reference to the Presbyterian families who had removed to this city from Allahabad, and through them it was believed that a good influence could be exerted on the native community. For several years these ends were successfully accomplished; but afterward the government offices were taken back to Allahabad, and nearly all the families connected with the mission church returned to that city. The special work of our brethren at Agra thereupon ceased. It was at length considered best to leave the general missionary work to the excellent European brethren at this city, and Mr. Owen and the native assistant were withdrawn from it, by the advice of the mission, about the close of the year—Mr. Owen returning to his former station at Allahabad. "Since the publication of his Urdu Translation and Commentary on the Psalms, he has been engaged in a similar work on Isaiah, which he hopes soon to put to press. He has also resumed the preparation of his System of Theology in Urdu, the manuscript of which was entirely lost in the mutiny." The native assistant went daily to the bazars for reading and talking to the people, accompanied by Mr. Owen when practicable; but these efforts were not marked with special interest.

Mynpurie.—Mr. Brodhead reports, in addition to his usual labours, the opening of a school for girls and a village school for boys, both on a small scale. He mentions the rebuilding of a temple, opposite the mission chapel, as a kind of heathen demonstration against the gospel.

Futtehgurh.—At this large and well-conducted station the brethren admitted sixteen communicants to the church, of whom five were adults then first baptized, five were persons who had been baptized on their parents' or guardians' profession of faith, and six were from other churches. A few cases of earnest inquiry occurred. One church-member was excommunicated. Less opposition was encountered at the preaching services, especially on missionary tours. The Mohammedans seem to be under much restraint since the mutiny. A class of twenty-one adults, preparing to be teachers, enjoyed Mr. Ullmann's instructions every Saturday. The same missionary had enlarged one of his Urdu tracts, of which a fifth edition had been printed. Another Urdu tract and one in Hindi from his pen, and also a selection of hymns and songs in Urdu, with their tunes, had been printed or were in press—the selection being made for native Christian children. A temperance society had been formed, which the missionaries say had been "cheerfully joined by all the members of our communities," and from which they expected happy results.

Futtehpore.—The native assistants report great willingness to listen to gospel truth in the villages visited by them. A young man died in the hospital, who seemed sincerely to believe in Jesus. Several years ago he had learned something of the Saviour in a mission school. Three orphan children had been received; one of whom died, a second ran away, and the third was supported by a European gentleman. An English lady took a warm interest in the bazar girls' school, defraying its expense.

Allahabad.—Six adults were admitted to the church; four on examination and two by certificate. One of these new members is an intelligent man, of respectable social position, who met with much opposition from his family and friends before making a Christian profession. Much is expected from his influence with a large circle of relatives and friends. One of the female church-members "died a happy and peaceful death," and Mr. Walsh pays a warm tribute to her excellent Christian life. The schools were largely indebted to European friends, and particularly to the respected Scotch chaplain, for liberal support. The high school is greatly favored in having teachers who are all Christians but one.

In this great field of missionary labour our church has long borne a part in efforts for the spread of the gospel. These efforts have been attended with a certain measure of visible success, as the preceding narrative shows, and with a wide-spread and deep influence which is not yet apparent to a casual observer, but which is recognized clearly by those who have for years watched the course of events. The number of labourers is inadequate to the work. The missions of the Board admit of great enlargement, and need to be reinforced even to maintain their present degree of efficiency. Only one new labourer is under appointment to this field, and his going out is necessarily made dependent on the state of the mission treasury. This fact furnishes at once a plea for more men and larger funds for the missionary work in this country. There are, indeed, missionaries now from other sections of the Christian church, in number much exceeding the missionaries of our church, and they have been cordially welcomed to the field first occupied by the Board; but the harvest is still plenteous, while the labourers are few.

The Committee must not close their report of these missions without adverting to the Missionary Conference which was held at Lahor the last week in December. It was attended by upward of thirty ministers of the gospel, nearly all of them missionaries, and by many laymen connected with the civil service and with the army, and also by the Rajah of Kapurthala. Subjects of great interest to the progress of the gospel were discussed, and a delightful spirit of Christian union prevailed. It was a meeting of marked interest, and one likely to do great good. It was itself one of the signs of the times, showing great advance, and giving hope of still greater progress.

Mission in Siam.

Bangkok.—On the river Meinam, about twenty five miles from its mouth; occupied as a mission station in 1840 to 1844, and from 1847 to the present time; missionary labourers—the Rev. Messrs. Stephen Mattoon, Samuel R. House, M. D., Noah A. McDonald, Samuel C. George, and their wives, and the Rev. Jonathan Wilson; one native Christian teacher.

Petchaburi.—On the western side of the Gulf of Siam, about one hundred miles south-west from Bangkok; occupied as a mission station in 1861; missionary labourers—Rev. Messrs. Daniel McGilvary and Samuel G. McFarland, and their wives.

The work of the mission in this country has been pursued as in former years. The brethren hold regular preaching services in both stations, engage in the instruction of youth to a limited extent, make use of the printing-press as an auxiliary, and go out on missionary journeys. They meet usually with respectful attention, and but rarely with opposition, and they have widely disseminated a knowledge of the Christian religion among the people. As yet, however, the Spirit of God has not vouchsafed his converting influences to any great extent, so as to make the word effectual unto salvation. That these labours of so many years have been in vain, is not to be believed; the time of a great harvest may be near at hand.

The Church.

A new member was admitted to the church in Bangkok on profession of his faith, a young man from this country, who is engaged in business in that city. No converts have been received at either station. The brethren at Petchaburi speak of "several persons in our families and under our daily influence, who, we hope, are not far from the kingdom of heaven. They have been under religious instruction for a length of time, and have acquired considerable knowledge of the doctrines of the Bible. One of them, a Siamo-Chinese, has committed and recited the whole gospel of Luke; another, the son of a nobleman, professes to have met with a change of heart. He, also, has committed large portions of the Scripture, some in Siamese, some in English." Referring to the want of visible fruit from their labours, the brethren at Bangkok say, "Were it not for the immutable promises of God, we might well be discouraged; but we know that no jot or tittle of his word shall pass away unfulfilled. We look forward, therefore, with anxiety to the time when the 'way of the kings of the east shall be prepared,' and when there shall be a far more rapid increase of the church than she ever yet witnessed."—The number of communicants reported last year was—at Bangkok, eleven; at Petchaburi, five.

Missionary Education.

Besides a Sunday-school, the boarding-school for boys has been continued at Bangkok, and three girls are still pupils in one of the families of the mission—the whole number of these scholars being twenty-three, most of them small. The careful instruction given to them, and the good example set before them, must tend to produce happy results, the same that are expected from similar Christian education elsewhere. Two classes of women are taught, one at each station, by ladies of the mission who are thoroughly at home in the native language, and a second class of women connected with the mission premises in Bangkok is taught by another missionary lady. At Petchaburi, a day-school of ten scholars is taught, which includes the sons of the governor and lieutenant-governor, and the progress of these scholars is commended.

Printing and Distribution of Books.

Over 588,000 pages 12mo were printed, nearly all consisting of the Holy Scriptures, in parts, viz., the Gospels of Matthew and John, the Acts, and the Epistles of John, 2,000 copies of each; and the Gospel of Luke was nearly through the press, in an edition of the same size. Much time was spent, especially by one of the missionaries in Bangkok, in conversing with the people and distributing books. That city itself presents a vast field for this kind of labour, especially as it is visited by people in trading boats from all parts of the kingdom. At Petchaburi the brethren speak of book distribution throughout the year, accompanied in all cases by words of exhortation, and they thus refer to a peculiar opportunity of engaging in this service: "The king makes a visit to his royal country residence in this province once or twice a year, and is always accompanied by a very large train of attendants, with officers and soldiers. These mostly lodge in their boats, which line both sides of the river in front of our houses; and when it was known that we distributed books, they came in crowds, and we found it was necessary to give with a sparing hand, or our stock would soon be exhausted. Thus a class of persons was supplied with books, who could perhaps not be easily reached in any other way."

A Chapel Built—Another Needed.

The missionaries in Bangkok were delighted to see their chapel opened on the 25th of May, for the worship of God in both Siamese and English services. The expense of its erection was defrayed by themselves and by some contributions from other sources. At Petchaburi, a small chapel is much needed. The services are held in the basement of one of the mission houses, which is not a suitable place according to Siamese notions, nor is it sufficiently near any of the frequented streets of the city.

Siam, as a missionary field, presents some features of great interest. Under the present liberal king, no opposition is made to the full employment of every means of evangelization; the door is open to the missionary in every direction. And a large amount of evangelical knowledge has undoubtedly been disseminated in the country by the missionary labours of many years. Yet the number of converts is very small, nor are there many persons, apparently, impressed with earnest convictions of the truth of the Christian religion. The set time for the conversion of this people has not yet come. It may not, however, be far distant. A great preparatory work has been accomplished. The faith of the Church must not fail as to final success. In the mean time it should be remembered that the labourers in this harvest are few. More men could be well employed, indeed, are greatly needed, in the purely Siamese department of the mission; and, as has been repeatedly mentioned in former reports, missionaries should be sent for the Laos, Cambodians, and other people, who can be best reached at present through the door open in Siam.

Missions in China.

CANTON MISSION.

Canton: on the Canton river, about seventy miles from its mouth; occupied as a mission station in 1845; missionary labours suspended by the war in November, 1856, and partly transferred to Macao, a Chinese Island under Portuguese authority, near the mouth of the Canton river; resumed at Canton, 1858; missionary labourers,—the Rev. Messrs. Andrew P. Happer, M.D., Charles F. Preston, Ira M. Condit, and Arthur Folsom, and their wives; John G. Kerr, M. D., and his wife; one native Christian assistant.

NINGPO MISSION.

Ningpo: on the Ningpo river, about twelve miles from the sea; occupied as a mission station, in 1844; missionary labourers,—Rev. Messrs. H. V. Rankin, David D. Green, William T. Morrison, and their wives; Rev. Samuel Dodd; native Christian assistants—five catechists, six teachers, and two colporteurs.

Three Out-stations, in the Sanpoh district, thirty-five to fifty miles northwest of Ningpo, and one at Bao-ko-tah, a village eight miles southeast of Ningpo; occupied by native labourers, enumerated above.

SHANGHAI MISSION.

Shanghai: on the Woosung river, fourteen miles from the sea; occupied as a mission station in 1850; missionary labourers,—Rev. Messrs. William A. P. Martin, D. D., John M. W. Farnham, John S. Roberts, and their wives; William Gamble, printer.

SHANTUNG MISSION.

Tungchow: occupied as a mission station in 1861; missionary labourers,—Rev. Messrs. John L. Nevius, and Charles R. Mills, and their wives.

Chefoo: the chief foreign port of the province of Shantung; occupied as a mission station in 1862; missionary labourers,—D. B. McCartee, M. D., and his wife.

In this Country: Rev. Joshua A. Danforth.

The losses by death and sickness, in this missionary field last year were very heavy. The Rev. Samuel R. Gayley, departed this life on the 26th of July, and the Rev. M. Simpson Culbertson, D. D., on the 26th of August, both being removed by cholera, after a brief illness. They were both able and faithful missionaries, and their early removal from their work is one of the mysteries of Divine Providence. Dr. Culbertson had spent several years in the translation of the sacred Scriptures into the Chinese language, and it is a cause of thanksgiving that he was permitted to complete this great work of his life. Mrs. Culbertson and her children have arrived, and Mrs. Gayley and her child are on their way to this country. Very liberal provision was made for their support, by friends in the mercantile community at Shanghai. Besides these bereavements, several of the mission families were called to part with beloved children; these sad bereavements have been mentioned in the missionary periodicals. The health of the Rev. J. A. Danforth, became so seriously affected that his return to this country was necessary. He arrived in January, with health greatly improved. Dr. and Mrs. McCartee, returned to Ningpo from Japan, but were not not able to remain long there. They are now at Chefoo, and it is hoped that in the better climate of Shantung, they may be permitted to continue in the missionary work which they have so much at heart. The other changes to be noticed here are the return of Mrs. H. V. Rankin, to Ningpo, from her visit to this country, with health much improved; and the sailing for China of the Rev. A. Folsom, and his wife, on the 21st of February, to be connected with the Canton mission.

Preaching—Churches.

At all the stations public worship is regularly conducted in chapels, and the gospel is proclaimed in the bazars, and on journeys made for that purpose; the native assistants also are employed in disseminating the knowledge of the Saviour, by conversation with their own people, and in other ways. The missionaries speak of the attendance at the chapels as becoming larger, more regular, and marked by greater apparent interest in their message; yet in too many cases the usual indifference of heathenism to the gospel is painfully manifest. The brethren at Shanghai, make special reference to their services in the evening, as attracting steady and attentive audiences. The out-stations in the Sanpoh district were less frequently visited by the missionaries from Ningpo, on account of the insurgent invasion. In Shantung, extensive missionary tours were made. And from Canton frequent visits to Fat-shan were the means of spreading a knowledge of divine truth to some extent in that large city; and excursions were also made by two of the missionaries to preach in some of the many places open to them in the vicinity of Canton.

There are churches now at nearly all the stations, one having been organized at Canton, and one at Tungchow last year. Each of these received several members by baptism, and all the churches were called to part with some of their members, removed as there is reason to hope to the communion of the church invisible. A satisfactory report is made of the Christian walk and conversation of the native communicants; some of them will exert a useful influence on their own people. The brethren at Ningpo speak of their having the subject of a native pastorate under consideration, and hope to see this important measure accomplished at an early day. The returns of communicants are as follows:

Canton,	7.
Shanghai,	12.
Ningpo,	84.
Yuyan,	33.
Tungchow,	12.

Native Missionary Assistants.

The brethren are able to report the names of nineteen native missionary labourers. Most of these are connected with the Ningpo mission, and are fruits of the excellent school which has been a marked feature of the missionary work in that city. Several of these native assistants are under the care of the Presbytery, and special pains are taken with their instruction and training for greater usefulness. The missionaries speak in warm terms of this goodly company of native labourers, and they are much at a loss where to employ them, "the great difficulty is in choosing the place that is most promising among so many hundred villages." Four graduates of the boys' school, last year were prepared at once to enter on useful labours as teachers or assistant teachers. These native missionaries find suitable companions for life in the graduates of the girls' school at Ningpo, which has long proved a means of great good to the native church and community.

Missionary Education.

Missionary schools do not form as large a department of the work in China as in India, but they have been marked with encouraging results. They are of two classes, boarding and day-schools, the latter being elementary in their instructions. The former are composed of pupils, whose parents agree to place them under the sole charge of the missionaries for a term of years. They are then carefully taught the branches of a good plain education, usually in their own tongue, and in numerous instances by the blessing of God on faithful instruction they have been brought into the fold of Christ, and have become fitted for great usefulness among their own people. There has been a marked advance in this kind of missionary agency at Shanghai, as will be noticed under the head of that station. The new field of labour in Shantung is also open for missionary schools, and the brethren are anxious to establish them there without delay, but the Committee have been able to authorize only one day school to be opened for boys at Tungchow. A day school in Bao-ko-tah, a village near Ningpo, is referred to with special interest, as a means of spreading a knowledge of the gospel, and particularly as itself the fruit of native Christian missionary labour. This school has been the honored means of a number of hopeful conversions of souls since it was first commenced. The character of the schools and the number of scholars, are indicated in the following returns.

At Canton—	three boys' day schools,	scholars,	133
	one girls' "	"	37
At Canton—	one girls' boarding school,	scholars,	10
Ningpo and vicinity—	five day schools,	"	—

The Press at Shanghai.

The cylinder printing-press, after unavoidable delay, is now in use. Mr. Gamble is prosecuting the work of preparing a new font of type, which will add much to the efficiency of the press. The issues of the year were 8,396,570 pages, of which over 2,600,000 pages were of the Holy Scriptures. Two editions of the Bible are now in press, one in octavo, the other in royal octavo on larger type. The publications of this establishment have been widely circulated in China, and the prospect of usefulness by this means is almost boundless.

Dr. Martin's arrival at Shanghai, and his remaining there, if but for a season, rendered good service in the publications of the press, supplying the place left vacant by the lamented death of Dr. Culbertson.

Notices of Stations.

Canton.—Of the seven members admitted to the church by baptism, one was soon called to depart this life. He was a young man of good promise, a teacher, and the hope is expressed that "he died in the firm faith of the gospel." In this city there are virtually two stations, the residences of the missionaries being in two neighborhoods, far apart. Arrangements were nearly completed for Mr. Condit's removal to Fat-shan, a site having been secured after much difficulty, and a house erected; but the house was reduced to a mass of ruins in the terrible typhoon of July. Mr. Condit's house in Canton was destroyed by fire in the preceding month, and the temporary quarters occupied by him afterward were greatly injured in the typhoon; but he and his family were mercifully preserved in both these times of peril. The medical department of the mission continues to be conducted with energy and success, both in Canton and Fat-shan. "The hospital in Canton has afforded unusual facilities for gaining access to people of rank." Several mandarins and a prefect of a department availed themselves of its advantages, and had their attention directed at the same time to the gospel. The number of cases reported was very large. It was doubtless with reference to these medical-missionary labours that the governor-general of Canton remarked to a member of the mission, "I know you; you are doing a good work."

Ningpo.—The occupation of this city by the rebels, from December to May, and their possession of the San-poh district during a considerable part of the year, interfered seriously with the usual labours of the mission. Special prayers had been offered by the missionaries and the native Christians, in expectation of trouble from the rebel invasion, and these prayers were graciously answered in the preservation of all connected with the churches and schools from death, and also from captivity with the exception of three—an elder, a teacher, and a member of the church in San-poh, who have not been heard from. Some of the native brethren in Ningpo had been seized by the rebels, but were given up at the request of the missionaries. The native community seem to believe that their exemption from still greater destruction was owing to the intervention of foreigners, and especially of the missionaries, in their behalf. They express great thankfulness for this favour, and this feeling would contribute much to secure a favourable reception of the instructions of their missionary friends.

Two deaths of native Christians are recorded; both aged persons, and both supported by a good hope of eternal life. Eight new communicants were admitted to the church in Ningpo, one of whom had been baptized on the profession of faith of his parents, the others were received by baptism at the time. One new member was received in the church at Yuyiau, San-poh. Other persons are reported as inquirers throughout the year; of these an unusual number were at the sub-station of Bao-kô-tah. Four of the girls in the boarding-school are among the lately-received communicants.

Shanghai.—The special feature in the missionary work of this year was the completion of the new translation of the Bible by the lamented Dr. Culbertson. It is the joint work of Drs. Bridgeman and Culbertson, excepting the last few books of the Old Testament, after the lamented death of Dr. Bridgeman. A small but well-conducted boarding-school for girls, which owes its existence and its excellent condition to the labours of Mrs. Bridgeman, was transferred to the mission of the Board when she left China, and funds for its support for some time were also turned over to the mission. The school is now under the charge of Mr. and Mrs. Roberts. The interesting boarding-school for boys continues under the care of Mr. and Mrs. Farnham, by whose faith and energy it has been formed. The press building, with a chapel on the rear, but fronting on a crowded thoroughfare, which contains also rooms for a family, and a new dwelling-house, are both now completed. They are in an eligible site, procured for the mission through the liberality of two friends, and the buildings were erected partly by the generous gifts of friends, and partly by the sale of a house formerly occupied in a situation less suitable for the purposes of the mission.

Special attention is called to the growing importance of this city as a missionary station. Its population is now estimated at over a million of souls. It is the chief port of commerce in the East, with every prospect of great increase in its commercial interests. It affords access to a large part of the interior of China, through its coastwise and inland commerce, particularly that which is freighted on the Mississippi of that country—the Yang-tse river. The missionary force of our church at Shanghai ought to be large enough for the work given us to do.

Tungchow.—The new mission in Shantung occupies Tungchow as its first station. Its beginning has been tried with repeated bereavements, which have been already narrated, and these, it may be hoped, will prove a discipline to the church at home and to the missionaries in the field, which shall be followed by unusual success. A chapel, easily reached from the principal business-street in the city, was early obtained, and religious services have been held in it without interruption. At first, under the attraction of novelty, the attendance was large. "During the literary examinations in the summer, the city was thronged with scholars from all parts of the country, and the chapel was kept open from morning until ten or eleven o'clock at night, with large audiences of interested listeners most of the time." The interest of novelty having passed away, the attendance is much smaller. Two missionary journeys were made, including a circuit of about 600 miles, the larger cities and towns of the promontory being visited. The missionaries were well received, and preached the gospel to a large number of people who heard it for the first time. "By the blessing of God," the report of the mission says, "our time of sowing has also been a time of reaping. Six persons have been received into the church by baptism, most of whom give pleasing evidence of piety and growth in grace. Besides these, an aged man, whom we expected to baptize soon, died early in the winter, and two inquirers are taken away by cholera. A few more are in a more or less hopeful state." The brethren are anxious to establish schools, for which the way is open. They hope that the funds of the Board will soon authorize the employment of this means of spreading the gospel.

Chefoo.—Dr. McCartee would probably occupy a second station at or near Chefoo. The whole province of Shantung may be considered open to missionary labour. The inhabitants seem to be more free from prejudice than their countrymen in the southern part of the country, and to be a more hardy and energetic people. The climate, too, is spoken of as remarkably favourable to health. And the missionaries urgently plead for more labourers. The population of Shantung is estimated at 29,000,000. The whole number of missionaries in the province can hardly exceed half a score.

The foregoing accounts of the missionary work in this empire will show that this work is well begun, but that it is only a beginning which has yet been made. It should never be forgotten by the Church that the vast population of this country is now accessible by missionaries to a degree hardly surpassed elsewhere. It should also be remembered that the labourers are few—few indeed, for so great a field. And it should be observed with great thankfulness that God is granting such precious proofs of his blessing on the labours of his servants.

Mission in Japan.

Yokohama.—On the bay, a few miles below Yedo; occupied in 1862, by removal from Kanagawa, which was occupied in 1859; missionary labourers—James C. Hepburn, M. D., and his wife; Rev. David Thompson.

Mr. Thompson embarked for this mission on the 1st of December. Mrs. Hepburn embarked for Japan, on her return, by way of San Francisco, on the 11th of November.

It having been found very difficult, if not impossible, to remain at Kanagawa, on account of the opposition of the Japanese authorities to the residence of foreigners at that place, Dr. Hepburn was led to purchase a piece of land in Yokohama—the town where foreigners in this part of the country mostly live. It is situated just opposite Kanagawa, across the bay. The ground purchased is large enough for two dwelling-houses and a school room, which may be used as a chapel, and as a dispensary, and which can be enlarged hereafter to accommodate a printing-press, if this should be considered a desirable object. One dwelling-house and a small building for a school room and dispensary have been erected, and Dr. Hepburn removed to this new residence on the 28th of December. The acquisition of this property involved considerable expense, but it was necessary almost to the continued existence of the mission in this part of Japan, and it will afford important advantages to the health of the missionaries, and to the usefulness of their labours. If at any time it should become expedient to remove the mission to some other place, this property can be easily sold at a considerable advance on its cost. Such a change is not perhaps likely to be made, and the supporters of the mission may share with the missionary the feelings of gratitude to God, with which he took possession of this eligible property as belonging to the church, and as a pledge of her having a permanent home in the land, with the hope of widely extended influence for good among the people.

In giving a report of the past year, Dr. Hepburn first acknowledges the goodness of God, in the continued enjoyment of health, and his being enabled to give all his strength to his work. He then speaks of this work as being as yet mainly one of preparation. He had turned his attention particularly to the reading of books by Japanese authors, in order to become acquainted with the way of composing in their language, to learn their mode of thinking, and also to collect words for his own use. His teacher has been employed during a part of the time in translating the Scriptures from Chinese into Japanese—"In this way," it is stated, "he has translated Mark, John, and Genesis, and a part of Exodus. This translation is very imperfect, but will make a good beginning." A number of copies of the whole Bible, and of Way's Geography, in Chinese, were sold to Japanese acquainted with that language. The Geography the Japanese "have dressed up in their own mongrel Chinese and Japanese character, and published, leaving out all there was on the subject of Christianity in the original." Near the end of the year, native informants gave the pleasing intelligence, that the government would hereafter permit books to be published without any suppression of what relates to the Christian religion. If confirmed, this news may be regarded as a decided mark of progress.

In his medical labours, Dr. Hepburn reports no relaxing of the hindrances referred to in the report of last year. The dispensary was not allowed to be open, but still, he says, "hardly a day has passed in which I have not had some patients to prescribe for. Most of them come to my house, having first obtained permission from the officials to do so. I have visited many at their own dwellings; amongst them have been officials and gentry of some rank."

A novel and interesting application was made to the missionary near the end of the year, through the American Consul, by some of the native officials, that he would consent to instruct a few Japanese youths in Geometry and Chemistry. Giving his consent, he was after some time visited by quite a deputation of officers, who brought nine young men with them to be placed under his instruction. To his great surprise he soon found that these young men had already advanced in mathematical studies as far as most graduates of colleges, so that he could not teach them in these studies anything which they had not already learned. They had acquired this learning from Dutch books, under the instruction of a Japanese teacher, self-taught in the Dutch language. These young men were learning English, including lessons concerning Christian doctrines and duties, and though no attempt was permitted to teach directly the truths of the Christian religion, yet in the relations into which they are brought with its warm-hearted teacher they can hardly fail to learn the way of life.

The Japanese government has erected a large building at Yedo, to be used for the purpose of teaching English to their people, but as yet they have employed only native teachers. It also publishes a newspaper, in imitation of the foreign newspaper, which appears once a month, but which Dr. Hepburn describes as little more than a translation of a Dutch newspaper printed at Batavia, and as not giving Japanese news. Nevertheless it is noteworthy as one of the signs of the times.

There have been events, such as the assassination of some of the foreigners, and the reported outbreaks between the daimios, or native chiefs, which have created a feeling of apprehension concerning the continuance of peaceful relations between this country and foreign powers. There seems to be a reactionary movement among the governing classes against opening the country to the residence and commerce of foreigners. And there is but little reason to doubt that a revolution has been effected, nearly destroying the power of the Ziogoon, or Tycoon, the military sovereign, whose court is at Yedo, and transferring the administration of civil affairs to the Mikado, or spiritual sovereign, whose court is at Miako—a revolution based largely on this adverse policy towards intercourse with foreign nations; but it is not yet complete, and its object may be partly that of gaining a more general distribution among native rulers and officials of the commercial benefits, which this intercourse is supposed to confer. In any case the foreign community at Yokohama will be protected. Nor can it be reasonably supposed that the country can ever revert to its former isolation from the rest of the world. The marks of progress are too visible. The will of God seems to be evidently disclosed, that this nation is henceforth to be within reach of foreign commerce, and, what is infinitely more important, within reach also of the servants of Christ, carrying with them the priceless benefits of the gospel. Dr. Hepburn well says, "We believe the Lord is working out his great plans toward this nation, and that it will not be long that any human power will be permitted to shut out the bread of life from this starving people." These views, and still more the teaching of the Word of God, by precept and promise, show the importance of vigorously prosecuting this interesting mission, and also the grounds of encouragement to expect soon results of the best kind.

Mission to the Chinese in California.

San Francisco.—Rev. Augustus W. Loomis and his wife.

The letters received from the missionary during the last year show that his labours have been steadily carried forward, and that they have not been in vain in the Lord. The discouraging features of the work still exist. The Chinese come to this country, without their families, as adventurers, expecting to stay but a few years, to make money, and then to return to China. While here they lead an unsettled life, and are seldom to be found long in the same place. So far as religion is concerned, they are very much like their countrymen at home—without God in the world, in deep ignorance of spiritual truths, and living as heathens, in the practice of iniquity under but little restraint. To these must be added the dislike with which they are regarded by most of our countrymen, and the oppression to which they are subjected, making them almost defenceless against injury by bad men, and resulting in their looking with prejudice on the religion of the people amongst whom such outrages can be perpetrated without redress.

On the other hand, there are views well fitted to encourage the church in the earnest support of this mission. These poor heathen immigrants have been brought here by Divine Providence, to learn many lessons which they could not learn at home,—lessons well fitted to break up the apathetic paganism of their previous life; and here they are readily within reach of Christian instruction and example. They are met by the Christian missionary when they land at San Francisco, and many of them learn to prize the friendly interest of himself and of some Christian people in their welfare, valuing it the more because of the scorn and dislike which so commonly meet them. They are invited to the mission chapel, they are supplied with Christian publications, they are watched over with kindly and constant interest. Some of them are brought to a saving knowledge of Christ and become witnesses unto him among their countrymen. Large numbers of them return to China, and carry with them ideas of this life and of the life to come, which will bear fruit amongst multitudes who will never hear the voice of a preacher of the gospel.

It is the happiness of our esteemed missionary to preach the gospel to these 60,000 Chinese, as opportunity offers and strength permits, and he is the only minister of the Christian religion who labours exclusively for their salvation. It is the privilege of our church to support him in this work. It is needless to give extended details of his labours. His interesting articles in the Record and Foreign Missionary show the nature of his duties. As in previous years, he has conducted services in the chapel; he has visited them in their halls, shops, and other places of access to them; he has held many conversations with them; he has distributed the Scriptures and tracts among them, some copies going with them to the mining districts and elsewhere in the interior, other copies accompanying them back to China. He has been instant—in season, out of season, and under a great variety of circumstances—in seeking to save the souls of these heathen strangers in the land. And it was his privilege to admit three hopeful converts to the church by baptism; all of them young men of much promise as to useful influence amongst their own people.

The Committee desire earnestly to commend this mission and its devoted labourers to the confidence and sympathy of the churches, asking for them a continued and special interest in the prayers of the people of God.

Missions in Papal Europe.

Stations.—In Italy, France, Belgium, etc.

Belgium.—Churches and stations are under the care of the Belgian Missionary Church, at Antwerp, Brussells, Charleroi, Ghent, Grivegnee, Houdeng-la-Louviere, Jumet, Liege, Lize-Seraing, Louvain, Namur, Nessonvaux, Sprimont, Courtrai, Frameries, Stree et Beaumont, and Wasmes. At most of these places there is a pastor or minister of the gospel, but at a few of them only a lay-evangelist. In Brussells there are three churches—two in which services are held in French and one in Flemish; in four other places the services are also conducted in Flemish. There are schools in eleven of these stations, but they do not generally afford much encouragement. Seven colporteurs are employed, and a depository of tracts in Brussells is maintained. The number of evangelical labourers at the different station, including about a dozen of teachers, male and female, is less than fifty—about one-half of them ministers of the gospel; while their field of labour contains 4,500,000 inhabitants. Though so few in number, their labours have not been in vain. Some accessions to their churches are reported, and some also to the church in heaven. It was with sincere regret the Committee found themselves able to send only $726 in aid of the missionary work of the brethren in this country.

Holland.—The Netherland Evangelical Protestant Union had in its service, according to the last report received, seventeen evangelists and two colporteurs. The labours of the evangelists averaged eight months of the year each, so that the number of full labourers in this department was not quite equal to twelve. In the too general prevalence of formality in the national church of the country, and the lamentable indifference to spiritual things which marks the lives of most persons, this little company of earnest evangelical labourers, by the blessing of God, may do much good. The income of the Society was under $2,000,—a considerable part of which was remitted by the Board. Besides this Society, other and much larger evangelical organizations exist in this country,—chief among which is a body that separated from the established church nearly thirty years ago, and which now embraces between two hundred and three hundred congregations and over two hundred ministers and students of theology. The Romanist ecclesiastics are very active, and a third part of the population of Holland is said to be really or nominally under the influence of this corrupt church.

France.—The last report of the Central Protestant Society of Evangelization gives information from fifty stations and about eighty sub-stations, at which fifty-one missionary agents are employed. Thirty of these are pastors or evangelists; the others are teachers, etc. About fifty students are under instruction in a preparatory school of theology—a school which in the ten years since it was established has furnished a number of young men for the theological seminaries at Montauban, Strasburgh and Geneva. Some of these are now able and faithful ministers of the New Testament. The income of this Society was $28,540.

The Evangelical Society of France reports the names of eleven pastors, two superintending and itinerant ministers, nine evangelists or readers of the Bible, and forty-six male and female teachers as comprising its list of labourers. These are found in sixteen different cities or towns; but the largest work of the Society is conducted in Paris, where five ministers, two evangelists, and twenty-three teachers are employed. The receipts of the Society were $31,398.

The Evangelical Society of Geneva has under its care thirty-one stations, mostly in France, but one is in Savoy and one in Algiers; twelve ministers, fourteen male and seven female teachers, and eight evangelists, besides twenty colporteurs. Its distinguishing work is the School of Theology in Geneva, with which two of its founders, Drs. Gaussen and Merle d'Aubigné, are still connected. Forty-three students were in attendance on the instructions of this Seminary. Besides its missionary labours in France, this Society conducts an important work of evangelization in Geneva itself, the expense of which is defrayed by its friends in this city. The income of this Society was $31,240.

Towards the support of the work of evangelization in France, the Committee were able to remit only the sum of $1,453. A much larger amount might have been sent to good advantage.

Italy.—The Waldensian Church maintains missionary services at about twenty stations in this country, some of which are in important cities, such as Turin, Florence, etc. Connected with these, there are more than twenty ministers and teachers. The Theological Seminary at Florence is becoming well established, and will do much to supply the great want of well trained native missionary labourers. On all the Italian work of evangelization by the Vaudois Synod the blessing of God seems to rest. Towards the support of its Theological Seminary and its missions, the Committee remitted the sum of $2,169,—with regret that a larger sum could not have been sent to Christian brethren so highly esteemed, and placed by Providence in circumstances that enable them to become the chief agents for the spread of the gospel in Italy.

The Protestant churches in Belgium, France, and Italy embrace but a small part of the inhabitants of these countries, especially in the first and last. Even in France the Protestants of all recognized classes form but little more than a twentieth part of the population. The Annual Report of the Belgian Missionary Church refers to this fact as one of the marked features of its field of labour, and it then analyses the mass of the population belonging at least nominally to the Roman church. The least numerous class it describes as consisting of earnest-minded persons, seeking rest to their souls in the religious services of their church; but they form a very small part of the adherents of Rome. They above others deserve sympathy, and more than others are they prepared to receive the glad tidings of salvation in Christ Jesus. Next to this small minority is the class of those who with a certain regularity attend on what they call their religious duties, but not from inward conviction so much as from habit, the force of example, custom, a regard to their material interests, etc. In some places this class includes considerable numbers. The third class, forming a decided majority in the cities and larger centres of the population, includes those who never have recourse to the priests, except for services connected with marriage, baptism, or burial. Among them reigns a vague deism, scepticism, materialism, or pantheism, sometimes even a mixture of several of these theories. Among educated persons one may find these opinions reduced to system; among the ignorant there is little faith in anything, and none in the priest or the church. At the best, there is everywhere extreme indifference to everything which concerns the life to come—salvation, sanctification, and peace to the soul.

This representation of the followers of the Pope in Belgium will unhappily be found to describe correctly the condition of Roman Catholics in most other countries, in which Romanism is the prevailing religion. In such a state of things, one can readily see that evangelical views of religion, earnestly set before the people, are the only means by which they can be led to Christ in order to obtain eternal life.

Mission to the Jews.

New York.—Rev. John Neander.

During several weeks Mr. Neander was laid aside from his work by serious illness. With this exception, he has continued to preach to his German congregation in Williamsburgh, across the East river from New York, and to call on the Jews at their houses and places of business in the city and its vicinity, and also to visit the city prison and hospital. His labours in these various ways have been severe, and they have been such as to exert a useful influence among two classes of people, one of them forming a large part of the population in certain districts,—classes which are almost equally in need of the gospel. In his German work, he continues to meet with much encouragement. The church became too strait for the increasing congregation, every corner and even the pulpit steps being occupied; galleries were then put in, which increase considerably its room, and the expense of this enlargement was defrayed by donations obtained chiefly among the Germans, mostly in small sums, which yet were liberal gifts, as most of this people are in very limited circumstances.

Among the Jews, Mr. Neander's custom is to spend a part of each day, usually, in making calls, speaking to them of Christ as the Saviour, and giving tracts to such as are willing to receive them. He reports a friendly reception by many persons, and some degree of apparently sincere interest in the gospel amongst a few, but he was not allowed during the last year to welcome any of his kinsmen according to the flesh into the fold of the Christian church. He has been visited by Jews at his own house for religious conversation, and he has found the members of his German church exerting a good influence on German Jews, by their Christian example and by their good words for Christ as the Saviour. In his opinion, a kindly feeling towards Christians is on the increase amongst the Hebrew population of this city.

The Church must not despise any effort to spread the gospel, however humble and feeble it may be in the sight of men. Nor must she regard any class of people as beyond its saving power. There is some reason for believing that the work thus described has not been in vain, and this should call forth thanks to the grace of God, and should lead to the exercise of more faith and the offering of prayer for a larger measure of the divine blessing on this mission. Increased faith and prayer on the part of the Church would result in enlarged efforts to make the gospel known to the ancient people of God.

The Committee have found the year, now ending, to be one of more than ordinary solicitude. The interests of the missionary cause have seemed to be in much more than ordinary peril. The war waged by the country for its existence has engrossed public attention to a large extent, absorbing means in its progress which in most years would have been devoted to missionary purposes, and turning the minds of men from the case of those abroad who are perishing for lack of vision. The increased cost of remitting funds to the missions has been mentioned; it has been a most serious ground of discouragement. In no former year did the Committee feel more deeply their need of the help of God and the coöperation and sympathy of their brethren. It is, therefore, with deep thankfulness they are able to make so good a report of this work, at home and abroad. The fact that the mission treasury is in the good condition already reported, at the end of such a year, is one which will call forth warm thanksgiving. This result has indeed been partly reached by restricting the missionary work in certain respects, but not in its general outline nor in its main force, so that the Committee report with unalloyed pleasure the case as it stands—bearing witness to the faith, self-denial and liberal devising of very many members of our communion, alike of the rich and the poor. To the grace of God be the praise! And to the same grace should thanks be given that so many approved brethren are still willing and offering to go out as missionaries.

As to the work abroad, the foregoing Report shows many reasons of thanksgiving and encouragement—in the doors still open for missionary labour, the labourers still living and faithful in their work, the brethren called home to their rest after lives of such eminent usefulness, the native communicants, the native assistants, the companies of youth and children under instruction, the Scriptures translated, printed, and disseminated, the gospel-seed sown broadcast, the gospel leaven implanted in so many centres of influence—all showing the presence of the Lord Jesus with his servants, and the power of the Holy Ghost in the salvation of souls. For these and other proofs of the divine blessing on these missions, the Church will give thanks and praise to God. So far as the work itself is concerned, the Committee see little cause of discouragement, and many reasons of hope, especially in the faith that the Saviour is on his mediatorial throne, having all power in heaven and in earth, and wielding this power for the destruction of the Great Adversary, and of everything that exalteth itself against God, and for the establishment of his kingdom of righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost.

These reasons of encouragement all point to greater progress. The Committee must not close this Report without expressing their conviction that the work of missions should be greatly enlarged. More men for Africa, more for South America, more for India, more for Siam, more for China, more for Japan, many more for such of these nations as are crowded with people, numbered by scores and even hundreds of millions, but which have only a few scores of ministers of the gospel, should be pleaded for at the throne of grace, —and especially more labourers to be raised up in the different missionary fields. The means of supporting an increased number of labourers would be provided, if our Christian people could reach a higher standard of consecration, if all would send forward their gifts as do some of their brethren, if the claims of our perishing world were affectionately pressed on each follower of Christ, one by one.

Grace from on high will be given. The followers of Christ will be enabled to do far more for the spread of the gospel, perhaps, as the result of gracious discipline in these times of trial. The means employed will be more and more successful, until the gospel is preached to every creature, and "the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea." In the faith and hope of this, the Committee here end their review of the missionary work of the last year.

SOWING IN HOPE.

Pennsylvania.

After the full report made the previous quarter, little has occurred in our church requiring special mention. Indeed, as in the management of a family the affectionate parent ofttimes must, with patient and loving endeavour, meet perplexing and toilsome cares, which are, however, of such a nature as wholly to forbid exterior mention and esoteric sympathy, so also the devoted missionary pastor must plod his toilsome way, with little, if aught, occurring calculated to compensate notice from without, and much less calculated to solicit it, for his ordinary life is spent in the rough foundation work that others, by the grace of God, may, in the after-coming days of self-sustentation, complete and joyously reside in the finished edifice evangelical. 'Tis his to be patiently disentangling misunderstandings, soothing wounded hearts, pouring oil upon troubled waters, quelling turbulent emotions and turbulent speech; rebuking, exhorting, entreating, beseeching; now with God's holy words—arrows in the hands of the mighty—piercingly penetrating the conscience with stinging convictions, and arousing the soul to self-reproof and repentance; anon ministering provisions of grace and promises of mercy—as dew upon Hermon, as the early and the latter rain,—reviving, refreshing, nurturing, elevating, edifying, ennobling; uniting in close bonds of eternal amity and efficient co-operation in gospel activities, a membership not naturally drawing together, nor natively congenial; though way-worn and weary, and longing to be permitted to pass from service in the "sanctuary of sorrow," and to enter the fields of ever-living fruition, yet ever fresh and full of glad tidings, and cheerfully hopeful, must the missionary pastor meet and lead his flock; and yet, withal, from week to week, from month to month, must he himself wonder that so few results appear prominently to evince his faithful toil. Ah! brother, it is not harvest time with our church yet. But do not understand me to intend or to express, even remotely, any discontent or disheartenment at the fallow work, which must needs be toiled through, though the ploughing is made vexatious sometimes by running against roots of bitterness, or embedded rocks of prejudice, or into cold, clogging soil, and morassy swales of apathy and worldliness; no, no, plants already are set in this garden of the Lord, whose fruits, even thus early, give promise of gracious renown. We can, and do look forward with grateful satisfaction, to the proximate (as we trust near) fulness of beauty and fruitfulness of this new garden, and to the delights which the Divine Master will take in it with his beloved.

Our Sabbath-school is enlarging and otherwise improving. There is a sad want of male teachers. The infant department is flourishing. I have not only to superintend the school, but have at the same time sole charge of the Bible class of large girls—a nursery of teachers.

MISSIONARY WORK AT GREEN BAY.

Dear Brother—Another quarter of my labours in this field is ended, and though I have no very remarkable fact to report, yet I can say that the Lord has been very gracious to us, and has given us abundant cause for rejoicing. Here, although the Romish priest has not spared any thing to darken the truth and to oppose it, I have had a very pleasant time in visiting the people around, who, in spite of the suggestions of the priest, have kindly received me, and listen to the reading and explanation of the Scripture with a remarkable interest. Some new hearers, in spite of the wrath of the priest, dare to attend my preaching; many would come, but dare not—some come in the evening, but do not in day-time.

On the fifth of April we celebrated the Lord's Supper for the first time—it was a blessed season. On that occasion sixteen persons presented themselves for admission, and were examined by the session. Eleven of them have been received, and five were advised to delay their connection with the church till they should get more light from above, and through the grace of God they have not felt bad on account of that, but they seemed all to understand well the solemnity of the act they are about to do, and the necessity of being well prepared for it. I hope some of these will be admitted the next time.

Our Sabbath-school has been attended by from fifty to sixty persons, of whom thirty-five are children. Most of these could not read six months ago, and now a good number can read the New Testament. Some are learning the little catechism, and recite by heart on the Sabbath-lessons in the New Testament, and answer readily the questions I put to them. Eight or nine of these children have learned to sing many of the hymns, in English, of the Sabbath-school Bell. Some of them seem to feel a sense of their sinfulness, and the need of a Saviour. Considering that it is but seven months since we first started the Sabbath-school, and that these children were in a very crude state, the results are very encouraging, and have surpassed all my expectations. May the Lord continue to us his kind blessings, and enlarge this school, and make it still more productive of good fruit for his own glory and the salvation of these poor children.

Our congregation has increased; although many have been called to the army last fall, and some have moved away, it is larger than it was then. We have an attendance averaging from eighty to ninety persons, who listen to the preaching of the gospel with a deep interest.

In other places around, there is also a great demand for spiritual help. In the town of G. B., fifteen miles from here, some awakening seems to have taken place. It appears that a goodly number are now tired with the mummeries of Rome, and sigh after the everlasting truth. Some Bibles and tracts have been given to them, which they read with great interest. At Oconto, a little town on the west shore of the Bay, forty-five miles distant from here, there lives a large French population, where there is no evangelical preaching, and no Protestant church of any kind—there is a Roman Catholic church and a priest. I have a few French protestant families there—one especially being religiously active, making the light of the gospel to shine round them, and spreading a blessed influence. I can visit them but a few times during the year, for they are too far off, and my time is required at many places this side of the bay. Lately many Roman Catholics have been awakened there. They requested me to send them Bibles and books, and to go and preach to them. I sent them some Bibles, but I do not know yet when I will be able to go there. Often I am much perplexed to know which is the best for me to do, go here or there. For to do permanent good among the Romanists, it is necessary to give to them at once all the light possible, to make them to understand well the difference there is between the teaching of the Bible and that of Rome. To preach only once a while among them is to lose one's time—for soon they fall again under the bondage of the priest, or they run into infidelity. Many of those who were awakened a year ago, have been hardened now, and will not do any thing good—they become more confirmed drunkards, and as we have many accomplished infidels from France here, their example is followed by those who are disgusted with Rome, and who cannot be reached with the gospel. Therefore if this field is not better supplied with faithful labourers, much good will be lost for ever, and infidelity will cover the land, which otherwise would have been covered with the light of the gospel.

A CHURCH BUILT UNDER DISCOURAGEMENTS—GOD'S BLESSING ON HIS PEOPLE'S WORK.

Indiana.

Dear Sir—I ought by this time to drop you a line, and speak of that good Providence which has thus far sustained me and mine, and permitted us to continue our labours in this part of the vineyard. I regret that I cannot tell of many souls hopefully converted here since my last. Most earnestly do I hope that the day of refreshing from on high may come, and that, too, right early; but as yet it has not come. I believe precious seed has been sown—the harvest will come when the Lord of the harvest wills it. Meantime it is for us to continue anxiously and hopefully in earnest in the work.

One year ago we were obliged to abandon our little old house of worship, as no longer safe. We put chains around the piers, between the windows, and with long levers in the street, drew them out, and the structure came to the ground with a crash. It was a day of discouragement. We went to the work amid evil predictions, and sorrowful prospects. Some of our brethren, to whom we felt that we had a right to look for sympathy and support, uttered most disheartening words. Our oldest elder, who in other evil days had stood up manfully for his church, deserted us, to our great sorrow, and made his home in a richer church. Others, with whom many of us had for many years "walked to the house of God in company," stood aloof from us. It was a dark day indeed for our little church. But we remembered the divine command, "Call upon me in the day of trouble," and tried to obey it. We came together and consulted. It was clearly seen that we must build or disband. Some felt great reluctance to doing the latter, who scarcely felt that it was possible to do the former. But we resolved to go forward. We said, "Such a house as we can build, without leaving ourselves in debt, we will build." And we have built. All the particulars, the doubts, and fears, and oppositions, and strange remarks, it would not interest you to hear about, but you may be assured there were enough of them.

But, the house is up, is painted over, is carpeted, and has been solemnly dedicated to the service of the Great Head of the church. All pronounce it neat, comfortable, tasteful, substantial. It is built of brick; is thirty-six feet by fifty, besides the porch in front, which adds ten feet more to its length. At present it seats about two hundred and sixty, and we can easily make it seat three hundred, which is more than the average congregation of any church in the city. And it is paid for. Laus Deo.

Our congregation is now gathering in again. The Sabbath-school has been reorganized, and we earnestly hope and believe our labour in the Lord is not in vain. The predictions of those who prophesied failure, have certainly been false, so far as the building is concerned, and it is our earnest hope and prayer that hereafter they may not "be faithless, but believing;" and that they and we may yet earnestly "strive together for the faith of the gospel." We are well assured that those who have laboured most diligently in this enterprise, have enjoyed life quite as well as those who have feared, and hesitated, and done nothing. And so it always is. Let God's children believe it. They prosper about as well as others, at the same time, in temporal things. Let them believe this also.

REVIVAL.

Dear Brother—The last quarter of my first year has closed. I trust the year has not been without fruits. In March, a protracted meeting was held in the Buffalo church, commencing with the sacramental meeting, that continued sixteen days. Dr. G. W. Thompson assisted me three days. With the exception of two sermons preached by the Rev. Mr. Klupp, of the German Reformed church, I did all the labour myself. I preached twice a day, and conducted the inquiry-meeting. There were seventy-six inquirers—many members of the churches. The work was solemn, with deep feeling. On last Sabbath, which was our regular communion season in that church, the session admitted ten on examination and three on certificate. There will be many more additions. I do not urge people to unite with the church until they are prepared. It is too much the habit of this community to unite with the churches without conversion. The churches of all denominations are filled with unconverted persons. I am greatly encouraged in that field. The church is now a unit. They have two good Sabbath-schools and two weekly prayer-meetings. Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me be stirred up to magnify his holy name!

I have organized a church in Newport, consisting of fifteen members, under favourable auspices. I am in missionary grounds, so far as our church is concerned. If the Lord spares my life, and gives me grace and strength, I will endeavour to have it occupied. I never felt more like labouring in my life. I enter upon the new year with increased zeal and brighter hopes. I love the work of the ministry; I am giving myself wholly to it; may God be with me, to direct and guide me!

The churches have promptly paid me, at the end of the half-year, every dollar they have promised me. This was never done before in these churches. The people are kind, and come to hear me preach in large crowds—many who have not hitherto gone to church. If the Lord wills, I will visit your city in June, when I should like to talk to you and the Board about missions in Missouri. My heart is burdened for that people. I tell you, brother, Presbyterianism is the only thing. We must awake, and plant it all over the country.

Yours fraternally.

BOARD OF EDUCATION.

Letters and Communications for the BOARD OF EDUCATION on the subject of Ministerial Education, or of Schools, Academies, and Colleges, may be addressed to the Secretary, Rev. Dr. CHESTER, or Rev. THOMAS MCCAULEY, No. 821 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

Remittances of Money may be made to WILLIAM MAIN, Esq., Treasurer, No. 821 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

I. MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

The Board of Education has charge of the moving cause, instrumentally, both of church continuance and church progress. It deals with the vital influence. This is increased by the Board's wisdom and success; and declines and loses power and energy by the Board's feebleness. Ministers are the prime necessity. Ministers we must have. Without them we have no pastors, no evangelists, no churches, no missions. Without them, no seed is sown, and no harvest gathered; with them, they being numerous, and possessed of the spirit of Christ, we have all things. With them we have congregations, gathered and sustained; church edifices erected and filled; missionaries, domestic and foreign. We have the seed-sowing, and the cultivation, and the harvest, and the ingathering. With them we attain, as individual Christians and as an evangelical church, to a perfect man, to the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ.

We would not here intimate the thought that this Board is indispensable to our having such a ministry. We regard it as but one of the instrumentalities. It is, however, a very important one. Let the church then—let all the people, strive to make this Board just what it should be, and sustain it heartily. As God has favours for his Zion, he will bestow, as we believe, a large portion of them through this Board.

The annual report of the Board gives a total of 313 candidates. Of these, 155 are in their Theological course; and 158 in Academies and Colleges.

The receipts during the year for the candidates' fund, were $44,343.17. The balance on hand, on May 1st, was $4,436.84. It is pleasing to know that the Board has met all its obligations, and has this evidence of growing in favour with the churches, that its receipts the last year were nearly five thousand dollars greater than in the year previous.—Presbyterian Banner.

"THE ORDERING OF PRIESTS."

The following extract from the "Form and Manner of the Ordering of Priests," in use in "the United Church of England and Ireland," is well fitted to awaken serious thoughts in the minds of all who contemplate an entrance upon the work of the holy ministry.

"And now again we exhort you, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that you have in remembrance, into how high a dignity, and to how weighty an office and charge ye are called; that is to say, to be messengers, watchmen, and stewards of the Lord; to teach and to premonish, to feed and provide for the Lord's family; to seek for Christ's sheep that are dispersed abroad, and for his children who are in the midst of this naughty world, that they may be saved through Christ for ever.

"Have always, therefore, printed in your remembrance, how great a treasure is committed to your charge. For they are the sheep of Christ, which he bought with his death, and for whom he shed his blood. The church and congregation whom you must serve is his spouse and his body. And if it shall happen the same church, or any member thereof, to take any hurt or hinderance by reason of your negligence, ye know the greatness of the fault, and also the horrible punishment that will ensue. Wherefore consider with yourselves the end of your ministry towards the children of God, towards the spouse and body of Christ; and see that you never cease your labour, your care, and diligence, until you have done all that lieth in you, according to your bounden duty, to bring all such as are or shall be committed to your charge, unto that agreement in the faith and knowledge of God, and to that ripeness and perfectness of age in Christ, that there be no place left among you, either for error in religion, or for viciousness in life.

"Forasmuch, then, as your office is both of so great excellency and of so great difficulty, ye see with how great care and study ye ought to apply yourselves, as well that ye may show yourselves dutiful and thankful unto that Lord who hath placed you in so high a dignity; as also to beware that neither you yourselves offend, nor be occasion that others offend. Howbeit, ye cannot have a mind and will thereto of yourselves; for that will and ability is given of God alone: therefore ye ought, and have need, to pray earnestly for his Holy Spirit. And seeing that you cannot by any other means compass the doing of so weighty a work, pertaining to the salvation of man, but with doctrine and exhortation taken ont of the holy Scriptures, and with a life agreeable to the same; consider how studious ye ought to be in reading and learning the Scriptures, and in framing the manners, both of yourselves, and of them that especially pertain unto you, according to the rule of the same Scriptures: and for this self-same cause, how ye ought to forsake and set aside (as much as you may) all worldly cares and studies.

"We have good hope that you have well weighed and pondered these things with yourselves long before this time.; and that you have clearly determined, by God's grace, to give yourselves wholly to this office, whereunto it hath pleased God to call you; so that, as much as lieth in you, you will apply yourselves wholly to this one thing, and draw all your cares and studies this way; and that you will continually pray to God the Father, by the mediation of our only Saviour Jesus Christ, for the heavenly assistance of the Holy Ghost; that, by daily reading and weighing of the Scriptures, ye may wax riper and stronger in your ministry; and that ye may so endeavour yourselves, from time to time, to sanctify the lives of you and yours, and to fashion them after the rule and doctrine of Christ, that ye may be wholesome and godly examples and patterns for the people to follow."

The truths presented in this address are of the gravest importance, and claim the most serious attention of all who seek the sacred office. We do not believe in the doctrine of an order of priests invested with priestly authority which lifts them above that universal order of priests which embraces the whole mystical body of Christ; but maugre the errors incident to the term by which the office-bearer is designated, there are most wholesome truths contained in the address respecting the nature of the office, and the duties of him who is invested with it. To be a messenger, watchman, steward; to provide for and feed the flock of Christ; to nourish his mystical body; to reclaim the wandering, and gather into the fold those who are still far from God; is a great, an awfully responsible work. The counsel given as to the means by which this work is to be accomplished is excellent, and ought to be written over the door of every candidate's study, and engraven on his heart. This work is to be compassed "with doctrine and exhortation taken out of the holy Scriptures, and with a life agreeable to the same." To this the candidate is counselled "to apply himself wholly," and to "draw all his cares and studies this way." In other words, it is not by the truths of science, nor by human wisdom, but by the truths of revelation, that men are to be convinced of sin, and built up in holiness through faith unto salvation. In addition to this most wholesome truth, there is another propounded in the address, the recognition of which is essential to success in the ministry, viz., that the will and ability to discharge the functions of the ministry, are not of man, but of God, through the operation of the Holy Spirit. Would that England's priesthood might follow this godly counsel, and that the great principles it inculcates might be engraven on the hearts of all who desire the office of a bishop.

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

IN SCHOOLS, ACADEMIES, AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

The views presented in the subjoined report of the Miller Academy are so much to the point, on the whole question of the church's duty in regard to the Educational Institutions under her care and support, that we have thought it best, for various reasons, that it should speak for itself.

That Presbytery is greatly honoured that has such an enterprise under its supervision, and those churches must be eminently favoured, whose children are trained amid such scriptural associations. Facts speak louder than words, and if we may judge of the future from the past, we may expect great things from Miller Academy on behalf of our beloved Zion. We trust our pastors and stated supplies will carefully read what God has done in this case through the agency of brother Alexander, and that they will encourage their doubting eldership to an earnest, mutual effort, to snatch and reclaim from the toils of error and infidelity, the rising generation in more of our destitute sections—through the saving instrumentality of a well-ordered parochial school. Brother, does not your region, or Presbytery, want an efficient elementary CHURCH INSTITUTION? Such as the

MILLER ACADEMY.

Washington, Guernsey County, Ohio.

This Institution was named in honour of the Rev. Samuel Miller, whose praise is in all the churches, and who had first named, in the General Assembly, the adoption of our present system of church schools. After conducting the school for one or two years under the care of the Presbytery, the Rev. S. Mahaffey, the founder of the Institution, resigned, and was succeeded, in 1851, by the Rev. James Anderson, now of the Richland Presbytery. Owing to various discouragements and difficulties, he also resigned at the end of one year.

The enterprise had now reached the lowest point of depression—the building unfinished and in debt, the students dispersed and the doors closed—but little hope remained that the Institution would ever be revived. But in 1853, the President of the Board of Trustees, having resigned his pastoral charge of the church of Washington, on account of impaired health, undertook a voluntary agency for the Academy, and raised $1200, which paid the debt and completed the building. In the fall of the same year he was elected Principal, and is now in the tenth year of his administration.

During seven years, commencing with 1854, the annual attendance of young men, nearly all classical students, varied from 40 to 63, chiefly from Presbyterian families. This number might have been much greater but on account of the difficulty arising from having no boarding-house, and the lack of a sufficient number of private families who were willing to accommodate students. The resources from tuition fees amounted to from $400 to $600 annually. The pastors of our churches, in many cases, preferred paying $20 from their own pockets, rather than raise the money from their people. Urgency with the congregations tended to alienate their minds and hearts from their own Academy. The moral loss was greater than the material gain. These scanty resources, together with $400 received at several times from the Board of Education, constituted the whole income for the support of the Institution.

During the last two years the Miller Academy has shared largely in the common national calamity. The attendance has been reduced to the one-half of what it was before, and its resources have been diminished in the same proportion, whilst no aid could be got from the churches or from the Board of Education. Though deeply depressed, the Institution still exists and commits her future to that God who has so graciously presided over and blessed the past.

The review exhibits great cause for grateful acknowledgments to the Great Head of the church, whose blessing has accomplished so much good by such feeble instrumentality. The proportion of pious youth and of candidates for the ministry has been very large until the last two years. A Students' Bible-class and Prayer-meeting were constantly maintained, and several seasons of deep religious interest were experienced. In one of these seasons eleven students were hopefully converted. A goodly number of the teachers and students are now in the ministry of reconciliation, and others are in various stages of preparation. One has gone as a missionary to Brazil, and another has recently started to plant the standard of the cross in Japan.

These details from the history of the Miller Academy seem to indicate that church schools, like others, succeed according to the facilities afforded, and in proportion to the piety, zeal, and wisdom with which they are conducted. As brick could not be made without straw, so, generally, an ecclesiastical school for young men must have certain means of boarding students and of maintaining competent teachers. Successful institutions, under State or individual control, do not depend on tuition fees alone or mainly, but have their facilities for boarding and controlling their pupils, their invested capital, and their endowments. With these things competent teachers can always be had, and, with the blessing of God, success is certain.

Again, such temporary props as are afforded by annual collections from the churches of a Presbytery, are poor substitutes for the solid foundations on which such an institution must rely. Such collections should be made and sent to the treasury of the Board of Education, but no College or Academy can rely on what can be gleaned in this way, annually, from its own field. All that our church schools need, is just what others need—no more and no less. If, in outward arrangements and internal management, the unchangeable conditions of success are complied with, the prosperity of such institutions will be greater than that of any others, because they are more certain of being crowned with the blessing of God.

JOHN E. ALEXANDER, Principal.

THE POWER OF A HOLY LIFE.

Example carries with it a power that is everywhere felt. Its extent, however, does not seem to be fully realized. It operates silently, but only the more surely and effectually on that account. Without it, precept is of little avail. Men may recommend a certain course of life in language most forcible and eloquent; yet if that recommendation be not enforced by a corresponding example, it will be attended with but little or no effect. The exemplary, holy life of an humble Christian, does more for the benefit of our race, and the honour of Christ, than all the blustering efforts of a host of inconsistent, noisy Christians. And if the world is ever to be wholly converted to God, instances of a truly holy life must become more numerous than they are at present. Yea, it must become the supreme end of all who profess Christ, not only to profess him, but also to exemplify the principles of what they profess, in their lives. Until this shall be the case, the Christian religion will be deprived of one of its most important and powerful elements of success.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Mission House, 23 Centre Street, New York.

News received to July 13th, 1863.

MOVEMENTS OF MISSIONARIES.

The Rev. Messrs. Calvin W. Mateer and Hunter Corbett, and their wives, sailed from this port for Shanghai, on the 3d of July, in the ship St. Paul. Their field of labour will be in connection with the mission in Shantung, China. Mr. Mateer is a member of the Presbytery of Marion, and Mr. Hunter of the Presbytery of Clarion. Our readers will bear them in remembrance, we trust, in their prayers.

We learn with regret that Mr. Walsh's health had not become better. Under urgent medical advice, he had embarked for this country, via England, the extra expense of the journey in this way being defrayed by personal friends. It is hoped that the voyage, and a few months spent in a cold climate, will restore his health. Mrs. Walsh remains at Allahabad. They will meet with much sympathy in this trying separation. We also regret to learn that the health of Mr. Rankin does not improve. He was about to visit Shantung, hoping for such benefit from a sojourn there, as would prevent the necessity of his returning to this country.

From Japan we learn from Dr. Hepburn the safe arrival of his wife at Yokohama. The expenses of her visit to this country were defrayed by themselves, agreeably to their preference.

Mr. James Williams, of the Iowa mission, the death of whose wife was mentioned in our last number, has since resigned his connection with the mission, having the sympathy of the Committee, and their kind wishes for his welfare.

Mr. Schneider was making a visit at Rio, and while studying Portuguese he was assisting Mr. Blackford in the English service. This service had not been given up, as was stated, though a change had been expected to be made in the arrangements for it.

ADMISSION OF CONVERTS TO THE CHURCH.

Twenty-six communicants celebrated the Lord's Supper in Rio on the 26th of April, and a man was then received into the church by baptism, who it is hoped will do good among his countrymen. His wife would have been received at the same time, but she was unable to be present. Two other persons made application for admission, but were deferred. One adult was baptized and received into the communion of the church at Kombe, Corisco Mission, early in March. Mr. Preston reports the baptism, at Canton, of the Chinese nurse, who was so much affected by the death of Mr. and Mrs. Preston's little daughter. She seems to be a true convert. Mr. Rankin mentions a number of applications for admission to the church at Bao-kotah, Ningpo, but they were deferred. The Rev. Goloknath mentions the baptism of one of the teachers in the school at Jalandar, on the first Sabbath in March.

CRITICAL STATE OF THINGS IN JAPAN.

From Dr. Hepburn's letters and other sources of information, we learn that a war between the British and the Japanese was imminent at the latest dates. In this case it was expected that all foreigners would have to leave Yokohama, and it was not probable they would be safe at any place in Japan. The native servants, coolies, teachers, &c., had withdrawn from the service of foreigners, putting them to great inconvenience. Our missionary friends had packed up their books and some of their household goods, and expected to find refuge on the U. S. ship Wyoming, which had just arrived in the harbour. There would be much loss of property, and the probability that the mission would have to be suspended in the event of a hostile collision. Dr. Hepburn had written to Shanghai advising Mr. Thompson, who had not yet arrived, to remain in China; and the Doctor and his family expected to go to China, for the present. The war seemed to be inevitable. We shall look for the next advices, however, with some hope that it has been averted.

NEW MISSIONARIES TO BE SENT OUT.

Our readers have seen the resolution adopted by the last General Assembly, calling on the Board to go forward in the work of missions. This resolution was adopted, no doubt, in the view of the leadings of Providence—the great work to be done, the urgent need of more men in some of the missions, the offer of some approved brethren to go out as missionaries, and the conviction that larger pecuniary means can be supplied for this work by the churches. The Committee, after earnest consideration, have decided, therefore, to send out the brethren under appointment when they are ready to go.

We trust the concluding part of the resolution, which was adopted by the General Assembly on this subject, will be cordially seconded by the churches:—"And we hereby pledge ourselves to immediate action on this matter upon our respective Presbyteries, and to renewed effort in bringing our churches to a more efficient coöperation in this noble work."

REMARKS ON THE ARTICLE IN THE RECORD OF JULY, "ON MISSIONARY WORK NOT RETROGRADING."

I regret exceedingly the necessity of ever being obliged publicly to correct erroneous statements of what I have said and done, and would not do it for mere personal considerations. But when erroneous statements are put into my mouth, calculated to injure the cause of Christ, I feel bound to sacrifice personal feeling, and make the correction. I have already felt called upon to do so with reference to the report of my remarks before the General Assembly in Peoria, published in one of our weekly religious papers, and now feel obliged to do the same in reference to your article in the July number of the Home and Foreign Record.

In that article you represent me as saying, "that as a church we have gone backward in the missionary work within the last eight years." This is quite a mistake. What I did say was this, in reference to the resolution to go forward, "Before we talk of going forward, we must stop going backward. My impression is, that as a church we have not been advancing in the work at all in proportion to our wealth and numbers, if we have not been actually retrograding." In illustration of this, I referred to the progress of the church from 1840 to 1860, and said nothing about eight years in this connection. I showed from the Minutes of the Assembly, that the apparent gain in contributions during that twenty years had been but eight and a half cents to each communicant—very small progress, if it were real. But then I stated, what I believe to be the fact, that at the time of the breach in the church, quite a number of our wealthy churches were under obligations to the American Board for the support of missionaries, schools, and scholars, which they could not then throw off. Gradually, as those churches have been able to get rid of those obligations, they have been throwing their contributions into our Board, so that while there is an increase to our receipts, there is no increase of the missionary work done by the church. How much this would reduce the apparent increase of contributions, I had not then, and have not now, the data to determine. Again, I remarked that the church had grown in wealth much more rapidly than in liberality, or the real advance would have been much more than even this apparent and very doubtful advance in our contributions to this cause. I took the year 1860, because it was the last year giving full reports of all parts of our church, and the year 1840, because it was the most convenient and suitable starting-point after the church had fairly settled down to its work after the separation.

But if we take your own statement, and apply the necessary corrections, we shall find that the advance of the church, in proportion to its increase of wealth, is still quite as doubtful as I represented it to the Assembly. Your eight years are from 1855 to 1862. The report for the latter year gives as "donations from churches," $89,701.13. It is not fair to take what was given by legacies and other miscellaneous contributors, and apportion all these receipts to the number of our communicants as their contributions, who never gave or collected a cent of it. What we have to do with is the regular contributions of our own churches. On this subject the Report says, "It is wise to rely mainly on the regular contributions of the churches." Now it is to be remembered that I was speaking to our own General Assembly, about the contributions of our own churches, and not contributions that came from the world, or from other churches. But even this sum was not raised by the regular contributions of the churches. The Report states that five individuals had given $46,000 as extra contributions, to relieve the Board of debt, and enable them to send out some of the missionaries who had been accepted and assigned to different mission fields. This reduces "the regular contributions" of our own churches for that year to $43,701.13, and this is the whole amount that can properly be divided among our own communicants, as their regular contributions, upon which the Board is obliged mainly to depend. In reference to the last Report, which you have taken to calculate from, instead of that for 1862, the amount accredited to "the regular contributions" of the churches, upon which the Board is mainly to depend in carrying on their work, is $91,955.55. Whether any part of this sum is made up, as last year, by large special contributions, of a few liberal individuals, or not, I have no means of ascertaining. But if it all comes from "the regular contributions of the churches," it is certainly a very great and encouraging advance on the account of last year, for which we should be truly grateful to God. But still, when we consider the great increase of wealth and luxury in the church during the last quarter of a century, can it be said that the church has grown in liberality to the cause of Him to whose blood they owe all their enjoyments in this world, and their hopes for the world to come? In comparison with their prosperity, have they not retrograded in their liberality? This is the question I put to the Assembly, and this review of statistics convinces me that it was put no stronger than the truth.

In reference to the supply of labourers, I had not the data to make the comparison, and did not attempt it. I merely referred to the crippled state of the Corisco mission and one of the China missions, as showing that at these points there was danger of retrograding. I then spoke of our India missions.

I stated that within the time that nine men had been removed from one mission, five by death, and four by other causes, only four men had been sent out to replace the nine. This is a simple fact. I stated that for eight years past not a new missionary had been sent out to reinforce the Lodiana mission; that in the mean time, led by the providence of God, and with the sanction of the Board, three new stations had been added to the mission, so that now the mission was reduced to one man to a station, (who was able to do station work the year round!) and that so great were the emergencies of the mission, that they had voted, with but one dissenting voice, to give up one station, thus commencing a retreat in the face of the enemy. All these are facts. Whether they show progress or retrogression, any one can see for himself.

You state that "in 1855 there were twenty-six ordained ministers of our church connected with the missions in India; in 1863 there are twenty five, and one medical missionary." Not having at hand a report for 1855, I cannot examine that statement, but I am familiar enough with the present state of those missions, to show that some deductions should be made from your statement for the present year. In the first place, five of those ordained ministers belong to the Reformed Presbyterian Church, and not to our church, though under our Board. It is true also, I believe, that some portion of their expenses is borne by the funds of our church. This reduces "the ordained ministers of our church, connected with the missions in India," to twenty. Of these, two have been absent for about two years and a half, and for over a year before they left, were so broken down that they were entirely laid aside from all missionary work, and one of them has no prospect of ever being able to return. This reduces the actual force of ordained ministers of our church to eighteen. Of these, one is a native, and one a young man who has not yet learned the language. And one has been supported chiefly, if not entirely, by a fund given by an English Baptist, and not by our church. The medical missionary was not sent out by our Board, but was employed by the mission, and supported for some time by local funds collected from our English friends in the country. And at the present time, and for several years past, he has been supported by the Raja of Kapurthala. These are all facts which the church ought to know, that she may not be lulled to sleep by the idea that she is doing a great work, which is, in fact, to so large an extent carried on by others. As to the success of the missions, I have uniformly borne testimony to the blessing of God on our labours, increasing our church members, and native assistants, and schools, for our encouragement to do more than we have ever yet attempted. So strongly have I exhibited that increase, that I stated to the General Assembly of 1862, that our chief discouragements come from the church at home True, we have our disappointments and trials, but when we look at the general progress of our work, it is most cheering and encouraging. But when we look at the church, and see the want of interest taken in the subject—how few read our missionary publications—how few attend the monthly concert, or ever think of praying for us in the closet, the family circle, or the public assembly, our hearts sink within us under a sense of the discouragements. When we are breaking down, and appeal year after year for help, but yet no response, it is any thing but cheering. Under these feelings I have been pleading this cause before the churches and the General Assembly. I believe I have said nothing but the truth. If I have made some mistakes, or employed terms a little too strong in pleading the cause of a precious Saviour and of dying sinners, it is not wonderful. Few always avoid these errors, and I have no claim to infallibility. But will not the church overlook such slight defects, and listen to such pleading, or must every thing be tested by the most cold and rigid criticism? Let such an impression get abroad among our missionaries, and you tie their hands and discourage their hearts from making effort to arouse the church to its duty and privilege in this great work. Yet, even to this supposed extent, I am not conscious of having exaggerated anything. What to those who remain comfortably at home, may seem exaggerations, seem too tame to those who are bearing the heat and burden of the day, amidst the abominations and cruelties of idolatry, and the miseries of perishing millions. J. H. M.

The object of the paper in our last issue, on "Our Missionary Work not Retrograding," was to correct the impression that this cause is going backward. This impression, we had reason to believe, was made by the remarks of J. H. M. in the General Assembly. The report of this address, in some of the weekly religious newspapers, shows this. One of them gives as a part of it, "the alarming statement that the cause of missions is really retrograding." Another reports the speaker as proposing "the question in the following form, 'Shall the church cease to go backward?' The retrograde movement has begun." With these reports of the speech agreed our own recollections of it, and that of other hearers. It is within our knowledge, that it has since been used as an argument to prevent a missionary from going out to his work in China. You are engaging in a cause that is going down hill, said some of his friends to him earnestly, referring to this speech for proof.

Now, if this cause is indeed "declining for some time," as another paper describes it, the mournful fact ought not to be concealed; by calling attention to it, such retrograde movement may be arrested. It has always been the aim of the Committee and executive officers to state fully the discouragement as well as the encouragement of this work—to represent it exactly as it is, to the best of their judgment. On the other hand, if this cause is not going backward, if, on the contrary, it is receiving an increased support—if its number of labourers, and especially from the ranks of native converts, is becoming larger, and if its work is growing in other respects, and enjoying precious tokens of the blessing of God, then the encouragement which these things afford, ought to be recognised with thankfulness and with hope as to the future. Under this general view of the subject, the paper was written which has called forth the foregoing animadversions. The statistics there given are correctly stated, however, and show clearly that this great work is not retrograding, but in some important respects is on the advance.

In the statistics of J. H. M. there are some errors. The receipts from the churches in 1862 were $89,701. The returns given in our former article did not include legacies, nor any donations not given by members of our own churches. Some of these members prefer to give their donations in such a way that they are classed as Miscellaneous, and under this head the much larger part of the sum of $46,000 was acknowledged in 1862. The regular contributions of the living members of the church, in whatever way these are given, are evidently the main reliance of the missionary cause from year to year. These, in 1863, were $129,750, as mentioned in our former paper. As to the number of churches formerly supporting another Board, it was never large, and the returns from them would not much affect the general average. And, as to the support of the esteemed missionaries of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, the larger part of it is furnished by the Board. Several missionaries from this church were in India in 1855, and for years before. But we forbear to enter further on these points of detail; though it is proper to say that nothing has been suppressed. The particulars mentioned by our respected correspondent, concerning the missions and the receipts, so far as correct, have been repeatedly published. The annual reports are readily accessible, and furnish all the information needed for a correct judgment in the case.

We heartily wish that the increase of our missionary work were much greater, and that it kept better pace with the prosperity of our churches. But let us be thankful for whatever progress has been made, and especially that in the times of unequalled difficulty which have passed over the land, in the last two years especially, many of our Christian people have so nobly supported this cause. With the return of peace, or even in the midst of war, we hope all will receive grace from on high to make far greater progress.

We may add here a few lines which were sent over to the printer for our last article, but were not received in time to be inserted. They should be read at the end of the second paragraph. "In the years intervening [between 1855 and 1863] the whole number of ordained foreign missionaries increased to 82, (in India, to 29) The losses in the Sepoy mutiny, and especially the suspension of the missions in the Southwestern Indian tribes, occurred during this intervening period—both of which may be considered as special events; as also the withdrawal of more than a fourth part of the communicants in our churches from the support of these missions, on account of the rebellion. Any apparent discrepancies in the following statements, will be removed by an examination of the returns of the years between 1855 and 1863."

And we append the statistics of the staff of labourers connected with the Lodiana Mission, for the years 1855 and 1863, the years preceding and ending the period of eight years. These are taken from the Annual Reports of these years.

In 1855—Ordained missionaries, 13, of whom one was a Hindu; native assistants, 17.

In 1863—Ordained missionaries, 16, of whom two are Hindus; native assistants, 33.

MISSION TO THE CHINESE IN CALIFORNIA.

China in America.

San Francisco, June 11, 1863.

Since I last wrote I have been almost constantly occupied with the immigrant Chinamen—itinerating, we will say. One day we visit the country around about Macao; have conversations with, give books, and preach, to representative people of villages and settlements along the seacoast, and inland towards Canton. The afternoon we spend amongst the people of the eastern suburb of Canton city, and wander on east, then south along the banks of the river, and before night we make a circuit to the north, and then west, and back to the city again; all the time on our way talking and giving books. The next day we travel west, northwest, and north, "missionating," amongst people whose homes are, some twenty, some sixty miles distant from the provincial city, and some a good deal farther than that. Next day we meet many from the west and northwest, driven from their homes by the Hak-kah people; we find them very poor, and though we have no money to distribute amongst them, and though we cannot work miracles like Peter and John, yet such us we have we give them.

I suppose it is not necessary to inform you that the above is not all to be taken in its exact literal sense, nor need I caution you not to get the idea that while my letters are dated at San Francisco, my body is in China; on the contrary, the matters seem to be reversed; for while I stand here in California, detached portions of China appear to be coming to me; and instead of actually walking over those twenty, fifty, and one hundred miles, in different directions around about Canton, the effect is very much as though all those highways were made to come up and move along past me, giving time to speak a few words to men carrying burdens along the road, or at work in the fields, or sitting with a pipe and a cup of tea, in the doors of their mud-walled and straw-roofed cottages. Indeed, though America lies around about us, yet I live very much in China.

When we have more leisure I may give more particulars about our operations; but as every day has its interesting incidents, when thirty such days have gone by it is not easy to begin a history of them. You may think of us as studying more or less every day; often visiting the people in their houses and shops; when strangers are in town, spending as much time with them as may be practicable. You may think of us at other times as sitting down with only one person, perhaps it is a boy, or an old man, or one in middle life; he tells us something of his past life, and we try to direct him to a better country, and to tell him of a new road in which to travel. At another time you might see a poor man stretched out on a hard bed, a paralytic, perhaps; he listens to what we endeavour to tell him about Him who, when on earth, pitied and healed such as he is; we assure him that the same Jesus is even now close by his bed, and always within call, and always ready to hear and able to save. In this manner we talk on; he listens; the subject is new; his face shows incredulity, surprise, and wonder; we leave him with moisture in his eyes. During three or four weeks past the same man has heard many discourses, for he lies in a caravansary, and we often stand or sit near him while speaking to the strangers lodging in the same apartment.

I might speak of a small class of business men, between forty and fifty years of age, who are trying to learn our language, beginning with the alphabet. Just the teaching of A, B, and C, is not so sublime an occupation, perhaps, but if it brings them to the house and to the chapel, there has been something gained. They also bring friends to the chapel with them, and that is another return for the work on A, B, and C; and if some truth lodges in any one of these hearts, there may be other returns which we and those who support and pray for this mission may not hear of at present, but which will be made known when the Lord shall count, and when he writeth up the people.

There is a man applying for baptism; I have had some conversation with him; I think we shall receive him, but will write you again more particularly.

I remain yours affectionately,

A. W. Loomis.

MISSIONS IN INDIA.

The Manimajra Mela.

The Rev. Levi Janvier writes as follows from Sabathu, April 18th, 1863, concerning his visit and labours at one of the Hindu fairs.

The name of Manimajra must be somewhat familiar at the Mission Rooms, for the mela there has been frequently attended by one and another of our number, accounts of which have reached you, and appeared, perhaps, in the columns of the missionary papers. The lower and outer range of the Himalayas is known as the Sawalik range. This name you will have observed, in particular, in connection with notices of the Dehra station; it is spoken of as Dehra Dun, or Dehra in the Dun, the Dun being the valley that lies between the Himalaya proper and this outer range. Manimajra is a town of several thousand inhabitants, just outside the Sawalik range; and as you ascend the hill, a mile or so from the town, you find the temple and shrine of what is known as Mansa Debi. The locality selected for this idolatry is a most charming one, and well adapted to give the shrine a name. The hill-side is picturesque, the surrounding scenery beautiful. A stream of water winds along the plain, just below the temple, with green fields on either side, and mango trees, with their dark, rich foliage, near its banks. Here, at a certain season of the year, many thousands of our benighted fellow-creatures, men, women, and children, come together for idolatrous worship.

It was on Saturday, the 21st of last month, that I left this for Kalka, on my way to the mela. Kalka, the little town at the foot of the hills, is some eighteen or twenty miles from Sabathu, and across the Dun to Manimajra is about twelve miles farther. It was sunset when I reached Kalka, and I took up my quarters for the night and the Sabbath at a very comfortable hotel. My landlady, Mrs. Johnstone, told me that there were two or three Christian families resident there, and that they would be glad to come together and have me preach to them. It was very pleasant, indeed, to have such an opportunity. Notice was accordingly given, and about eleven o'clock a little company, less than a dozen in all, came together to hear the word of the Lord. I must here observe, that the Scripture-reader, Gulah Singh, was my companion on this journey. The English service being over, and dinner disposed of, Gulah and I went to the bazar, to proclaim the gospel message to our heathen fellowmen. A large number gathered about us, and we had a good opportunity for speaking. A blind man was present—a Mohammedan. He was inclined to oppose. Mohammedans who are blind are very apt to be more zealous for their own system of belief, and more ready to oppose, than the mass. It is a common thing with them to sit much in the company of those who can read the Koran in Arabic, and have it read to them. Some of them, it is said, do this until they have the whole by heart, and can repeat it from beginning to end. They are then wont, perhaps, to be somewhat vain of their knowledge, and fond of displaying it. This man wanted to dispute about the divinity of our Saviour, and kindred topics. Happily, however, it was so ordered that he did not give much trouble, but presently left, saying that he was going up the hill shortly, and would perhaps meet us on our return. Many present seemed quite attentive, and the occasion terminated quietly and pleasantly. Many such occasions we have, as you are aware; and had not experience taught us differently, we should think that those who thus received the message were not far from the kingdom of heaven. However, the Lord's word shall not return to him void.

On Monday morning, long before day, we left, so as to reach the mela before the mid-day heat came on. Gulah was on foot and I on horseback. He shared my pony, however, and I much enjoyed a walk of a few miles in the cool morning air, perfumed by the delightful fragrance of the wild shrubbery on either hand.

When we reached the mela ground, the people had not yet begun to collect; but before we left, the assemblage was vast. I would not pretend to compute the numbers, but the encampment was said to extend more than a mile. The occasion lasted about four days, and while it took place under the name of worship, it seemed rather a vast scene of revelry than anything else. Those who are familiar with camp-meetings, and who know how difficult it often is, amid the vast promiscuous multitude assembled, to preserve proper order, and to guard the interests of morality, and sobriety, and religion, even though the meeting has been appointed for the worship of God, and many have come with this great end in view, can imagine what a heathen camp-meeting is, where the fear of God does not exist, where idolworship is the ostensible object, where no attempt is made to guard the interests of anything good, where the leaders are men bold in sin, and whose chief object is to obtain as large contributions as possible from the multitudes assembled, where, in short, those views of the Deity and of religion are promulgated, which make men reckless as to their conduct.

Our labours at the mela were chiefly at the preaching-tent. Our good brethren from Ambala met us there, as had been previously arranged, viz., brother Carleton, and the catechist, W. Bosten, and the Scripture-reader, Karim Bakhsh. They brought tents, and we had the benefit of them. There are three topics in particular to which I will call your attention in the remainder of the present statement.

1. The great hardness of heart, and bitter obduracy against the truth, manifested by some resident in the vicinity of this idolatrous shrine, and who seemed to be among the leading individuals there. I was somewhat taken by surprise at finding Hindus so violent against the truth, as in this part of India that is much more the case with the followers of Mohammed, and there was a pride and virulence in their manner that struck me much. I remarked this to Gulah. "Oh," said he, "this is just the way with the wild beast when he has his prey before him," referring to the fact that the mela time had now come, and these people were just in expectation of their harvest of offerings. It appeared, also, that some of these people belonged to a modern sect, known as the Gulah Dasi sect, and characterized by an utter throwing off of the ordinary restraints of religion, even as understood by heathen; professing themselves sinless, equal to God, &c., and at the same time wallowing in iniquity, drinking in uncleanness with greediness. It was most impressively suggestive of the true spirit of heathenism, to find these characteristics at its headquarters.

2. The second thing I remark, and that, too, has been hinted at already, is the spirit, the animus, found to prevail among the multitudes gathered at such a place, a throwing off restraint, and laying aside, in many instances, even of common decency. I give one illustration of this. Females, as our Christian friends at home are so well aware, are kept in comparative seclusion in India. At melas the sentiment of modesty and reserve, with many of them at least, seems to be quite laid aside; so that in open day, they proceed to strip themselves to perfect nudity, for the purpose of bathing, apparently indifferent to the presence of the multitudes about them. Any one, however, who has read the things recorded in their shastras, will wonder less, but still wonder, that they are able so far to get over even the instincts implanted in them by nature.

3. The third remark is, the good and comfortable time we had, notwithstanding all drawbacks, in the preaching-tent. There is always, on these occasions, a certain selection, or remnant, whose hearts God inclines to come and hear the word. Among these, too, the different kinds of soil, as always, were discernible; but there were many of them that seemed really interested in hearing the message. There was occasional opposition, but the sentiment of the mass appeared to be to listen, manifested now and again by their efforts to check those that interrupted. The audience in the tent varied, so far as I observed, from forty to seventy, some coming and others going, so that from the morning to the evening there would be some hundreds. The different members of our little company took the work in turn, so that the word was all the time being spoken or read. I left before the mela was over, having duties that required my presence here; but it was the plan of Mr. Carleton and his assistants, to go about more or less among the people before the mela closed, and speak with such as might be disposed to hear, and this they probably did after I left. But I was going to speak of the interest and apparent sincerity displayed by some of those in our audiences, when appealed to as to the ruinous nature of their idolatrous belief, and the necessity of seeking a better way. When they were exhorted to consider the miserable nature of the delusions in which they trusted, their demoralizing tendency, as manifested, for instance, in the effect produced upon their own wives, and daughters, and sisters, it seemed to be an appeal that they could not gainsay. So we endeavoured, in the name of Him that sent us, to set before them the way of life and the way of death, saying, "Choose life, and ye shall live."

Did time permit, I could add much more; but if what I have here hastily sketched should serve, by the divine blessing, to stir up in any heart an increased interest in these perishing ones, it will be enough. Oh that it, or some of our feeble testimonies, might be made the means of moving some to "come over and help us," for the harvest is great, while the labourers are few.

Very sincerely your brother,

L. Janvier.

Missionary Work at Ambala in 1862.

The Rev. Messrs. Carleton and Thackwell, and their wives, assisted by a young Scotchman as a teacher, and two native helpers, are now the missionary company at this station. Mr. Carleton, however, devotes most of his time to itinerant labours. But, during the period covered by the following report, several changes occurred, as noted by Mr. Calderwood, who drew up the following paper. Mr. Calderwood and his wife are now at the station of Saharunpur.

During the past year, 1862, several changes have taken place at this station. In December, Mr. Munnis's connection with it was dissolved. Mr. Calderwood took his place until the latter part of March, when he was relieved by Mr. Janvier, who had recently returned from America. About the first of June, Mr. Janvier was appointed to the Sabathu station, and Mr. Calderwood returned to Ambala.

Bazar Preaching.

In the city bazar, daily preaching has been generally maintained by the missionaries, assisted during several months by the Scripture reader. Preaching was kept up daily in the cantonment bazar by the catechist. In neither place was any material opposition manifested, while often the audiences were large and attentive.

Itinerations.

In the villages round about, a large amount of preaching has been done. Mr. Carleton, with the Scripture reader, was engaged in this work for about half of the year, during which time he dispensed the word of life in more than two hundred and fifty villages. In many of these, where Mr. Carleton had preached before, the people gave him a hearty welcome, and heard him gladly, while he very seldom met with any opposition.

Melas.

Four large melas were attended, at each of which one or two of the missionaries, with as many native helpers, were present for several days, and preached the gospel to large audiences.

Station Preaching.

1. On Sabbaths each of our schools met at the same time as on other days, when about an hour was occupied by a missionary at the city school, and by a catechist at the cantonment school, in reading and expounding the Scriptures, and in prayer. In the city school, to the above exercises of worship, singing God's praise has been lately added.

2. Religious services for the native Christians have been held regularly on the mission compound; and in the cantonments the catechist has conducted similar services in his own house. As the audience there was quite large, whenever there were two missionaries in the station, one of them took the catechist's place in conducting the Sabbath services at the cantonments, when the state of the weather did not prevent his going there.

The inmates of the poor-house, which is still under our care, have been statedly assembled on Sabbaths, when one of the missionaries read and expounded to them a portion of Scripture, and prayed with them. We could scarcely desire a more attentive audience (which numbers about twenty-five) than they form. One of them has been admitted into the church by baptism, and several others are earnestly requesting to be allowed the same privilege. We believe much good has been accomplished among them through the instrumentality of one of their number—a leper—who was baptized about two years ago. At an appointed hour, every day, this man collects all the inmates of the house around him, and reads to them a portion of Scripture, converses with them about it, and prays with them. His intelligence in the Scriptures, and aptness in speaking, are such, that the paupers seem to be much gratified with these daily religious exercises. He himself learned to read since he came under the care of missionaries, and he has lately taught two other inmates of the poor-house to read, one of whom has perused a large part of the New Testament.

Baptisms.

During the year, we have baptized five adult natives—four men and one woman. One of the men has been referred to in connection with the poor-house. The other four persons are members of our family, and were servants in the household of a godly civilian, late of Ambala. They had attended the weekly religious services on the mission compound for about a year before they were baptized; but they were brought to a knowledge of the truth, chiefly through the instrumentality of their master and mistress, who were in the habit of having their servants meet with them daily for religious instruction and family worship. The head of this family of servants was baptized here about three years ago. He was taught to read by his mistress, and from the time he was baptized conducted daily worship in his large family, and was doubtless an important instrument in bringing these four to the Saviour of their souls.

Schools.

1. Mrs. Janvier established a girl's school in a neighbouring village of sweepers, which at one time was attended by eighteen girls. They were taught to read, and sing, and do plain sewing. They seemed much interested, and made very respectable progress in their studies. But as on Mrs. Janvier's removal to Sabathu no missionary lady, nor any native Christian female, was left at the station to take charge of the school, it was closed.

2. In the same village a boys' school, numbering about the same as that of the girls, was taught for about four months, by the Scripture reader; but when he left, at the commencement of the cold weather, to go out to preach in the villages, this school also was abandoned. Before the Scripture reader left, however, as the parents of the boys had become alarmed lest their sons should become Christians, the number in attendance had decreased to five or six.

3. As the Board had no funds to appropriate to the support of the cantonment school, it was feared we would be compelled to give up that large institution, and, indeed, it was closed for a few weeks; but the natives urged its re-opening so strongly, and friends contributed so largely for its support, that it was soon recommenced. About sixty boys at once enrolled their names as scholars, and, at the end of the year under review, the number had increased to about one hundred and fifteen, with a daily attendance of about one hundred.

4. The attendance at the city school is about the same as that of the cantonments. Both schools were opened daily with the reading and explanation of a portion of God's word, and with prayer. For the last three months the city school has enjoyed the advantage of the labours and care of Mr. Robert Baker as head master. He is a young man of piety and good education, late of Her Majesty's Seventy-first Highland light infantry regiment. The English department, in particular, has improved very much since he commenced his labours in the school.

OUR DISTRIBUTION FUND EMPTY.

The terrible battles of July have filled our hospitals with a fresh set of sick and wounded soldiers, while thousands of prisoners occupy our military camps and forts. From all sides new and earnest applications are coming to the Board for large grants of books and tracts for distribution among these sufferers and these prisoners. Meanwhile, our Distribution Fund, from which such grants are made, is again exhausted.

We appeal to all who have money, much or little, to aid us in carrying on this extremely important and useful work.

A LETTER FROM MEMPHIS, TENNESSEE.

The following extracts are from a letter recently received by our District Superintendent of Colportage, who has lately spent some time in Memphis. It was written by Captain P. F. Schliecker, the Superintendent of the Union Chapel Sabbath-school in that city, and is in response to a notice that a library, and thirty copies of the Visitor for a year, had been sent to his school, through the liberality of friends in New York and Philadelphia.

Union Chapel, Memphis.

Dear Brother—Your highly esteemed favour of the 3d inst. was received this day, and I can assure you it gave me no little pleasure. You need not think I shall ever forget you. No, no! Nor will the dear children.

I referred last Sabbath to the good and nice books, papers, and songs, you gave us. We still enjoy the benefits of them. The children love you, and have often spoken of you since you left. I can assure you, words cannot express my gratitude for those papers (thirty copies of the Visitor.) They are the very thing we need. And that library will be of incalculable value to my children. Oh, how shall I express my gratitude! When I read your letter this morning, I shed tears over these tokens of response to prayer. Under the circumstances, I appreciate these gifts as from God.

We have spirited prayer-meetings, and some conversions. I wish you had been here at our communion season. I did not expect many, though I prepared the elements for a good number. Well, the church was crowded; nearly all partook; and I have never experienced a more interesting sight. I trust great good will result.

Should we not be up and doing all we can for Him who did so much for us, even for our dear Lord and Saviour? Here I have abundant opportunities for doing good, which I desire to improve. I am satisfied your visit here, and the books, &c., you brought with you, have done great good, and the sowers in these matters must reap a harvest.

Yours truly,

P. F. SCHLIECKER.

DISTRIBUTIONS BY A PIOUS PRIVATE SOLDIER IN TENNESSEE.

Camp on Stewart Creek, Tennessee.

Dear Sir—I received the books and tracts you sent me some days ago. I have distributed nearly all the tracts. It was nearly the first religious reading that has ever been brought to this regiment. The boys were very glad to get them. They came around me in crowds when they found out what I had. I only met with a single instance where they refused to take them; but that was hardly a refusal. Some of them left their cards, came after me, and asked for a tract. "The Soldier's Pocket Book" was very popular. They were the first that most of them have ever seen, and nearly every man was anxious to secure a copy. "Have you any more of those little books?" was repeatedly asked. The sheet music was also very acceptable. The "Sabbath-school Visitor" many recognised as an old friend.

I am convinced that such reading, judiciously distributed among our men, will have a tendency to do much good. I think the men are in a better condition to receive it than they were in the early period of their service. Many when they first entered the army felt themselves loosed from all restraint, and gave themselves up to profanity and recklessness. But now, after nearly two years' hard service, soldier-life has become more of a sober reality. As you very well know, there is a vast amount of profanity and immorality in the army, yet I cannot think it is as bad as it was a year ago.

I would be glad if you could send me another supply of tracts. I have kept several packages for the use of the hospital, as I find soldiers just recovering from sickness, are generally more anxious to get such reading; besides, when I visit the hospital I sometimes find a tract a very good introduction to a religious conversation.

Yours truly,

W. C. V., Co. B., 10th Ind. Vols.

FROM A DISTRIBUTOR AT ALTON, ILL.

When I received your note, informing me that a box of books, tracts, papers, &c., had been left for me, I forgot how weary I had become in walking over the hills of Alton, soliciting from the citizens religious reading, to be distributed among the soldiers on the Sabbath. I went for the box on the "double quick," had it opened, examined the contents, and was quite elated with the prospect of being able to do good on the next morning. On Sabbath I filled a basket with your tracts, and supplied each of the sick at the hospital, and then went to the barracks, and endeavoured to supply each soldier with a tract. In the afternoon I carried the books and papers, and supplied each of the sick in the hospital with the "Soldier's Pocket Book." I then visited the barracks, as in the forenoon, supplying each apartment of the barracks with a few of the books. As distributors are not now admitted to our prisoners of war, I inquired of the head officer of the prison if he would send in some reading matter for the prisoners, requesting him to supply the sick first, and then the well, as far as the books would go. The officer consenting, I carried over a supply, which I have since heard were well read.

The soldiers generally received the books, tracts and papers gladly, but wished for more, as they did not have a book apiece. So you see, I soon disposed of what you sent me—I hope with good effect. May God bless them to the salvation of many poor and immortal souls.

OWNING BOOKS.

If, on visiting the dwelling of a man of slender means, I find the reason why he has cheap carpets, and very plain furniture, to be that he may purchase books, he rises at once in my esteem. Books are not made for furniture, but there is nothing else that so beautifully furnishes a house. The plainest row of books that cloth or paper ever covered, is more significant of refinement than the most elaborately carved etagere or side-board.

Give me a house furnished with books rather than furniture! Both if you can, but books at any rate! To spend several days in a friend's house, and hunger for something to read, while you are treading on costly carpets, and sitting upon luxurious chairs, and sleeping upon down, is as if one were bribing your body for the sake of cheating your mind. Is it not pitiable to see a man growing rich, and beginning to augment the comforts of home, and lavishing money on ostentatious upholstery, upon the table, upon everything but what the soul needs?

We know of many and many a rich man's house, where it would not be safe to ask for the commonest English classics. A few garish annuals on the table, a few pictorial monstrosities, and that is all! No range of poets, no essayists, no selection of historians, no travels or biographies; but then, the walls have paper on which cost three dollars a roll, and the floors have carpets that cost four dollars a yard! Books are the windows through which the soul looks out. A house without books is like a room without windows. No man has a right to bring up his children without surrounding them with books, if he has the means to buy them. It is a wrong to his family. He cheats them! Children learn to read by being in the presence of books. The love of knowledge comes with reading, and grows upon it; and the love of knowledge, in a young mind, is almost a warrant against the inferior excitement of passions and vices.

Let us pity those poor rich men who live barrenly in great bookless houses! Let us congratulate the poor, that, in our day, books are so cheap, that a man may every year add a hundred volumes to his library, for the price of what his tobacco and his beer would cost him. Among the earliest ambitions to be excited in clerks, workmen, journeymen, and, indeed, among all that are struggling up in life from nothing to something, is that of owning, and constantly adding to, a library of good books. A little library, growing larger every year, is an honourable part of a young man's history. It is a man's duty to have books. A library is not a luxury, but one of the necessaries of life.—Selected.

THE HINDOO MERCHANT.

"Some native preachers from Serampore," said the late Rev. Mr. Lacroix, of Calcutta, "went recently into the interior to proclaim the gospel, and visited a large native town where a fair was being held. A Hindoo, who heard them speak of Christianity in the bazaar, exclaimed, 'Well, you are teaching the very doctrines which my Gooroo (a spiritual guide) is teaching me!' On their inquiring who this Gooroo was, he replied that he was a native merchant from another district, who had come to the fair to purchase articles of trade, and that he was then actually in the town. The native preachers sought this merchant out, and learned from him that he had never heard the gospel from any missionary—in fact, that he had never seen one; but that some tracts had found their way, together with a copy of the Gospels, into his possession. These, he said, he perused attentively, and soon became convinced of the error and sin of idolatry, and of the truth of Christianity. He gave up his idols, and commenced speaking to his neighbours about the new way of salvation which he had found. Twenty-five individuals had already joined themselves together, having all renounced idol-worship. With these he daily reads some of his tracts, when at home, and, on the Lord's day, a portion of the 'Great Book,' as he calls the Gospel, and prays with them. Where such things are witnessed, the work of God cannot be mistaken; and there is no doubt, that the numerous tracts and portions of Scripture, now so widely disseminated, are producing in other parts of this heathen land similar fruits, which do not always come to the knowledge of the missionaries. During my whole experience in India, I do not remember so striking an instance of the beneficial effects produced by the mere reading of tracts and the Scripture, without a living teacher. To God alone be the praise; for, truly, he alone has done the work."

BOARD OF CHURCH EXTENSION.

Corresponding Secretary—Rev. H. I. Coe.
Treasurer—David Keith, Esq.
Rooms of the Young Men's Christian Association, corner of Fifth and Olive Streets, St. Louis, Mo.

Communications on the subject of Church Extension should be addressed to the Corresponding Secretary, Corner of Fifth and Olive Streets, St. Louis, Mo.

Donations should be sent to David Keith, Esq., St. Louis, Mo., or, if more convenient, to J. D. Thorpe, Esq., Cincinnati, Ohio; A. Davidson, Esq., Louisville, Ky.; S. D. Powel, Esq., Treasurer of the Board of Domestic Missions, No. 910 Arch Street, Philadelphia; T. H. Nevin, Esq, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Mr. J. B. Kirtland, Memphis, Tennessee; or to William Rankin, Esq., Treasurer of the Board of Foreign Missions, 23 Centre street, New York.

APPROPRIATIONS FROM THE GENERAL FUND.

No appropriation is made without the recommendation of the Presbytery, or the Church Extension Committee of the Presbytery within whose bounds the church applying for aid is located.

No appropriation is paid until the Board receives a certificate from the Trustees of the church aided, stating that their church lot is properly secured, and that the amount appropriated will complete their house of worship, and leave the whole property free from debt.

Appropriations not called for within two years of the date thereof, are regarded as withdrawn.

CHURCH EXTENSION.

A recent number of the Presbyterian Banner has the following well considered statement, viz.

"The order of the day for Saturday forenoon was Church Extension. The Report submitted by the Board, shows a slight increase over the previous year's work; but still it comes immensely short of the needs of the field entrusted to our care. In every country churches are needed, but in ours the need is peculiar. In the older-settled parts, the edifices were mostly adapted to suffice only for a few years, being built by congregations which were poor. Now the churches need renewal, and the congregations are still poor—poor, not because of inactivity, but because of removals. The hive may send off vigorous swarms, and yet be feeble—feeble from the very amount of its increase in producing. So it is with many a church. Hundreds of sons and daughters have been there born and nurtured; but they are gone to new homes, to form new churches. Hence the old congregation, still feeble, needs help to renew its temple, and the congregation newly formed, in a new country, also has its need for aid. This subject receives but a small portion of the consideration it deserves. A comfortable edifice is an indispensable to worship. There can be no success in extending Zion, without churches.

DO THOU LIKEWISE.

HE HATH BUILT US A SYNAGOGUE.

A correspondent of the Presbyterian states that a single individual has built a church within the bounds of the Presbytery of Iowa, two miles from the thriving little town of Franklin, Lee county, in that State. He adds:

"This man, Mr. John Berger, is young, and with a young family growing up about him. He is in comfortable circumstances, not rich. His property has been accumulated by his trade, of a saddle and harness maker, at which he still labours. But, taking counsel, not of interest, but of duty, he went forward, and one Sabbath last fall was able to present to the Lord a small, but neat stone church, completely finished and furnished, costing over one thousand dollars, all paid by himself. The writer had the pleasure of preaching in it on the afternoon of the day of its dedication, and occasionally since. Mr. Berger is a child-like, modest man, who does not seek the praise of men; and yet I think all will agree with me, that here is an act which needs a chronicle on earth, as well as in heaven."

DEDICATION.

The church at Arcola, spoken of below, was aided by our readers, through the Board of Church Extension. Let us pray that the glory of God's reviving presence may fill this new sanctuary.

The Presbyterian church in Arcola, Douglas county, Illinois, was, on the 14th of June, dedicated to the worship of God. The Rev. J. W. Allison preached the dedication sermon, and the Rev. E. Howell performed the other exercises.

The Arcola congregation have now a neat and commodious house of worship, 34 by 48 feet, with a neat cupola, and are entirely out of debt. Arcola is on the Chicago branch of the Illinois Central railroad, fourteen miles north of Mattoon. It is surrounded by one of the richest bodies of prairie land found any where in the State.

The town is rapidly improving. Two or three other Protestant churches will probably be erected during the next year. Six members were received into the church at our last communion. Presbyterians who are about changing their places of residence, will please consider the advantages that Arcola presents for a good location.

BURNING OF A CHURCH.

A German Presbyterian edifice at Paterson, New Jersey, formerly owned by the Baptist Society, was destroyed by fire last week. The building was of wood, about thirty years old, and was sold for something like $3000 a few years ago. It is supposed to have caught fire by sparks from the chimney of a factory close by, in which large quantities of light wood were used as fuel.

CONGREGATIONALISM IN ENGLAND.

According to the Congregational Year Book, just published in London, there are 1840 Congregational churches in England, with 719 in Wales, 101 in Scotland, and 27 in Ireland, no account being made of village chapels, and rooms used for preaching stations. This is a large gain since last year. The editor calculates that the Independents, or Congregationalists, now number a million and a quarter in England and Wales alone. He deprecates the frequent change of ministers from one pastorate to another.

Chapel building has assumed large proportions, in connection with Congregationalism. During the present year, there will be 300 new places of worship erected, capable of accommodating 165,000, and costing £495,000. This refers to places out of London, and to what is called "The English Chapel Building Society." But the Secretary of a separate "London" Society, stated that in the metropolis alone, in the four years 1856–59, 176 chapels were built, being nearly one a week. In twelve years, in London, seventeen Christian churches had rebuilt their chapels, at a cost of £90,000; and, including those built and projected this year, thirteen years had produced 75 chapels, at a cost of £258,000.

ST. PAUL'S PARTICULARITY IN MONEY MATTERS.

Ethics, in the abstract, most persons know little of. But the ethics of money matters they understand thoroughly. This fact St. Paul seemed to be aware of, and hence was exceedingly particular in all money transactions. And in this particular his example is worthy of imitation.

St. Paul kept out of debt. He never was distrained for rent, or forced to pawn his furniture, or refused to go a certain road or particular streets lest he should meet a disagreeable creditor who would dun him. All this is evident from Romans xii. 8, to which we refer our readers. Therefore, with what boldness he could preach the gospel of his Master. He could look every one of his hearers calmly in the eye, knowing not one of them could accuse him of being in his debt. Had he been in debt to Felix, does any one suppose he could have made Felix tremble? Never. On the contrary, he could have trembled before Felix. We ask this question of our clerical readers, if any of them are so unfortunate as to be in debt. Can you preach boldly as you ought to preach, if one of your creditors is before you? If not, then your debts hinder the success of the gospel of Christ. Think of it.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Rev. Dr. W. A. Scott, formerly of Calvary church, San Francisco, has been received into the English Presbyterian church, and has also received a call from the New John Street Presbyterian church, Birmingham, England.

"One of the Dublin congregations, that of Gloucester street, is about to enjoy the benefit of the services of the Rev. Mr. Watts, late of Philadelphia, who is to be colleague to the Rev. W. Wilson, who has long been laid aside from public duty by ill-health, and in the room of the Rev. James Edgar, recently deceased; and his coming is regarded as likely, through the divine blessing, to prove a valuable accession to the cause of Presbyterianism in this city."

"In Natchez, Mississippi, Thomas Henderson, Esq., died on the 6th of March last. He had occupied positions of prominence, usefulness, and honour, in the church and community—the most aged of the eldership of the Presbyterian church in that city. The funeral procession was the largest ever witnessed in Natchez, the 'coloured people' turning out in large numbers. No citizen was more highly esteemed; and by the blacks he was reverenced and loved, 'for he had built them a synagogue.'"—New York Observer.

The Rev. E. E. Rankin, D. D., has given notice that it is his intention to resign the charge of the Forty-second street church, New York.

Office, No. 320 Walnut Street.

Philadelphia, July 16th, 1863.

FORM OF A DEVISE OR BEQUEST

TO ANY OF THE

BOARDS OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

The State Laws differ so much that no one form will answer in all the States, but in every case it is essential to give the RIGHT CORPORATE NAME.

The oldest Board was originally called the Board of Missions, but is now incorporated under the laws of Pennsylvania under the title of "The Trustees of the Board of Domestic Missions of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

Of the Board of Education the corporate name is, "The Trustees of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

The Board of Foreign Missions is incorporated under the laws of New York, under the style of "The Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

The Board of Publication is incorporated under the laws of Pennsylvania under the style of "The Trustees of the Presbyterian Board of Publication."

The Board of Church Extension of the General Assembly is not incorporated, but the following form of bequest, it is supposed, would be valid.

I bequeath to my executors the sum of ——— dollars, in trust, to pay over the same in ——— after my decease, to the person who, when the same shall be payable, shall act as Treasurer of the Board of Church Extension of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, located in the City of St. Louis, Missouri, to be applied to the uses and purposes of said Board, and under its directions, and the receipt of the said Treasurer shall be a full and legal acquittance of my said executors for the same.

When real estate or other property is given, let it be particularly described.

RESOLUTIONS OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY IN REGARD TO COLLECTIONS.

Whereas, Many of our churches do not contribute to our benevolent enterprises, and whereas, it is desirable to test the power of simultaneous effort; and whereas, an emergency has arisen, requiring the cooperation of all our churches to save our Boards from serious embarrassment, therefore,

Resolved, 1. That this Assembly earnestly request all our churches that have no fixed times for the purpose, to take up annual collections as follows, viz.

For the Board of Domestic Missions on the first Sabbath of November.

For the Board of Foreign Missions on the first Sabbath of January.

For the Board of Education on the first Sabbath of March.

For the Colportage Fund of the Board of Publication on the first Sabbath of May.

For the Board of Church Extension on the first Sabbath of July.

For the Disabled Ministers' Fund on the first Sabbath of September.

Resolved, 2. That when the annual collections cannot be taken up on the days above designated, it be recommended to take them up as soon thereafter as possible.

WHAT THE WAR IS DOING—WORKING IN FAITH.

Iowa.

Dear Brother—During the quarter for which I have been commissioned, (ending July 15th,) I have been labouring diligently with this church. Sometimes I preach three times on the Sabbath—always twice—besides attending the Sabbath-school in the morning. The members of this church are very much scattered, a few living twelve miles west, some eight miles east, others five miles north and south. At two of these points I preach statedly, in the afternoon, as I can reach them easily after divine service here, where I always preach at 11, A. M.

The members of the congregation are usually very punctual in their attendance at church, and as a consequence, our congregations are generally very good. Our weekly prayer-meeting is well sustained, and we trust is a blessed instrumentality for good to this people. The influence of this meeting in building up this church, during the time I have been labouring among this people, has been very great. Many here have found their Saviour precious, and have been induced to consecrate themselves for the church of Jesus Christ. I think it has had a more immediate influence over the young ladies and gentlemen attending school than the preaching of the word.

Our number on the roll of the church is eighty-one. Of this number eight are either absent and soon expect a letter of dismissal, or are infirm, and unable actively to coöperate with the church, or very often attend; eight more are now connected with the army, and can be of very little assistance to us here. Of the number remaining, (sixty-five,) many are young people, and of those who are heads of families, none are wealthy, and most are in very moderate circumstances. But we are gaining pecuniary strength, and I trust in a few years this church will be able to afford a good support.

The sacrifices and afflictions of this people are certainly very great in connection with the war. Of those who went from the school, fourteen are now dead, and four young men, of remarkable promise and piety, have already left our earthly courts for the blessed company of the saved in heaven. All of these four died in active service. One noble soul died a prisoner at Macon, Georgia, under circumstances of peculiar trial. One died on a hospital boat, without a single acquaintance to soothe his dying hours. His body lies in an unknown grave on the banks of the Mississippi. Another fell in the recent murderous charge before Vicksburg. After three days his body was found and buried. And another has just gone from the rejoicing of our army over the fall of Vicksburg, to the rejoicing of the redeemed before the throne of God. Many times when allusion is made to those who have fallen in our army, the congregation will be bathed in tears. We pray and trust that the severe afflictions which have come upon this people may be sanctified to their eternal good.

I have recently commenced a kind of colportage among all the families in this vicinity. In these visits I endeavour to make the subject of personal religion the topic of conversation, and I find that many who are reserved on the great subject of personal salvation in other places, are very communicative in their own homes. In these visits I feel greatly the need of tracts and small religious books, which I am unable to obtain, but which would be of great benefit to many families, careless and indifferent to the duties they should perform.

With kind and fraternal regard, I remain,

Yours in Christ.

LOSSES FROM THE REBELS.

Missouri.

Dear Brother—To-day I commence my first quarterly report to the Board. I have laboured regularly in the ——— church, save one week, and then was on my way thither, but was met in the road by a band of the rebel Marmaduke's guerillas, who robbed me of my saddle-horse, &c., and produced such a panic in the community, that no congregation could be collected. Since then, tolerable quiet has been enjoyed, except an occasional alarm of a raid from the swamp south of us. Here I may remark, that ——— is the most loyal of any church of which I have knowledge in Missouri; there is not a disloyal member in its connection. This is saying much for it, when about two-thirds of the churches in our Presbytery are rent and desolate.

Attendance on the Sabbath services is very good, when there are no alarms to prevent. Often the few men and boys that are not in the army, have to hide themselves, with the few horses remaining that have not been stolen, to prevent them from being taken off by rebel gangs that infest the country. One of my elders has suffered much at the hands of the rebels. He has lost two horses and his gun, and was himself taken off south, put in jail, treated barbarously, and threatened to be hung or shot, as had been many who were gathered up by them as he had been. But providence ordered otherwise. After some two or three months' ill-treatment he was exchanged, and has reached home again. He is above fifty, and is an old Unionist, and that was enough. The most blood-thirsty colonel of the gang was killed at Fredericktown, in an engagement. I sincerely trust the time is near at hand when we and our Zion shall enjoy more prosperous seasons.

SELF-SUSTAINING—FEELING FOR THE REGIONS BEYOND.

New York.

Dear Brother—Yesterday closed the term of my commission under the Board. By the blessing of God, I hope we shall not be under the necessity of asking any farther appropriation from that treasury which has so long been sending blessings to such multitudes of feeble churches in our land. I feel that self-denial should be practised, rather than draw from those funds which are so greatly needed at this time throughout the great West, and will therefore try to relieve the Board of one more dependence, while my small church is exerting itself, if not beyond its ability, yet beyond any church in the neighbourhood, or any with which I am acquainted; and to-day they do not owe me a dollar of the amount they have promised me in their call. May the Lord bless them in spiritual things. We greatly need the blessing of God. We have been prospered externally in these days of trial. The outward means of grace are usually well attended. The Sabbath-school, the Bible-class, the weekly prayer-meeting, the monthly concert, and the collections for all the Boards, are observed at their appointed seasons. But we do not feel the power of the Spirit as I do feel that we need it. Sin abounds in our midst, and many, I fear, are going to a drunkard's grave and a drunkard's eternity; and such will not even come to the house of God. May the Lord have mercy on us!

Yours truly.

BOARD OF EDUCATION.

Letters and Communications for the BOARD OF EDUCATION on the subject of Ministerial Education, or of Schools, Academies, and Colleges, may be addressed to the Secretary, Rev. Dr. CHESTER, or Rev. THOMAS MCCAULEY, No. 821 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

Remittances of Money may be made to WILLIAM MAIN, Esq., Treasurer, No. 821 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

I. MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

COPY OF A LETTER TO A CANDIDATE STUDYING FOR THE MINISTRY.

My Dear Young Brother—I should have been glad to see you, and converse at length upon the topic of your letter—or, indeed, any other which might interest you in your Christian or your student life. In reference to the abridging of your under-graduate course, the rules of the Board are quite against it; indeed we should prefer your lengthening it, and breadthening it, if such a word be allowable. And to show you that this rule is wise, and that such a course would conduce to your usefulness, let me suggest the following considerations.

1. Colleges are the invention of the church, with special reference to her ministry. The curriculum is not arbitrary as to topics, nor as to the order in which they shall be pursued. The whole constitutes a philosophical gradation to the pulpit, and developes faculty after faculty of the mind in due proportion and in natural order. Your studies are not so much ends as means; if, then, you omit the means, you will fail in so much of the ends—you will be so far inferior in your range or your power of thought.

2. Your mind is unconsciously changing as well as your body. What was once gristle in your frame is now bone. What at one time is unadapted, difficult, repulsive to you, at another is easy and inviting. So of your faculties. And so, too, the studies which at one period of student-life seem distasteful and useless, may, by a patient developement of the proper faculties, become pleasant and valuable. I know this by experience, and it is my belief that a resolute will is all that is wanting, under God, to enable a man to learn any thing. And as for one's likes and dislikes, we always like what we succeed in. It is victory—the consciousness of power—that gives us our highest enjoyment in any thing, physical, mental, or spiritual. You have a natural adaptation to mathematics, which forbids your becoming a linguist. In truth, mathematics, languages, and all the arts and sciences, are but covert branches of that great scheme of logic, which enables you to control the minds of men, and "rightly to divide the word of truth."

3. My brother, your Saviour is entitled to the highest service you can render him, and you cannot prepare yourself too carefully for that service. The ministry is so solemn and responsible a work, that no man ought to rush into it unprepared. Better linger at the threshold, better get well ready in the outer courts, before you enter the lists. Remember you will then be "set for the defence of the gospel." Infidelity was never more active nor subtle than now. The gospel is assailed at all points, and you must be able to defend it at all points. Every branch of scholarship, every style of argument and of illustration, will be of use in your work. No minister can know too much, or know it too well. The regret among our ripest scholars is, that they know so little.

I trust, then, that, with faith, and patience, and prayer, with sober and practical views of your duty and your noble aim, you will persevere to the end in as thorough a mastery of science as your college can give you. May God's blessing be upon your mind and heart.

COUNSELS TO OUR CANDIDATES FOR THE MINISTRY.

It is for your profit, and the interest of Christ's kingdom, dear young brethren, that the following counsels are suggested. Read, ponder, and observe them. In after years you will realize their importance, if you do not now.

1. Never forget that you are a candidate for the holy ministry, the highest office upon earth.

2. Never be anxious to hurry through your preparatory studies. Remember, when you leave the seminary, you will think the time very short (too short) that you have spent in preparation.

3. Allow yourself ample time at the academy, college, and seminary. Strive to be thorough in, and master of every study. Despise superficiality.

4. Study the Hebrew language before you enter the seminary, if you possibly can.

5. Never forget that the world is advancing in knowledge, and that the teacher ought to know more than the taught.

6. Read the English Bible every day, and commit to memory verses, chapters, and even books. Be familiar with its histories, characters, and biographies.

7. Memorize perfectly the Shorter Catechism.

8. Read the Greek Testament daily; and when you know the Hebrew, read the Old Testament in the original tongue. Do this before you enter the seminary, for it will save you from crippling through your theological course.

9. Spend little time in reading miscellaneous works. Expend your powers on your regular studies.

10. Take care of your health. In order to this, exercise daily in the open air in the afternoon; keep your person and room clean; eat substantial food; be exceedingly careful as to quantity, remembering that most people eat too much.

11. Be a thorough Presbyterian; but no bigot nor sectarian.

12. Pray daily and earnestly in secret. Ask God's assistance in all your studies. Strive to be like Jesus. Be humble. Never seek popularity. Imitate Paul in labours, and strive for the crown he obtained. Read Miller on Clerical Manners. God bless you, and make you faithful ministers of Christ.

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

IN SCHOOLS, ACADEMIES, AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

GERMAN PAROCHIAL SCHOOL.

Williamsburg, L. I., 1863.

The number of scholars during the last year has been, on an average, seventy. Some of the scholars have been removed by death; and I know of some whose end was peace, praying and calling to the Lord. The death of one dear girl has produced a saving influence upon her mourning parents. Last week I called on a German family, and entering their room, I found their little daughter suffering of a cold, sitting near the table, on which the open Bible lay. The father of the child said: "See, sir, my child has only visited your school one year, and I am astonished at the progress she made. She learns every day some portions of the Bible, and recites them. In the evenings, whilst we are at work, she reads to us in the Bible for some hours. This makes our hearts glad."

The largest number of the scholars are well advanced in English reading and writing, as they have attended some public schools here, but where no religious instruction is given. They continue in our school also in those branches, under the direction of the teacher.

Nearly all the Germans are desirous to send their children, after they have been some years in the public schools, into grammar schools; and to the destruction of many, we have here several German infidel schools, where they use, instead of the word "God," the word "nature," where bitter hatred towards the Bible is expressed.

The German Romanists have large, immense buildings, in their convents and other private institutions, where thousands of the German youth are brought under the papal influence. Thus we have to battle with various elements; and we need the presence of our Master; we need the prayers of God's people.

What the teacher receives from the parents is very little. Some of the parents are poor, and the support given to them by the Board of Education is indeed thankfully accepted.

JOHN NEANDER.

ASK FOR WISDOM.

Even among those who do pray regularly, the prayer for wisdom does not, I suspect, form a part of their petitions. Many of us seem to have a confused notion that sense, reason, good judgment, or by whatever name we call our intellectual faculties, are quite distinct from spiritual blessings, and are things too worldly to be named in our prayers. Yet what was Solomon's choice, but an "understanding heart to judge the people"? That is, a sound and powerful mind, capable of discerning the truth and the right in the line of his daily duty. Solomon's choice should be our prayer; in St. James' words, we should ask of God to give us wisdom. And as in other points of our conduct, so it is also in this—that by asking God to give us a wise and understanding heart, we confess to ourselves that our opinions and judgments are serious things, for we do not bring mere trifles before God's notice in our prayers; and that, being serious things, they demand our own serious care; that duty and sin belong to them; that as our salvation depends on our lives, so our lives depend upon our thoughts and judgments; for if we ask ill because we have judged ill, and have judged ill because we took no pains to judge well, then the sin is not taken away from our act, but remains in it; and the act was an act of what Scripture calls folly, the fŏlly which sees not and regards not God. Whatever be our business in life, if we make it a part of our daily prayers to God that he will give us understanding in it; that he will assist our judgments, so that, seeing what is right and true, we may maintain and follow it both in word and deed; I do not doubt that such prayers will be answered, and that, where we now act blindly and carelessly, according to any prevailing feeling or fancy, then we shall act upon the full persuasion of our minds, and that persuasion will be, in general, according to the will of God.—Dr. Arnold.

THE CLOUD.

Had there never been a cloud, there had never been a rainbow. In paradise there was none, in man's innocence there was no need of any. Had there been no sin, there would never have been any sorrow, any gloom; but one clear, bright day of unbroken sunshine. But then we could never have seen the Father—have beheld him in all his wisdom, power, and love, exhibited to us now in the face of Jesus Christ; nor ever have attained that eternal height of glory prepared for us by union with the Son of God. Without the tremendous darkness of the fall, the rainbow-crown had never encircled the Redeemer's head; so now, without clouds, we cannot behold the rainbow, and the darker they are, the brighter it appears. "Through much tribulation ye must enter the kingdom of heaven." Where could we have seen, what could we have known of our Father's mercy and our Saviour's love, the comforts of his Spirit, and the power of his grace, without those intervals of gloom and sadness that put them to proof, and bring forth their strongest colouring? Can we find it in our hearts to wish our clouds away? If ever, at the approach of sunset, we have seen the pure, bright disk, without a vapour near it, while above it and around it, tipped with burnished gold, rolled the broken masses of a dispersing thunder-storm, and, in the opposite heavens, the rainbow arch drawn on the dark bosom of the receding shower; just so will be the aspect of our griefs and cares, when the ransomed soul is taking its departure to another world. An awful glory will light up the past; in deepened shadow, and in stronger light, each little circumstance of our past lives will be exhibited; things that went lightly over at the time, will gather substance and importance at the last; our escaped perils will be seen more fearful, our vanquished foes more terrible, our sins a thousand thousand times more black:—but it is not then that we shall wish our day of time had been lit up with Italian sunshine.

LITTLE WILLIE'S LAST WORDS.

"Surely, Jesus Christ died to save us."

The Sabbath day was nearly spent,
The week that Willie died,
And o'er his pillow still we bent,
Or, kneeling at his side,
We watched the waves that came and went,
In life's fast ebbing tide.

Through all the silent hours—the deep,
Deep silence of our woe,
We watched, with eyes that could not weep,
The parting spirit go;
We heard the moanings of his sleep,
His breathing faint and slow.

But ere his upward flight he took.
The fevered slumber broke;
His mind the troubled dream forsook;
Our dying Willie woke;
And with an earnest, heavenward look,
These precious words he spoke:

"The blessed Jesus surely died
Te save us from our sin."
He said no more, nor turned aside
His gaze, that pierced within
Those gates of glory opened wide,
Where soon he entered in.

N. Y. Observer.

EFFECTS OF PROSPERITY.

How unavailing worldly prosperity is, since, in the midst of it, a single disappointment is sufficient to embitter all its pleasures. We might at first imagine that the natural effect of prosperity would be to diffuse over the mind a prevailing satisfaction, which the lesser evils of life could not ruffle or disturb. We might expect, that as one in the full glow of health despises the inclemency of weather, so one in possession of all the advantages of high power and station, should disregard slight injuries; and, at perfect ease with himself, should view, in the most favourable light, the behaviour of others around. Such effects would indeed follow, if worldly prosperity contained in itself the true principles of human felicity. But as it possesses them not, the very reverse of those consequences generally obtains. Prosperity debilitates, instead of strengthening the mind. Its most common effect is to create an extreme sensibility to the slightest wound. It foments impatient desires, and raises expectations which no success can satisfy. It fosters a false delicacy, which sickens in the midst of indulgence. By repeated gratification it blunts the feelings of men to what is pleasing, and leaves them unhappily acute to whatever is uneasy. Hence, the gale which another would scarce feel, is, to the prosperous, a rude tempest. Hence, the rose-leaf doubled below them on the couch, as it is told of the effeminate Sybarite, breaks their rest. Hence, the disrespect shown by Mordecai, preyed with such violence on the heart of Haman. Upon no principle of reason can we assign a sufficient cause for all the distress which this incident occasioned him. The cause lay not in the external incident. It lay within himself; it arose from a mind distempered by prosperity.

The enmity there is in the fallen heart of man to God, will ever show itself against Christ's faithful people. Self-love and self-deceit are the parents of this hatred which the world shows towards real Christians.

A REFLECTION.

It should be remembered that every loathsome inmate of penitentiaries and state prisons was once a gentle, inoffensive, and prattling child; and that every criminal who has "expiated his crimes upon the gallows," was once pressed to a mother's heart, and drew his life-giving nourishment from her bosom. Bad moral training, wrong influence, and debasing examples, do their work, and transform endearing offspring into ferocious men, who shock humanity by the foulness of their guilt, and the monstrous audacity of their crimes.

TEMPTATION.

When a founder casts a bell, he does not presently fix it in the steeple, but tries it with the hammer, and beats it on every side, to see if there is any flaw in it. Christ does not, presently after he has converted a man, convey him to heaven; but suffers him to be beaten upon by many temptations, and then exalts him to his crown.

MOVEMENTS OF MISSIONARIES.

A letter of the Rev. J. J. Welsh, at Aden, June 11th, mentions his arrival at that place on his journey, and his expectation to spend a considerable time in Europe before coming to this country. A letter of the Rev. A. Folsom, of May 14th, at Java Head, mentions the safe arrival of Mrs. Folsom and himself at that stage of their voyage to Canton, in the ship Contest. The Rev. D. Thompson had safely reached Shanghai, and after remaining there a short time he proceeded on his way to Japan, Dr. Hepburn's letter recommending him to stay in China not having reached Shanghai until after his departure for Yokohama. The Rev. H. V. Rankin and his family had left Ningpo for Chefoo and Tungchow. Mr. Rankin's health was still very feeble, but it was hoped the fine climate of the province of Shantung would prove of great benefit to him.

CONVERTS ADMITTED TO THE CHURCH.

This month's correspondence furnishes delightful evidence of the presence of the Holy Spirit at a number of the missionary stations.

At the Iowa station, Mr. Irvin reports the case of an adult who, years ago, was in the mission school, but was afterwards a wild Indian, who lately gave pleasing evidence of conversion, though he was removed by death before being baptized. A happy religious interest was manifest in the church, near the mission station, and the daughter of the superintendent and one of the Indian girls in the school were among the newly admitted communicants.

One of the Chinese in California united with four others of his countrymen in the communion service in the mission chapel, June 21st, after being baptized by Mr. Loomis.

In China—at Tungchow, five converts were admitted to the church by baptism on the 26th of April; at Shanghai, May 20th, the church session agreed to admit a Ningpo man as a member of the church; others were earnestly inquiring for the way of life; one of the members had been recently ordained as an elder, and high hopes were entertained of his usefulness.

In Siam the brethren were permitted to organize a small church at Petchaburi, on the 10th of May, when three hopeful converts were received as communicants, after being baptized; the infant child of two of these converts was also baptized.

In India—three converts from Mohammedanism were baptized at Futtehgurh on the 10th of May; at Mynpurie, two daughters of native church members were received into the full communion of the church on the first Sabbath in June; two converts from Hinduism, and also two children of one of them, were baptized at Ambala in May—making seven adults and four children admitted into the church at that station in the last fifteen months; at Kapurthala an adult and an infant were to be baptized on the 31st of May. The former was in the Lodiana mission school some years ago, having been rescued by Mr. Woodside, while stationed at Dehra, from being trained up in the worst possible circumstances, and sent to the mission school. "She is now," Mr. Woodside adds, "a most amiable and exemplary young Christian wife, and has made a consistent profession of her faith."

In Liberia, Mr. T. H. Amos reports a church organized at Marshall, of sixteen communicants, of whom seven are receptives, and two Bassas. Others had applied for admission, but were deferred.

We are sure our readers will regard these "admissions to the church," in so many parts of the missionary field, as answers to their prayers, and as reasons of thanksgiving unto God. How easily can he increase the number of true converts at every station!

FROM THE MISSIONS IN SOUTH AMERICA.

Mr. Wallace and his family were spending some time at Fusugasuga, as then a more healthy place than Bogota. Mr. Wallace was still engaged in the study of the language as his chief business, but was able to have some missionary intercourse with some of the people. Mr. Blackford gives an account of the opening of a German church at Petropolis, erected through the efforts of an evangelical Lutheran minister, from the missionary school at Basle. The pastor preached in German in the morning to a large congregation, and Mr. Blackford in Portuguese afterwards. It was a season of much interest. About four thousand Germans live at this place.

AFRICA—CORISCO MISSION.

The various labours at this station, for the year ending in October, 1862, have been much the same as reported in previous years.

Attendance on the Means of Grace.

The attendance at church on Sabbath morning has varied much, sometimes being as low as forty, and sometimes rising as high as one hundred or more. Many of the people are occasionally absent for purposes of business or trade, and others, who might constantly attend, have no particular desire to do so, but will generally come when specially invited, provided the invitation does not extend to every Sabbath. The Sabbath evening service is but thinly attended by people from the neighbouring towns, and the week-day evening prayer-meeting has not been so well attended as in some former years. The special interest manifested among the people here, two or three years ago, in the truth, has, I am sorry to say, in a great measure subsided. Many who were then seekers after the truth, and seemed near to the kingdom of God, have become entirely careless; and some others, who made a profession of faith in Christ, and were baptized, and who seemed to run well for a while, have forgotten their first love, and are no more seen at the prayer-meeting or in the sanctuary. They have gone back to their heathen customs, and we have been compelled to cut them off from the number of those who we hope are the people of God.

In many cases, opposition is made to persons (especially women) attending church; and efforts are constantly made by the adherents of heathenism, to seduce and lead away those who have made a profession of Christianity.

Sabbath-school.

The Sabbath-school has been attended by as many as eighty scholars; the highest number on any day was seventy-five, and the lowest about thirty-five—the average somewhere between these numbers. The school is made up almost wholly of those who have received some instruction in the Mission schools, or who are now in school. The Sabbath-school is held in the afternoon of each Sabbath.

Day-school for Boys.

A small day-school for boys has been taught during a part of the year, but it has not been so prosperous as we hoped it would be. The whole number of names on the roll is about twenty, but the attendance is exceedingly irregular. The parents, as a general thing, care but little whether their children go to school or not; the children do not like the confinement of the school-room, and the consequence is, they are found more frequently playing truant than in their seats at school. It does not seem probable, from our past experience, that day-schools will prosper among this people, until they are brought in some way to feel more the importance of education. Books and instruction are offered to the people free—all that is asked of them is simply to come and receive instruction. But the discipline and restraint, which are as mild as practicable, are distasteful to those who have perfect licence from their birth to go where they please, and do what they please, and take the consequences. Very few of them who have attended our day-schools, have come long enough to learn to read; but all who have attended, have learned a good deal of Christian truth, which has been communicated to them orally.

Day-school for Girls and Women.

For a long time Mrs. Mackey has been desirous of starting a day-school, into which she could gather the girls and women who are the wives of polygamists. She has been able to start a small school of this character during the present year, and it has been attended with gratifying success. The main object of the school is to impart religious instruction, and to teach the pupils to read the word of God in their own language. It has been in progress about eight months of the year, and is kept only an hour and a half open in the day. The whole number that has been brought into it is about fifteen, and the average attendance has been about half that number; and they are principally of the class mentioned above. It is proposed to keep up this school, even should it be small, and attended with discouragements. We trust it may be the means of benefitting, spiritually, this degraded and oppressed class of the people here.

The Work of the Senior Missionary.

The labours of the senior missionary at this station are greatly increased by duties devolving upon him as treasurer. The payments made to the people employed by the mission, and for supplies of food bought for our boarding-schools and for ourselves, are all made in goods. This is necessary in the present state of civilization here; and it effects a saving to the mission on the amount of the payments, from thirty to forty per cent., and which amounts in the year to more than the salary of a missionary. When we are able to get from America or England such supplies of goods as we need, the treasurer's labours are simplified and lightened; but when we have to seek for our supplies from transient vessels on the coast, both the labour and expense are increased. Our expenses during the past year have been very moderate, considering the force we have had employed. Our expenses will probably be considerably greater during the coming year, as the price of cotton goods has advanced so much.

Respectfully submitted.

MISSIONS IN CHINA.

THE WORK OF THE CANTON MISSION.

We insert the greater part of the last report of this mission, which was drawn up by Mr. Preston. Want of room prevents the insertion of the paper entire. It reviews the work of the year ending October 1st, 1862.

Preaching services in the Thirteenth street Chapel and at the Hospital and Dispensary

[After referring in the introduction to the darkness still prevailing, and to the promise that "the morning cometh," the report next mentions the enjoyment of health and peace by the missionaries during the year—and then proceeds:]

A daily service for preaching has been kept up during the year in the Thirteenth street chapel, conducted four days each week by Dr. Happer, and the native assistant, Lam Atsung, and the remaining three days by Mr. Preston. The audience generally has not been very large, perhaps from fifty to sixty at once, varying all the time—going and coming.

The preaching services in connection with the hospital has been continued as usual. Great numbers have there listened to the word of life under circumstances very favourable for making a strong impression—as in the ministry of the Saviour, joining healing with teaching—the one a practical illustration of the other. The dispensatory at Fatshan has afforded a like opportunity for this two-fold and primitive presentation of the gospel. The services there have been conducted by Mr. Condit and Mr. Preston; and while the accommodations have been very insufficient, it is believed that a decidedly evangelical character has been given by them to the laborious services of Dr. Kerr in healing the sicknesses of the people.

Missionary Journeys—Devotional Meetings.

Several excursions have been made of a limited extent, by Dr. Kerr and Mr. Condit, to explore and scatter the precious seed of the gospel in the many open fields around Canton. They have also preached to some extent in the streets and temples of the city.

A meeting for prayer and conference has been held one evening each week, by Dr. Happer, for the members of the church, and for inquirers. Mr. Preston has also conducted a Bible-class on Sunday afternoon.

The mission prayer-meeting, on Thursdays, has been a refreshing service to the families of the mission circle. The week of prayer was observed in connection with other American and English missionaries. The same plan of service was kept up daily by a number for a good part of the year. The service at morning prayers in the hospital deserves notice. Altogether the number present has been on an average forty or fifty persons. A large portion of the Bible has been read and explained in order, the whole of the New Testament, and large portions of the Old.

The Hospital gives access to people of rank.

During the past year, the hospital has afforded unusual facilities for obtaining access to people of rank. A number of mandarins have applied to Dr. Kerr, in order to try the medical skill and science of western civilization, and in every instance, their attention has been directed to the gospel which we preach. They have come to call upon the doctor repeatedly, and, in many cases, with a large retinue. In one instance, a prefect of a department occupied rooms in the hospital for several months. When H. E., the United States minister, was at Canton, during an interview he had with the governor-general, this high official of the Chinese government remarked to a member of our mission present, "I know all about you. You are doing a good work."

A Church organized—First things of deep significance.

It will be remembered by all who have watched the history of this mission, that the first native was baptized in 1854—the present native assistant, Lam Atsung. The present year is to be distinguished as the date of the formation of the first church. It consisted of seven native members, all baptized by the senior member of the mission, Dr. Happer. One of these, a promising young man, a teacher in one of the mission schools, was soon after called to try the realities of the Christian hope. So far as we can learn, he died in the firm faith of the gospel. This is the first fruit that has apparently been gathered from this field. Some may say, "And is this all, after seventeen years?" Should it be so, it is worth all that has been done, and infinitely more. Who may count the value of one soul? But it is not all. The first baptism, the first church, the first death in the hope of the resurrection—these beginnings have a deep significance in this great empire. The power of the gospel is not to be measured by immediate and apparent results. The Lord's supper is regularly administered. Christ is thus evidently set forth crucified among this people, and will doubtless continue to be thus exhibited until he come.

Schools—New Church—Canton virtually two stations.

One of the greatest wants of this mission at present, is a number of native preachers and colporteurs. We are looking to our schools as the most promising field in which to raise them. The elementary schools will soon furnish some fine lads for a central school of a higher grade. It is hoped this request of the mission may be regarded by the Board. The hope of China lies in a native ministry. Such is the providence of God, and it should not be lost sight of.

Arrangements have been completed by Mr. Preston for obtaining a new chapel near his dwelling, in perhaps one of the most desirable sites in the city—the book-store street, and literary centre of Canton, "Sheung Mun Taiy." The land is secured at a moderate annual rental, and the funds for building are promised by friends in China. The mission at Canton being separated into two parts, at so great a distance, is fully equivalent to two stations, almost independent. This should be remembered in sending reinforcements. The field at Canton is very great, and there are many reasons for making a strong centre here before attempting to occupy the regions beyond. Any movement of importance here will be felt through the whole system of which this city is the heart. The literary examinations bring the missionaries in direct contact with the thousands of scholars in this province. But it was fully expected that we should be able to report Fatshan occupied by Mr. Condit before this. [The destruction of the house which Mr. Condit had nearly completed there, by the typhoon, led to the postponement of the time when this large city could be occupied as a regular station of the mission.]

MISSIONS IN INDIA.

REPORT OF THE STATION AT LODIANA.

The Rev. Messrs. Rudolph and Thackwell, and their wives, assisted by three native Scripture readers, and aided by a young lady from Germany, as a teacher, conducted the missionary work at this station during the year 1862. Mr. Thackwell has since been transferred to the station at Ambala. There is much need of another missionary at Lodiana, as will be seen when the varied and important branches of work at this station are considered.

The missionaries and their families at this station have been permitted to remain at their post throughout the year, except when their duties called them away to labour at fairs, or among the villages and towns of their district. Sickness on several occasions threatened to reduce their number for a time; but as a measure of health and strength was soon recovered, no change of climate was sought.

The Church.

During the year, four adults were received into the church, five children were baptized, and there were two cases of discipline. As to the spiritual growth of the members of the church, we can say but little that is encouraging. The same weakness of character that is observed generally in natives, clings to some extent to our native Christians. They are easily provoked; have but little strength to forbear; and some of them yield readily to evil influences. When inquiries are made, they solemnly declare that no worldly motive induced them to embrace the gospel; but frequently, and often soon after they are received into the church, they begin to show restlessness and dissatisfaction in reference to their worldly prospects. Their expectations of preferment are not realized, and their disappointment becomes the first indication of their real disposition. The temptation to evil-speaking is not always resisted by the women, and this becomes sometimes the cause of contention amongst them.

We would most earnestly entreat the prayers and sympathy of God's people on behalf of our native Christians. The more these increase in number, the more powerful will be their influence upon the surrounding heathen, either for good or for evil. Nothing but an outpouring of the Spirit of God by the Head of the church, can prevent our native Christian community from becoming a stumbling-block to their heathen countrymen.

Preaching.

Sometimes it would seem as if the inhabitants of this place had become tired alike of our preaching and their own opposition. It is true that our services on Sabbath afternoon in the city church are attended as well as ever, and that we have frequently large numbers to listen to us on week-days; but we do not observe a growing interest in matters of religion. There are men enough in this city who speculate on the probability that Christianity may supplant the prevailing religions of the country; their faith in the Bible, if it be faith, is purely speculative. Neither the heart nor the conscience is engaged in the matter. We meet with no one that feels compelled to exclaim, "Lord, save me, or I die!" The people that appear most interested are those from villages, who happen to be in town for a little while. They eagerly discuss questions on Christianity, or that may have a bearing on their own belief; and they are always anxious to take books back with them to their villages.

Itinerations and Fairs.

[Mr. Rudolph and Mr. Thackwell, aided by one of the native brethren, made several journeys to preach the gospel in the regions within reach of their station. Reserving their report of these journeys for a separate article, we may state here, that in general their preaching was well received, though in some places they met with opposition.]

City School.

At the commencement of the year, there were in the English department, 231; Persian, 68; total, 299 pupils. During the past year, fever prevailed to an unusual extent in the city, and many of the pupils suffered from it. The number of absentees was therefore much above the average. Many of these, disheartened by long-continued illness, anda consequent inability to read with their classes, left school altogether; of whom, some have succeeded in obtaining employment, and others, we regret to say, are leading a life of idleness. Notwithstanding these disadvantages, the number on the rolls at the close of the year was, in the English department, 208; Persian, 46; total, 254.

It was believed, as stated in last year's report, that certain measures which had recently been introduced into the school, contained the germs of future progress; and it is gratifying to be able now, after the expiration of a year, to state that this belief was not without foundation. While the standard of the pupil's attainments is nominally lower than heretofore, the boys are really much more thoroughly grounded in the rudiments of those subjects which they are expected to learn.

Each boy in the school, who is capable of reading, is catechised daily in the Scriptures, and on the Sabbath attends either at the Bible-class in the morning, or at the church in the evening.

During the last year, a normal class was instituted for the benefit of the junior teachers in both departments. The attendance on this class is compulsory, and the progress of each student is noted. This measure has had a most healthy influence on the teachers, and through them on the whole school.

Orphan Girl's School.

The year has been a trying one to the health of the children, and more especially to those whose constitution had been weakened by the effects of the famine during the previous year. Slight attacks of illness greatly prostrated their strength. In five cases, all that care and medical treatment could do, proved unavailing. They were removed by death, after long-protracted illness.

At the end of last year, the school contained 48 girls; 8 more were received, and 5 died, leaving at present 51 children in the institution. One of these has been a great sufferer during the last two years. About nine months ago, she looked forward to a speedy dissolution. She was then not a member of the church; and the pastor being out on an itineration, she feared that she would be taken away before his return. Being anxious to be baptized, she prayed that her life might be prolonged till then. Her prayer was heard and answered. She not only lived to become a member of the church by baptism, and to join us at the Lord's table on several occasions, but her time of probation has been lengthened out much more than we could have hoped. She has borne her sufferings with much patience, and we hope she is one of God's elect. Humanly speaking, the number of her remaining days can be but few.

None of the other girls have made application for church-membership; but there are some whose conduct is not only very good, but of whom we entertain the hope that they seek the Lord.

In the studies pursued in school, there has been no change from what was reported last year. The progress that some of the girls have made, we consider quite satisfactory, while the want of aptness for study in others, and their natural lack of talent, has been exceedingly trying sometimes, to those of us to whom the training of these poor children is committed.

The day in the institution is always commenced by a religious exercise, at which the older girls are catechised on a passage of Scripture. This is followed by a lesson to each class, in the teaching of which four of the oldest and most advanced pupils assist as monitors. After breakfast, the whole school is assembled again, and receives instruction until ten o'clock, when needle-work commences. The hours from 1 to 4 P. M. are given to the children to study their lessons, and to the monitors to teach the beginners; from 4 to 5½, lessons, at 6 the evening meal, after which the girls are permitted to leave their yard and to walk or play in front of the schoolhouse. The cooking of their food and sweeping of their apartments, schoolhouse and premises, are taken by turns, but from this occupation the monitors are exempted.

They all attend a Bible-class on Sabbath morning, as well as the fore and afternoon services. On Saturday there are no lessons. The day is devoted chiefly to the making and mending their clothes, and to other domestic duties.

The Press.

The Rev. L. Janvier, since his return to India, has taken part in the editorial duties of this establishment; these, including the heavy task of proof-reading, were divided between Messrs. J. Newton, L. Janvier, and J. Newton, Jr., Mr. Rudolph continuing in charge of the press.

The large quantity of printing paper in store at the beginning of the year, has enabled us to carry on the operations of the press on as extensive a scale as during the previous one, though the means at our disposal were much more limited. Twenty-two publications have been carried through the press, several of which are large works. The whole number of pages printed is above nine millions, a number exceeding that of last year by one million three hundred thousand. For a detailed account of the works printed we refer to the accompanying table.

The tabular view of the state of the depository will show that the number of volumes added during the year, is above 89,000; disbursed were upwards of 63,000. The drafts on the depository have therefore been unprecedentedly large, and though our operations have been extensive, they have only been in keeping with the daily increasing demand for books. Almost all the mission stations of the Panjab, and of the Northwest provinces, as far down as Futtehgurh and Agra, including several stations in Oude, have been supplied with publications from this press.

We have to make grateful acknowledgment to the North India Bible Society, for the aid received during the last two years. The Gospel of John and the book of Acts, in Panjabi, have been printed at the expense of that society, and a volume, containing the book of Genesis and the first twenty chapters of Exodus, as also the book of Psalms, both in the Panjabi language, are now being carried through the press at their expense.

MISSION IN BRAZIL.

REPORT OF THE STATION AT RIO DE JANEIRO.

The following paper was written by the Rev. A. L. Blackford, and it covers the period from February 1, 1862, to January 30th, 1863.

During the ten and a half months of the time covered by this report, the writer was your only ministerial representative at this station, and during most of the time, the only minister of the gospel actually engaged in missionary labours in this city. An imperfect knowledge of the language has much restricted the preaching and other labours for which the way is open, and which we cannot doubt would have largely increased the ostensible results.

English and Portuguese Preaching—English service.

Save the interruption of a very few days, preaching was regularly maintained on Sabbath morning in English, and at night in Portuguese; and on Thursday nights meetings were regularly held for the reading and exposition of the Scriptures.

The English service was continued throughout most of the year, in view of the pressing wants of our countrymen and others speaking the English language here. It was made to interfere as little as possible with our proper work; and considerable aid was rendered in the way of preaching [by three visitors at Rio for a time.] The attendance on this service, and the manifest interest in it, have increased much within the past year; and there are encouraging tokens of good from it.

This branch of the work presents an open and hopeful field, and there is an urgent necessity for a good and earnest man to occupy it.

Portuguese services—Notices of Converts.

The average attendance on the Portuguese preaching shows a large increase over that of the former year of our operations. It has been, however, very fluctuating, ranging from ten or twelve to over sixty persons. Many come for a few times and are seen no more. Good order has always marked our meetings, and very generally an earnest attention is given to even the imperfect utterance of their language. During the year we three times celebrated the Lord's Supper. These were seasons of much interest, and we trust of much profit to us all. Seven persons in all were admitted to the communion of the church on profession of their faith. One of these, an intelligent and respected merchant of this city, is a native of Scotland, and was educated in the Presbyterian church. The others, Brazilians and Portuguese, are from the humbler walks of life, and are all converts from Romanism. The Lord has thus sealed to us his faithfulness and the power of his word and Spirit.

Religious liberty—Converts sustained under trial—Labours of Colporteurs.

The freedom of our operations has in no way been interfered with. Some of our people have been severely tried in temporal things, through the great difficulty of finding employment without violating the Sabbath. The grace of God has been shown in their patience and firmness on this point, and his goodness in the entire relief of some, and timely succour to others. We hope for a gradual improvement in this respect.

The colporteur of the British and Foreign Bible Society, who labours under our direction, has been regularly at work during the year, save one month which he lost through sickness in his family. For eight months he was travelling in the province of Sao Paulo, and the remaining four in this province, (Rio de Janeiro.) Nowhere in the former province did he meet any opposition in his work, but on the contrary, was generally well received and much encouraged. In one or two places in this province the priests denounced him and his books. He put in circulation during the year 265 Bibles and 241 New Testaments. This man is an humble, patient, earnest, and sagacious labourer, eminently fitted for this work. For six months of the year another colporteur has been employed by us in the city. Through his and other agencies 53 Bibles, and 128 New Testaments, besides many other books and tracts, have been put in circulation in the city. The book sales by this man have been very small. They are, however, a very small part of his work. He has been most useful in visiting and conversing with believers and others, encouraging them, calling them in to hear the gospel, doing many items of business; in short, filling a place in our work here which only a man who is one of the people could supply.

This is a hasty review of what God has enabled us to do in behalf of his kingdom in this quarter of the earth. Blessed be his name for the souls he has saved, the encouragements given to our faith, and his manifold mercies to ourselves.

Excellent health has been our portion. Disease came into our dwelling, and took away one whose home was with us, as we trust, to that better state where sickness enters not, but for ourselves, we have been unharmed.

More Labourers Needed.

[Mr. Blackford briefly refers to the labours in Brazil of a Scotch missionary, not connected with any Society, a few evangelical German ministers among the German settlers, and an esteemed Episcopal missionary from this country. He then concludes his report as follows:]

In many parts, and in many things, there are signs of movement, which only the Lord can work, and which indicate that changes for the better will be rapid and striking, if only the Church of God will respond to the evident demands of the case. Our prayer to you, brethren, is—Come over to Brazil, and help us. The harvest is white and plenteous, but the labourers are few. A number more of men could be at once employed, and sufficient means would multiply the influence of those on the ground.

REPORT OF THE STATION AT SAO JOAO DE RIO CLARO.

The Rev. F. J. C. Schneider, writing from Rio de Janeiro, May 8th, sends the following report of his work from February 26th, 1862, to March 24th, 1863.

Four German Settlements—Large Audiences, at first.

The Germans, to whom my labours are, as yet, almost entirely confined, live together in four different colonies, situated at distances ranging from ten to twenty-six miles from Sao Joao de Rio Claro, where I reside. This is a village in the interior, one hundred and sixty miles from Santos, the nearest port, and about four hundred and twenty miles from Rio de Janeiro. The total number of German colonists is about sixteen hundred.

I made my first round of the colonies, preaching at all of them, in the beginning of March, 1862. I was very well received wherever I went, and had quite large and attentive audiences at my services. At various places, many were anxious that I should administer the Lord's Supper, and even organize congregations.

Hinderances.

I saw then, however, and have since had abundant proof of the fact, that the anxiety of the people for the administration of the sacraments arose from their superstitious notions of the efficacy of the mere outward observance, to procure for them a title to heaven, and not from any correct views of sin, and of their own condition; and that it was not accompanied with any godly sorrow, or determination to lead holy lives.

Intemperance exists to a fearful extent among the colonists; and some who are most addicted to this vice, were most desirous that I should administer the Lord's Supper. Sabbath desecration of the worst kind is also universal with them, as it is everywhere throughout this land; and most of the best of them will not admit that there is any wrong in it. On account of these things, and others, I did not comply with their wishes to administer the Lord's Supper, or organize congregations, but told them that I should be very happy to comply with their desires in these respects, when they had become better acquainted with me and with the doctrines I held, and when they should be willing to comply with the conditions that I would be obliged to insist upon, in any attempts that I might make to organize churches among them. With some I spoke in private, in regard to their drinking and Sabbath-breaking habits; and, as I learned afterward, offended them very much, by telling them that I could never adminster the Lord's Supper to persons who would not refrain from intoxicating themselves, or from working, visiting taverns, &c., on the Sabbath.

Opposition.

Since then, I have preached every Sabbath, with but two or three exceptions, at some one or other of the colonies, or at some other point. When it had become universally known that I would neither organize churches of drunkards and Sabbath-breakers, nor would administer the Lord's Supper to such, however much they might wish to partake of it, and that I insisted upon at least some good evidence of a sincere desire to live a holy life, as a necessary qualification for church-membership, very many became my bitter enemies, and my services were often but very poorly attended. Much of this is due also to a Lutheran German minister, who has settled in this neighbourhood since I came here. He is [far from what a minister should be]; hates me most cordially, and does all he can to prejudice the people against me. He is dependent upon them for his support, and humours them in all their superstitious notions.

Labours not in Vain.

Still I think that I can see some evidence of my labours being not altogether in vain. The director of one colony told me once, that the people were behaving much better now than before I came. I think, too, that I have found a very few who have the root of the matter in them, and who would cheerfully unite in forming the nucleus of a church, if they were not so widely scattered. Here and there I have found a few, who I think are true disciples; but then they are often widely separated—from ten to twenty miles. I believe, too, that the German minister spoken of above, cannot long sustain himself here. If, then, I should retain that as a station, I would probably, after some time, have the ground clear to myself.

Need of Education—Books Distributed.

One very serious obstacle to the success of the gospel among these people, is their deplorable ignorance. Not only have nearly all of them no knowledge of divine things, but scarcely anything else do they know, beyond the merest rudiments; and much more deplorable, in this respect, is the condition of the children. Hundreds of these, many of them eighteen, and even more years of age, can neither read nor write. They grow up just like the beasts. At one colony, certainly, and perhaps at others also, a good teacher would be gladly welcomed, and partially supported. A pious German, with only a tolerable education, could do much good here as a school-teacher. Would it not be possible for the Board to secure one, at least, and send him out?

Of books I have sold a tolerable amount. I do not know how many remain unsold at various places where I deposited some; but I have sold nearly fifty German Bibles, and perhaps twenty Portuguese; some thirty-five Hymn-books, several copies of Doddridge's Rise and Progress, the Pilgrim's Progress, Nelson on Infidelity, Krummacher's Elijah the Tishbite, forty-eight Reading-books, or Tract-primers, and some others.

WILLIAM E. SCHENCK, D. D., Corresponding Secretary and Editor, No. 821 Chestnut street.

HELP NEEDED FOR THE SOLDIERS.

As we informed the readers of the Record in our August number, our Distribution Fund is empty. We are receiving many small contributions towards replenishing it, but the demands made upon it are numerous and heavy. Applications continue to come from the camps, and hospitals, and military prisons, for reading matter for our sick and wounded soldiers, as well as for the many thousands of prisoners in the hands of the government.

We are sending our little books and tracts as fast as we can, but have not the means to do more than a small part of what the Board desires to do. Will not the churches and benevolent individuals help us in this good work?

THE CHRISTIAN COMMISSION.

If any of our contributors especially desire their contributions for this object to pass through the hands of the "Christian Commission," we would commend to the special attention of such persons the following resolution of the last General Assembly.

"Resolved, That it be recommended to our churches, in making contributions for the purchase of books and tracts for the benefit of our brave soldiers and sailors, that they forward the amount contributed to our Board of Publication, with the explicit request that the Board supply the Christian Commission with books and tracts, for the benefit of the army and navy, to the amount contributed for that purpose."

MINUTES OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

The Minutes of the General Assembly of 1863 have been issued by the Stated Clerk, and any person desiring to procure them should send his order to Mr. George H. Van Gelder, Treasurer of the General Assembly, No. 320 Walnut street, Philadelphia. The price, with postage prepaid, is fifty-six cents.

THE REVISED BOOK OF DISCIPLINE.

The Board of Publication has just issued, in tract form, a new edition of this work. Seven chapters were adopted by the last General Assembly. The amendments made in these chapters by the Assembly are distinguished by italics. Price 5 cents. Address orders to Mr Winthrop Sargent, 821 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

LABOUR AMONG THE CONTRABANDS.

A member of one of our churches in Indiana some time ago made to the Board a liberal contribution, to be specially employed for the benefit of the freed blacks. This is used in sustaining a colporteur, who was lately a student of the theological seminary at Chicago, in labouring among that class in the vicinity of Memphis, Tennessee. The following extract from his last letter will give some insight into the nature of his work. As most of the freed blacks are unable to read, he spends a considerable part of his time in teaching them to read God's word. The little book he chiefly uses in this work, is "My own Primer," an excellent little elementary book, published by the Board. Large numbers of these have been given away by the Board, to chaplains and others, at various points where they can be used with advantage.

Memphis, Tenn.

Dear Brother Waters—I told you in a former letter that I arrived in this city, on the steamer "New Dunleith," via Cairo, on the 18th of April, having been commissioned by our Board of Publication to labour among these freed blacks until next September. I told you that I located myself at Camp Shiloh, on the 21st of April, and commenced operations. Camp Shiloh is a contraband camp, or village, inhabited by freed blacks, situated about two miles south of the city of Memphis, upon the same side of the river, and on a high bluff overlooking the majestic Mississippi. Just across a ravine, and but a short distance away, is seen the southern line of Fort Pickering, upon which the weary sentinel patrols night and day. At this extremity of the fort are seen the two grass-grown, graceful mounds of earth, which, in peaceful days, constituted the whole of what was then called Fort Pickering. The tops of these mounds look somewhat like a sugar-loaf with the top very neatly cut off. Upon their tops are mounted heavy guns, and from out their sides grow large cotton-wood trees, now rejoicing in their green dress.

To the south of us, across two ravines, some half a mile distant, I see the log buildings which constitute another contraband camp, named Camp Fiske, in honour of one of the chaplains in charge of it; while looking down the river a little distance, I see an island in its bosom, called President's Island, and upon that island are seen many white tents; this is still another contraband camp. To the northward are seen the tops of the Memphis church spires. Our village contains about seven hundred people. You must not liken it to an Illinois village of the same size, with its courthouse, its schoolhouse, its churches, and its neat white dwellings. No; this is a contraband village, consisting of shanties not very unlike the Irish shanties one sees in the suburbs of Chicago. There are two buildings, looking somewhat like cow-sheds, which these poor people call the Baptist and Methodist churches.

In the upper or court end of the village, are the offices of Lieutenant H., who is now in charge of the camp, or part of the camp, and the quarters of the white overseers, who, as regularly as the sun rises, lead these coloured men out to their daily toil upon the breastworks. This is called an engineer's camp, because the black men who live here are employed by engineers to elevate the breastworks of Fort Pickering. Government pays them ten dollars per month, and rations, for their services.

When the news was circulated through the camp that a white man had come to labour among them, who had books to give away, they flocked around the door of my shanty in large droves, men, women, and children, looking very wishful, but saying nothing until I gave them a book, when they would thank me and walk off. The men were so anxious to learn to read, that they would drop their shovels for a few moments at a time, and study their primers.

My school consists of about eighty scholars, though many more might be gathered together if we had a larger room to accommodate them. I occupy the Methodist church for a school building. It is a poor leaky shed, through which the wind and rain go at will. It is poorly seated, also; but it is surprising how many blacks, little and big, can locate themselves here. When I began to teach them, I found many of the scholars reading their a, b, c, and a few learning their abs, and a still smaller number reading in words of four letters. I have been teaching them now some six weeks, and have advanced them considerably. A married woman, aged thirty-seven years, has got to reading her Bible, which gives her much comfort, for she is a noble Christian woman. One boy learned his entire alphabet in half a day. I can see that all who come, be they four or seventy years old, are learning. Several married women attend school, who appear to be true Christians.

While these people are usually uncouth in their manners, as it would naturally be supposed field-hands would be, they are more quiet and orderly than white children could be under the same circumstances. I find the cords of love powerful in restraining them. I find them very thankful for any favour done them, and they learn about as rapidly as white children. I have much pleasure in visiting these people in their homes. Here are many good Christians, with whom I expect to spend a blessed eternity.

A Methodist church, consisting of about thirty members, was organized by an exhorter, a mulatto man of considerable mind. This man assisted me for a time, and took lessons in reading, writing, &c., and showed so much interest in learning, and doing good to his coloured brethren, that I began to think God was going to use him as an instrument for accomplishing much good. An old spectacled coloured man, whom the children call "Uncle Archie," now assists me.

As I said, there is a Methodist and a Baptist church in existence here, the former having about thirty members, and the latter many more. Nine or ten Baptists (coloured, of course) take turns in exhorting, and thus keep up religious exercises nearly all Sabbath day. They are very loud spoken in their manner of preaching, which style pleases this people. I have in Chaplain P. and his lady, kind and wise advisers and helpers in this work. W. N.

COLPORTAGE IN IOWA.

I send you the following letter from a colporteur in Northern Iowa, as it indicates the wants of that great field, and the peculiar missionary character of our colporteur work in that region. Shall we stop such a work because it yields no return in dollars and cents? W.

"I have spent the greater part of the last quarter in H., W., and A. counties, and in visiting our little churches scattered in destitute parts of our new country. Without an exception, there is no permanent minister of the gospel in any of these churches. One church in the northeast of A. county has been organized two years, and but once in that time has it been visited, and the sacrament administered.

"They are struggling on with all the difficulties attending a new country, yet exerting a healthful influence around them, and devotedly attached to the church of their early choice. They sustain the only meetings held for some distance. They were not able to purchase many books, but would gladly have availed themselves of the reading of them, could they have had them. I met with a warm reception. I was the first colporteur that had ever visited that section of country, and feel that the visit was a profitable one to all.

"While I find some things to discourage me, there are many causes for encouragement. The books are held in high esteem, not only by our own people, but by the community at large. Wherever I tell them I am a colporteur for the Presbyterian Board of Publication, I am made welcome. Presbyterianism seems to be gaining an influence through Northern Iowa. The one thing wanting in this part of the country is self-denying, energetic ministers of the gospel that can endure hardship as good soldiers of the cross. May we not hope that the time is not distant when our people will be more awake to the interests of our own church? Alas! how much it has been neglected. When other denominations organize a church, in many cases I find the greater part of them were originally Presbyterians. Our people in this place are yet without a minister, but sustain a prayer-meeting, and are hoping the way may be opened soon for the regular preaching of the gospel."

BOOKS FOR SABBATH-SCHOOLS.

The following acknowledgment was received some time ago from a church in Iowa. It was signed by the minister, ruling elders, and deacons. There are many more of our churches, especially of the smaller and remoter ones, which are "not aware of the number and excellence of the Board's books for youth." Will they not procure and examine them?

The Board is constantly issuing new books for the young. Several have lately been added to its catalogue, and a number more are now in the press.

"Dear Brother—We were gratified to learn that the Board of Publication had donated us a Sabbath-school Library. It reached us a few weeks ago, and was very welcome. It gave a decided impulse to the school. Coming with the opening of spring, when a number of pupils may be gathered in for the summer, it aids very much in that work, being quite an attraction to the young.

"Many among us were not at all aware of the number and excellence of the books for youth among your later publications. We know not where else we could find such a collection of interesting and really valuable works for the young, nor, all things considered, those that are sold on more favourable terms. We hope to add, from time to time, to our library, through the agency of our presbyterial colporteur.

"For the valuable donation received, please accept our sincere thanks."

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

N. B. Under a new regulation of the Board, any of its publications will be sent by mail, prepaid, on receipt of the catalogue price.

I. Blind Annie Lorimer. By the author of "George Miller and his Mother," &c. 18mo. pp. 200. Price 35 and 40 cents.

A most sweet and captivating narrative of a pious blind girl, who, returning from an institution for the instruction of the blind, with the grace of God in her heart, was enabled, by a lovely exhibition of piety and Christian activity, to do much good in her remote neighbourhood, and to draw many souls to the feet of the Redeemer.

II. Bessie Grey; or, the Value of Little Labours. 18mo. pp. 128. Price 25 and 30 cents.

A delightful story for small boys and girls, and so full of Bible instruction and heavenly wisdom, that if its readers will only practice what they can learn from its pages, they will all become better and happier.

III. Walter and the Prize; and other stories. 18mo. pp. 144. Price 25 and 30 cents.

IV. Little Annie's First Bible Lessons. 18mo. pp. 175. Price 35 and 40 cents.

Interesting portions of Old Testament history, related in a natural and instructive way.

V. Steps up the Ladder; or, the Will and the Way. 18mo. pp. 126. Price 25 and 30 cents.

A narrative of a little lad, who, by God's help, worked his way up from abject poverty to comfort and independence, and carried his family with him. A fine illustration of the value and power of sound religious principles.

VI. Nina Grey, a Christmas story of 1861. 18mo. pp. 164. Price 25 and 30 cents.

VII. Rays of Light. 18mo. pp. 216. Price 35 and 40 cents.

A beautiful volume, containing a number of excellent and profitable tales. The frontispiece is a beautiful coloured lithographic likeness of the Princess Beatrice, Queen Victoria's youngest daughter.

The above volumes will all be excellent additions to the Board's Sabbath-school Library.

XII. The Prodigal Son. By the Rev. George S. Mott, pastor of the Presbyterian church at Newton, New Jersey. Small 12mo. pp. 143. Price 40 cents.

An excellent and valuable exposition and enforcement of the precious parable of the Prodigal Son. The book is well adapted to do good to its readers, both learned and unlearned, and we hope it will have an extensive circulation.

The Board has also just issued a neat Marriage Certificate, of which it would be well for every pastor to procure a supply.

Also a certificate of dismission of a church-member from one church to another, with an appended certificate of admission, to be sent back by the church admitting the member to the church dismissing him. This is published at the request of the Presbytery of Connecticut.

Donations received for General Colportage, and for Soldiers and Sailors, by the Presbyterian Board of Publication, from July 11 to August 11, 1863.

BOARD OF CHURCH EXTENSION.

Corresponding Secretary—Rev. H. I. Coe.

Treasurer—David Keith, Esq.

Rooms of the Young Men's Christian Association, corner of Fifth and Olive Streets, St. Louis, Mo.

Communications on the subject of Church Extension should be addressed to the Corresponding Secretary, Corner of Fifth and Olive Streets, St. Louis, Mo.

Donations should be sent to David Keith, Esq., St. Louis, Mo., or, if more convenient, to J. D. Thorpe, Esq., Cincinnati, Ohio; A. Davidson, Esq., Louisville, Ky.; S. D. Powel, Esq., Treasurer of the Board of Domestic Missions, No. 910 Arch Street, Philadelphia; T. H. Nevin, Esq., Pittsburgh, Pa.; Mr. J. B. Kirtland, Memphis, Tennessee; or to William Rankin, Esq., Treasurer of the Board of Foreign Missions, 23 Centre street, New York.

APPROPRIATIONS FROM THE GENERAL FUND.

No appropriation is made without the recommendation of the Presbytery, or the Church Extension Committee of the Presbytery within whose bounds the church applying for aid is located.

No appropriation is paid until the Board receives a certificate from the Trustees of the church aided, stating that their church lot is properly secured, and that the amount appropriated will complete their house of worship, and leave the whole property free from debt.

Appropriations not called for within two years of the date thereof, are regarded as withdrawn.

"FALSE PRIDE."

An Eastern pastor writes, "Please find within four dollars, our first contribution to the Church Extension fund. It is small, from a feeble and indebted church; yet a false pride has not kept us from presenting to the Lord our small sacrifice. We hope to renew it and increase it yearly."

We fear that the reason suggested by our excellent brother as not controlling his people, too often influences our feeble churches. We have long been satisfied that a false pride withheld many a small contribution from the treasury of the Lord. The wiles of the devil are innumerable. As he often prevents the sinner from repenting by the suggestion that it is unmanly to confess his trifling sins, so he often withholds the Christian from small labours and gifts by the plea that they are insignificant. Against this plea our Lord seems especially to have guarded his people. The gift of the two insignificant mites was highly commended. The tears that bedewed his feet were graciously accepted. Let us all remember that if the rills cease to run, the rivers will cease to flow; and that when the rain-drops no longer fall, the earth will become a barren waste.

"LAST BILLS."

"The receipts of the American Congregational Union for May were $907.91, of which $410 came from Massachusetts. During the last five years, "last bills" have been paid by the Union on more than one hundred different churches, and among them all only one has disbanded or changed its polity; and that one, in Waynesville, Ohio, has refunded the $100 which it received."

While we rejoice in the church extension success of our Congregational brethren, as shown in the preceding statement, we would, with humble gratitude to God, add, that our own church, through its Board of Church Extension, has, during the same period, paid the last bills on more than three hundred churches.

THE USES OF RICHES.

The good there is in riches lies altogether in their use. If they are not broken like the box of ointment, and poured out for the refreshment of Jesus Christ in his distressed servants, they lose their worth. Therefore the covetous man may justly write upon his rusting heaps, "These are good for nothing." St. Chrysostom tells us that "he is not rich who lays up much, but he only who lays out much," and "that it is the same thing not to have, as not to lose." I will, therefore, be the richer by a charitable laying out, while the worldling shall be the poorer by his covetous hoarding up. When thou, O Lord! takest the place of man, and from thy high abode where thou dwellest among the praises of the blessed, asketh my charity in the persons of thy needy people, assist me to take thy place, and to give alms of such things as I have. Teach me, in giving alms, to give my mind, to give my heart, to commit to thee, not only a little portion of my property, but also my body, my soul, my salvation.

WELL DONE.

A merchant of Boston, Massachusetts—a Congregationalist—has recently erected, at his own expense, and dedicated to God, a house of worship, which will seat seven hundred and fifty persons. He desires that the seats may always remain free.

The Board of Publication is incorporated under the laws of Pennsylvania under the style of "The Trustees of the Presbyterian Board of Publication."

I bequeath to my executors the sum of ——— dollars, in trust, to pay over the same in ——— after my decease, to the person who, when the same shall be payable, shall act as Treasurer of the Board of Church Extension of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, located in the City of St. Louis, Missouri, to be applied to the uses and purposes of said Board, and under its directions, and the receipt of the said Treasurer shall be a full and legal acquittance of my said executors for the same.

When real estate or other property is given, let it be particularly described.

RESOLUTIONS OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY IN REGARD TO COLLECTIONS.

ENCOURAGING ON THE FRONTIER.

Colorado.

It becomes my duty to report once more the condition of affairs in the Denver church. Matters have progressed finely since my last report, the affairs of the church looking much more prosperous than three months ago. At our communion, the second Sabbath of July, nine persons united with the church, making twenty-three additions since the first of March. The Lord has truly blessed us in this distant land, adding unto us such as we humbly trust he will save. Our Sabbath-school is in a flourishing condition indeed, numbering at this time about eighty scholars and nine teachers. We have commenced building a church thirty-six by sixty-four, seventeen feet in height of story. It will be finished early in September, and when completed will prove a great advantage to us, as well as a credit to the place. I feel that some one must have been praying for us, because everything undertaken by us as a people has proved a success; it may be the good people of Waynesburg, whose hearts followed me to this place with kindest wishes.

If I had one thousand dollars to dispose of, I would soon have another labourer in this important field. I received two invitations last week from two promising points in the territory, to come and preach to them. At B—— City, twenty-five miles north, there are six or seven Presbyterian families very anxious for preaching. The same condition of affairs exists thirty miles east of here, on the P——, south branch, the same D—— is situated on. The Methodists have preaching at both these places; in fact, they seem to wish to monopolize everything. We have a very few Presbyterians from Missouri, but they are all tinctured with the abominable principles of secession, and hence will not coöperate with us. While I did not come here to preach politics, or pray them either, I am solemnly bound to defend my government, and pray for those who exercise authority over us. One man remarked, that while I had not preached politics, I had made "some awful prayers." I should rejoice to see a happy issue of our unhappy difficulties, such an one as will redound to the glory of God and the good of our country; for even here we feel the sad consequences of war, though it is nothing to what it is in the States. Trusting that the Lord will guide you in all your deliberations concerning this important field of labour, the most important in your bounds, I remain, as ever,

Affectionately yours.

Had the Board the means, we would readily occupy the points the brother wishes in Colorado Territory. The territory fills up with amazing rapidity, and we as a church fail to occupy the field.

ACTIVE LABOURS.

Pennsylvania.

With July ended a year of most interesting missionary service with the church in this place; a year fraught with great trials, and with signal mercies. Most of these have been already communicated; and it is of the last three months we now write.

This church was sorely tried by sparing her efficient men for service on the borders, during the exigency caused by the presence of the foe in our own State. Choir and Sabbath-school, church, congregation, and prayer-meetings, all painfully felt their absence. Their military service, though brief, was to them attended with no slight inconvenience and suffering; and at Columbia, where the forces were commanded by Deacon J. G. Frick, of this church, while preventing the rebels from crossing the Susquehanna, they were exposed to deadly peril. God has very graciously heard the prayers of his people, by granting success to their mission, and safely restoring them to the industrial and Christian activities of home. Several are ill, but we look for their early recovery. During this absence of the volunteer militia, I gratuitously taught six hours a day in the High School, that its Principal might do military service, and his family continue to receive his salary for their support. In view of the public perils, it has seemed to be clearly my duty to take an active part in conventions of the people from all parts of the county, met to deliberate and act for these occasions of apparent danger.

For the relief of the wounded at Gettysburg, a deacon and myself proposed to visit immediately the battle-field, but were providentially hindered. The Ladies' Aid of our church have raised and forwarded to the United States Christian Commission, during the past six weeks, in material and money, over three hundred dollars. They have also joined with others, at a great expenditure of time and means, in establishing here a Volunteer Hospital for the care and cure of numerous cases of serious illness, occurring in General Whipple's division, which has for some time been encamped here. The visitations of the camp and the hospital has been blessed of God to the comforting of a number of Christian soldiers. Three—one from Illinois, one from Massachusetts, and one from Maine—have professed to have their hope in Christ, for personal salvation, renewed. Whole companies have formally solicited of me supplies of religious reading. I have furnished the Invalid Camp with over two hundred volumes, in a good book-case, to be used as a circulating library.

These extra services and special incidents are mentioned, my dear brother, because they belong to the cloud of witnesses, testifying everywhere, in a thousand ways, directly and indirectly, the efficient and far-reaching public good caused by the Christian beneficence of the Presbyterian Board of Domestic Missions; since these blessed results of incidental efforts in one of your youngest, and perhaps weakest mission churches, are, under God, due to the kindly afforded sustentation furnished by the Board of Missions, during the infancy of the church.

And within the church, in its ordinary work, God has blessed your mission. A respectable congregation has been gathered; an efficient and working church has been organized and fostered. During the last quarter, five children were baptized; four members were added to the church, and the word and ordinances regularly administered. My health is better than it was last year. One beloved member, after a protracted and painful illness, during which she was enabled, by patience and serenity, to magnify the grace of her ascended Lord, was taken from us, to be for ever with him, "who, having loved his own, loved them to the end." A communion, administered a few days before her departure, was a scene of peculiar privilege. To her soul it seemed a time of holy delight. Like the golden glory caused by the setting sun, glistening in the tear-drops shed by the passing shower, and on the dark clouds rolling away with flashings and thunderings, the bow of promise penciling—so in the experiences of that sick-room communion appeared "the glory of the Father, through his Son the Saviour," in smiles of reconciliation, dispersing the dark shadows of the valley of death, and opening the portals from the sanctuary of sorrow into that of perfect joy and peace. Blessed ministration, which permits us to participate in such scenes of perfect salvation through a perfect Saviour!

RESULTS OF LABOUR BY A RETIRING MISSIONARY.

Kansas.

Dear Brother—As my labours under commission of the Board of Domestic Missions ceased on the second Sabbath of May last, permit me to give you a very brief report.

Since I entered Kansas on the 14th day of June, 1857, I have laboured as an evangelist, stated supply, and pastor. About one-half of that time, whilst engaged in my labours, I was learning, from sad experience, something of the trials and discouragements of a minister trying to preach the gospel under harassing and perplexing embarrassments, arising from the want of an adequate support; so that I can truly pity those who preach the gospel, and yet are not permitted to "live by the gospel." During the other part of my time, I was permitted to enjoy a comfortable support, and to rejoice in pressing forward in manifold labours, praying, hoping, and trusting that my divine Master would make me the humble instrument of doing something for the advancement of his glorious kingdom in this new country.

As to the results, or as yet apparent fruits of my labours, I have been the instrument of gathering into our church in Kansas only about one hundred and eighty communicants, (seventy-three of these into the church of L———,) between thirty and forty of the whole number on examination.

A very hard field of labour L—— has been. When I came here, it was the head-quarters for southern rowdies, fanatical pro-slavery propagandists, and their northern coadjutors; of course the prejudices of such people against a northern man were very great. And then, when L—— was delivered of such people, and the prospect of the church began to grow brighter, the capital and the land-office were removed to T——, which was a great detriment not only to the town, but to the church. And still further, when I came here, this field was occupied by the southern Methodists, who were then engaged in the erection of a church building, which building has never been completed, and their organization itself has passed away.

The Episcopalians also organized a church, and commenced the erection of a church building, and succeeded in simply laying the foundation thereof, when both the building and the organization were abandoned.

The Baptists, the northern Methodists, and the Campbellites, have all attempted to occupy the field, and have also failed. Our church organization, however, is still in existence, and in possession of a neat little church building, with a good bell, and other appropriate church furniture. And the old prejudice against a northern man has nearly passed away. We have also obtained from the legislature, for college purposes, the old capitol building and the ten acres of land connected with it, which property may, perhaps, yet amount to something for educational purposes; said capitol building cost the general government about fifty or fifty-two thousand dollars; not one hundred thousand dollars, as erroneously stated by the editor of the Presbyterian Banner, in his correspondence from L—— in March last.

In the summer of 1858, I had also obtained the promise of a large amount of property (real estate and money) for the support of a University in L——, under the control of our church, which, through the mismanagement or mistakes of men here, and in the East, has been lost to our church, and has passed into the hands of the State and the city of L——; for which loss I know I am not responsible.

I have now turned aside from my usual labours, and for a time (D. V.) I expect to serve my divine Master and my country as chaplain in the "6th Kansas volunteers." May the great Head of the church bless the Board of Domestic Missions, and the people who sustain it.

Yours in the gospel.

A MISSIONARY IN THE HOSPITAL.

Tennessee.

You may be surprised to receive my quarterly report from a point so far distant from the field in which I was commissioned to labour. The reason for it I hope you will accept as satisfactory.

Upon the impulse of the reports of the bloody charge at Vicksburg, on the 22d June, in which many of our own congregation and community were killed and wounded, my people at M—— and L— P—, Ill., took action releasing me from my charge for four or six weeks, to go on a mission as volunteer chaplain to our suffering soldiers. I left on the 15th June, and here spent my time amongst the hospitals here, of which there are ten, containing nearly three thousand patients, mostly wounded. Each hospital has a chaplain; but it is impossible for him, in some cases, with five hundred patients on his hands, to fulfil the promptings of his heart or meet the necessities of his work. I have been cordially welcomed and afforded every facility. They would be rejoiced to have more help.

I have felt it to be a blessed work, interesting on account of one feature, its similarity to the ministry of our Lord and Master, who devoted much of his spiritual ministry to the suffering, and through sympathy with temporal misfortune and relief of physical suffering, made a way for the communication of spiritual blessings. They are ready and willing to receive direction and advice upon their eternal interests. A large proportion of the sufferers are professors of religion, and I find that a word of Christian sympathy is very refreshing to them. Many of them are confined by their wounds in one position week after week, and here, without a friend to relieve the tedium of the slowly revolving days and nights, and thinking of their loved ones at home, fall into despondency, which contributes much towards a fatal result. One poor fellow I found to be disinclined at first to talk. Upon inquiring as to his residence, and various unimportant details of his history, he told me that he had neither father nor mother, and said, "I am alone. I have not a friend in the world." I directed him to a Friend above. He wept, and has talked freely since. I think he is now rejoicing in assurance of the love of the sinner's Friend. I found yesterday a similar case. On pointing him to the Saviour, he says, "But oh! I have been so wicked." I pray that the Spirit, who has produced this conviction, will lead the subject of it into the joyous light of life. Christian people throughout our land should make the suffering in our hospitals special subjects of prayer.

Very respectfully yours.

BOARD OF EDUCATION.

Letters and Communications for the BOARD OF EDUCATION on the subject of Ministerial Education, or of Schools, Academies, and Colleges, may be addressed to the Secretary, Rev. Dr. Chester, or Rev. Thomas McCauley, No. 821 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

Remittances of Money may be made to William Main, Esq., Treasurer, No. 821 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

I. MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

A VOICE FROM CHINA.

My Dear Brother—It is now a long time since I saw a notice calling for communications from former candidates.

I fear I shall not answer all your questions, as I have not at hand the notice. Besides I may be too late for you to make any use of the information I have to communicate.

But I want to say that I am very grateful for the assistance I have received from the Board of Education, and hope in time to not only repay it, but do something more, to help poor students.

For many years I pursued my studies, paying all my expenses by manual labour and teaching. It was my Junior year in College that I received the first aid. After many years of working, teaching, and study, alternating as best I could, you can see how I was prepared to appreciate the handsome assistance rendered by our church. I trust I did appreciate it, and hold it every cent as consecrated, and as such it went to procure the necessities, or to say the most, the comforts of life.

Up to the time of receiving aid from your Board, I had spent a part of each year in teaching, for the preceding eight years. After receiving this aid, I taught but a single term besides one vacation. Other vacations I spent in different destitute parts of our country, acting as colporteur. Immediately after leaving the Seminary, I made my preparations, and sailed for China. You ask, What encouragement we find in our field of labour? Our principal encouragement must be drawn from the promises of God. This people are very indifferent to the message we have come so many thousand miles to bring. Soon after coming here I commenced a boy's boarding-school; in the first place taking a single pupil, a poor friendless orphan boy. Since, I have added one after another, as they have been providentially brought to me, and in a most wonderful manner has the means for the building and support of the school, now containing twenty scholars, been provided. When we most needed it, and from entirely unexpected sources, it has come to us as from the Lord.

One of the oldest boys has been, as we trust, brought to the saving knowledge of the truth. He has been received into the church, and is now employed as an assistant in the school, and we hope he will become an earnest preacher of the gospel to his poor benighted countrymen. He often delivers earnest exhortations to them. We have several other good and hopeful boys, and trust that our labours for them will not be in vain in the Lord.

I preach daily, as I have time from other duties, to the natives, who seem to have but little apprehension of spiritual things. But God can arouse them, and we must pray to him to do it. Our poor efforts may bud and blossom, and bear much fruit after many years, so we need not be discouraged if we do not see an abundant harvest at once.

I desire to make a contribution to the Board of Education, and will take this opportunity of so doing, which please apply for the assistance of students for the ministry.

I know well how to sympathize with poor students, and bless God for the Board of Education. I shall always rejoice in its prosperity; in other words, in its ability to help those who have helped themselves all they can, and need assistance. Wishing you success in your noble efforts, I am, my dear and respected brother, your fellow-labourer in Christ.

Yours truly.

DR. CHALMERS AS A THEOLOGICAL PROFESSOR.

In Dr. Moffat's life of this venerated teacher, at page 410, will be found the following record, which in its closing paragraph unwittingly lays bare the simple secret by which this man of God exerted his great power upon the sons of the prophets, and firmly kept his pupils in all after-life within his charmed circle, as if they had been held by bands of steel.

"The convener of your committee has the satisfaction of bearing witness, and this after the experience of eighteen winters as a Professor of Theology, and five more as the occupier of a previous chair. That his class of last session stands the highest in his estimation of all which have preceded it, if not in its superior number of eminent and distinguished students who stand above the level of their fellows, in what is far better—a more elevated table-land of general proficiency and good scholarship.

"But it is of greatly surpassing moment that we should have to report an obvious increase, from year to year, in their sense of things sacred, and devotedness of heart and spirit to the great objects of the Christian ministry. In the hope of contributing to this increase, during his last collegiate sessions, Dr. Chalmers was in the habit of inviting his students to private interviews, devoted wholly to conversation relative to their own spiritual condition, and prayer."

This was theology carried home to the heart, and the warm gush of personal sympathy that burst out from the Professor's heart in these secret exchanges, lodged in the student's mind and affections, only to spring up in vigorous action for the glory of their common Lord and Master.

The lion and the lamb are together, and that too in Messianic peace—to drink at the same fountain, to call down in mutual closet prayer, mutual blessings from the same munificent Hand. Professor praying for the student, and the student praying for his professor.

That was the charm which made Dr. Chalmers the Prince of Theological Professors in his day.

Would God, for the interests of Zion, that his mantle and his spirit, and his habits of intercourse with his pupils, might fall upon all those who occupy similar seats in the American schools of theological training.

THE PASTOR'S VISIT.

The following hints on pastoral visitation may stir up some of the brethren, and aid them in the performance of that important duty.

It is the duty of every Christian minister to visit the families of which he has the spiritual oversight. Acts xx. 20. It has been enjoined by the Church of Scotland, it has always been the practice of the Presbyterian church in Ireland, and is clearly the teaching of all the standards of American Presbyterians.

To prevent trifling conversation during his visit, and to encourage prayerful reflection after it, the pastor should put the following, or equally solemn and personal questions:

I. Have you family worship, and how is it conducted? Jer. x. 25.

II. Are your children attending Sabbath and daily schools? Prov. xxii. 6.

III. Are you engaged in doing any good work for promoting the glory of God and the good of men? Acts ix. 6.

IV. Do you support the cause of God, according to your means, at home and in foreign lands? 1 Cor. xvi. 2.

V. Do you and all under your authority attend regularly on public worship? Heb. x. 25.

VI. Have you joined the church of God at the Lord's table? Luke xxii. 19.

VII. Have you any suggestions to make as to the best way of benefitting your neighbourhood, and promoting a revival of vital godliness in the congregation with which you are connected? Psalm lxxxv. 6.

"We beseech you, brethren, to know those who labour among you, and are over you in the Lord, and admonish you: and to esteem them very highly in love for their work's sake. They watch for your souls as they who must give account."—Newry, Dublin Evangelical Witness.

A FAIR CALCULATION.

A shrewd friend of ours, who is accustomed to look at things in a business point of view, thinks that the outcry so often made about expensive preaching is without foundation. He argues thus: "I have a family of six persons, who attend church. I pay $24 a year for pew-rent. I hear two sermons on the Sabbath, and one during the week—making 150 'lectures' during the year. I obtain, therefore, for myself and family, 900 lectures for $24; or in other words, I pay about 2½ cents a lecture. People give from 25 to 50 cents for a lecture on astronomy, and almost every other subject you can name, except the gospel; surely, for a 'gospel lecture' I ought to be willing to give at least two cents and a half. The thought thus expressed is certainly just, and might, with great advantage, be carried out still further.—Christian Observer.

DEEDS.

Deeds are greater than words. Deeds have such a life, mute, but undeniable, and grow as living trees and fruit-trees do; they people the vacuity of Time, and make it green and worthy. Why should the oak prove logically that it ought to grow, and will grow? Plant it, try it; what gifts of diligent, judicious assimilation and secretion it has, of progress and resistance, of force to grow, will then declare themselves.—Carlyle.

If thou wouldst preserve a sound body, use fasting and walking; if a healthful soul, fasting and praying: walking exercises the body, praying exercises the soul, fasting cleanses both.

Truth can hardly be expected to adapt herself to the crooked policy and wily sinuosities of worldly affairs; for truth, like light, travels only in straight lines.

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

IN SCHOOLS, ACADEMIES, AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

CALIFORNIA AWAKE ON EDUCATION.

Scarcely more than four years have passed since our esteemed friend and successful educator, Rev. George Burrowes, D. D., landed on the golden shores of the Pacific slope, and it seems almost incredible that such wonderful results should have attended the efforts of himself and his noble coadjutors to develope there an educational system on a proper scriptural basis in so short a time.

Never did the lamented Van Rensselaer show a keener sight into the wants of our country, or of the church's future, than by the hearty support with which he pushed this pioneer Presbyterian effort.

The history of what is now known as "City College, San Francisco," abundantly confirms the wisdom of all that has been expended in the inception of that enterprise.

The Presbyterian church has now a growing literary institution in that thickening population of which she may feel a just pride, knowing that its able corps of instructors, and its liberal donors and intelligent Board of Trustees, are all men of such eminent public, social, and Christian standing, and of such catholic views, as to secure the success of their comprehensive plans, and challenge the respect and confidence of all.

From a private grammar-school of four boys, begun amid many discouragements on the first of November, 1859, we are permitted to apprize the church of the following unparalelled progress made by the energy, prudence, and perseverance of these brethren. A recent letter from a Committee of the Trustees, covering a handsome order for philosophical apparatus for City College, makes the following gratifying statement: "Young as our institution is, it has one hundred and thirty students, with eight instructors; and besides the large lot on which our present college building stands, in the heart of the city, worth at least $35,000, we have within three months past secured twenty-five acres for future buildings of a University, in an unsurpassed situation, four miles from the city, and with this ground the sum of $31,250, secured by lien on real estaae, and all to be paid in the course of twelve months. The deed for the above land is in our possession, and without incumbrance."

As this extracts shows, these brethren are making a commendable effort to put their institution on a scale commensurate with the general progress their community is making from year to year.

They have done most nobly, and certainly deserve, as we trust they will receive, the cordial sympathy and practical coöperation of liberal minded Christians on the Atlantic coast.

In closing their liberal and much needed order for apparatus, the following question is asked:

"Would it possible for you to find some person or persons, in the old established churches of the East, who would give us a TELESCOPE? We have really done our utmost, and it would be gratifying to feel, by some substantial act, that the church in the East is not ignoring an institution, which has been started for the glory of God, by the efforts and prayers of her sons so far away from sympathy and support."

It need only be said further, that the hope is fondly entertained that some of God's affluent and faithful stewards will see in this reasonable appeal the way of duty, and if so, it will give the officers of the Board of Education much pleasure in being the channel by which so desirable a gift may reach this struggling and deserving institution, or by which any further information in their possession may be placed at the service of those who are interested.

From the Presbyterian Banner.

FAMILY ADAGES.

The peculiar characteristics of a family, their morals and manners, may often be traced to the favourite and oft-repeated maxims in the household. "Let me give a people their songs, and I care not who makes their laws," is referable to the same principle. Out-croppings will often appear in the children and in remote branches, to the praise or shame of the family watchword. On his dying-bed, an illiterate and grovelling specimen of humanity once said, "My son get mun, (money) get it honestly if you can, but get mun." What wonder if among this man's descendants we should find extortioners, or even a candidate for the penitentiary! Probably there would have been a very great contrast if he had left these words for an inheritance, "He that maketh haste to be rich shall not be innocent."

The conduct of a certain family of my acquaintance seemed a mystery to me until a talkative and rather shallow member mentioned casually, that her father's motto had always been strictly observed by herself at least. It was "to associate with none beneath them socially, and to aim as much above their own level as possible." Fear of losing caste, or rather an intense desire for promotion, must have been the infirmity, if not the besetting sin, of her pious father. If his religion had imbued more strongly his every-day life, perhaps his favourite sentiment had been more like this: "Do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith," or "Honour all men. Love the brotherhood. Fear God." How much more would it have promoted the peace and usefulness of his family! These home teachings are instilled into the very life. Sermons and Sabbath-day efforts here meet with their most serious and determined opposition, or with cheerful and ready acquiescence. Here, as if reflected by a mirror, parents may witness their own defects in the conduct of their children, or enjoy the double reward of having subdued their evil passions; and here parents have a motive, as others have not, for strengthening themselves in every virtue.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Mission House, 23 Centre Street, New York.

News received to September 14th, 1863.

LATEST DATES AT THE MISSION STATIONS.

Liberia, July 9th; Corisco, July 2d; Fusugasuga, near Bogota, June 20th; Rio de Janeiro, August 7th; Jalandar, June 16th; Lodiana, June 29th; Saharunpur, July 15th; Landour, July 14th; Dehra, June 16th; Futtehgurh, July 14th; Petchaburi, May 20th; Canton, June 25th; Shanghai, June 7th; Tungchow, May 24th; Yokohama, June 15th; San Francisco, August 19th; Omaha, August 18th; Chippewa, Grand Traverse, August 29th.

MOVEMENTS OF MISSIONARIES.

The Rev. John H. Morrison, and the Rev. Alexander Henry and his wife, embarked for India on the 28th of August, via England. Mr. Morrison is returning to his field of labour, with health much improved. Mr. Henry is a member of the Presbytery of West Lexington. We ask for these missionary friends a remembrance in the prayers of our readers.

The Rev. A. G. Simonton and his wife arrived at Rio de Janeiro on the 17th of July; the Rev. A. Folsom and his wife, at Canton, on the 2d of June; and the Rev. D. Thompson, at Yokohama, on the 18th of May—all having been favoured with safe and comfortable voyages.

The Rev. J. L. Scott, we learn with regret, has been compelled to go up to the Hills for his health. His letter from Landour speaks of his having already gained some benefit from the change. The Rev. H. V. Rankin has arrived at Tungchow; he was still in very feeble health, but hopes were cherished of his recovery. Both of these brethren have their families with them.

ALEXANDER HIGH-SCHOOL BUILDING.

A fine site has been obtained for this building near Harrisburg. Considerable progress has been made in preparing materials for it—bricks and carpenter work, under the charge of Mr. James R. Amos, who hoped to build the house as soon as the rainy season ends.

DISCOURAGEMENT AT CORISCO.

Mr. Mackey refers to the rumours of Spanish interference with our mission on this island, as exerting an injurious influence among the natives. Some of the head-men suppose they would gain much profit by having Spanish ships of war visiting the island. They do not seem to care much for the priests promised by these rumours, but greater indifference to spiritual things is one bad result of such reports. The people of the island are largely engaged in traffic on the rivers opposite. This takes them away from their homes, and as it is carried on to a considerable extent by the use of rum as a means of paying for India rubber and dye-woods, its influence is demoralizing. Some of the church-members have been led astray by it; and the missionaries greatly desire to see a return of the earnest attention to religious things which was given two or three years ago.

THE PRIESTS AND THE GOVERNMENT IN NEW GRANADA.

The government is firmly carrying into effect the measures relating to the church. The priests are required to take the oath, and on refusing, are banished from the country. Some of them propose to resign the priesthood. Considering the immense injury inflicted on the country by the Romanist ecclesiastics, the overthrow of their political power is a reason of thanksgiving. Let us hope that it will be soon followed by the overthrow of their spiritual power.

ENCOURAGEMENT AT RIO DE JANEIRO.

Four persons had been received by the session on examination, and two or three others would be received by letters of dismission, for the communion service to be held on the next Sabbath after the date of the letter acknowledged above.

NEED OF MORE MEN IN INDIA.

The failure of the health of Messrs. Scott, Walsh, and Fullerton, of the Furrukhabad mission, is strongly urged in these letters as a reason for sending out more men without delay. Even if these brethren should regain their health, as we trust they will, it would be important to have new men on the ground preparing for the work—becoming ready to supply places which may be made vacant, or to occupy new posts in this great field.

THE NEWS FROM JAPAN.

Our letters of latest date were written when there was a lull in the troubles between the Japanese and the foreign powers, and the brethren were expecting to be allowed to go forward in their work without interruption, at least for a time. Later advices in the newspapers report hostilities as having commenced. Whether these will become general, remains to be seen. If they should, the missionaries and other foreign residents will have to leave the country. The Lord reigns, and he will protect his servants. We trust, also, that he will not suffer the partly open door into Japan to be closed against the gospel.

Things to be Considered.

Many of the churches make their annual collections in aid of foreign missions, in this and the succeeding months. For their use, we state the following important facts:

1. Agreeably to the instructions of the last General Assembly, all the brethren under appointment as missionaries, who could go out this year, either have been sent, or soon will be,—two families to China; one to India, besides Mr. Morrison returning to that country; one missionary soon to be sent to Corisco; and another, in a few months, to Shanghai. We are thankful for these new labourers, though they will little more than replace those who were called to their rest last year.

2. The missionary work, in most of the missions, has been restricted for the last two years, by considerations of prudence, in these sad times—leading the Committee to guard carefully against authorizing any expenditure that could be avoided or postponed. It is important that the missions should be released from these restrictions as soon as possible.

3. There are encouraging signs of progress. Such are the applications now pending before the Committee, for appointment as missionaries; and such the call for more labourers from most of the missions, with the application for funds to build some chapels and dwelling-houses, and to support additional schools—evidence of the growing work of the brethren. Still more cheering are the influences of the Holy Spirit in the conversion of souls, which have been granted in an unusual degree at several stations. It is also a proof of the grace of the Holy Spirit, that the churches, in their gifts, from the 1st of May to the 1st of September, have made an advance over the amount given in the same months last year. The rate of exchange is still very unfavourable; yet there has been some improvement in this respect.

We group these things together, as encouraging. We regard them as pointing to further progress. They are very briefly stated; but we hope our readers will dwell on them in their thoughts. They will serve to show that the blessing of God is still resting upon this work, and that his people are called upon to support it by their gifts and by their prayers, under the assurance that the great Redeemer is going before them.

AFRICA—CORISCO MISSION.

Report of Itandaluku, the sub-station at Evangasimba, by the Rev. R. Hamill Nassau, M. D.

I. Physical Labour.

The confused condition in which "the Sub-station at Evangasimba" was left, by the death of the Rev. T. S. Ogden, and by the changes in the mission, threw into my hands, as among the most obvious duties of a Superintendent's office, a large amount of secular work. The services of several men were constantly employed in building new and repairing old fences, marking lines of property, repairing roofs, building additional rooms or houses, uprooting stumps, making paths, clearing the "bush," carpentering on benches, closets, &c., so that almost six months passed before I could reduce the number of constant employees to two.

By the alteration of a partition-wall, and the erection of an additional room as a wing, at the cost of twenty-five dollars, Itandaluku is much more commodious for family and school purposes than as originally built. A piece of ground in front of the house was bought for six dollars. It is a most valuable addition—the effect being to remove the house from the former unpleasant proximity to the outside native line of noise, confusion, and impertinent intrusion. A strong mbimo picket-fence has been erected along the most exposed property-line, which had been marked only by a slight bamboo structure; and lines formerly unmarked, have been enclosed by bamboo—so that now the protection is quite complete.

Many patients, with wretched ulcers, wounds, pains, eruptions, boils, &c., requiring the scalpel, the cataplasm, the bandage, the bolus, or the potion, came to me at the first; and I went out occasionally to practice in the towns; but the accumulation of other station business soon cut off such professional visits, even if the associated employment of fetish medicines, and the opposition of a patient's superstitious friends had not made a physician's call a work of supererogation. Were it not for the coming of the children for relief from their petty ailments, "Othello's occupation" among the natives would be "gone."

II. Education.

During the year there have been in attendance thirty-one girls; present at the opening, nineteen; added, twelve; of whom six had been pupils at some former time, but had left for various reasons. The greatest number present at any time during the year, twenty-six; average attendance, twenty-two. There have left, seven; of whom one was dismissed for misconduct; one little child removed by her father; one went (with permission) to be married to a betrothed schoolboy on the mainland; one living with Mrs. Mackey; three taken by their relatives to be married to polygamists.

I found the instruction of the girls in the hands of a native young man, whom I had intended employing as my interpreter. Occupancy in secular station work drew from the study of the language my attention, and half of his time was therefore employed in the entire literary instruction of the school. This teacher went away in January, to engage in trade, leaving the entire instruction with me for two months, when he returned and served for three months, and then left me finally. Since June, the lessons have again been entirely in my hands, except that during August and September, Mrs. McQueen has taught during the latter half of each morning.

The progress of the scholars has been gratifying. I reorganized and systematized the classes and their studies. Many were studying English, without yet having learned to read in their own language. The five who could read Benga, took part in the daily opening religious exercises, and all the rest were thrown into one class, on the Benga alphabet; and as the older and more intelligent pressed beyond the younger, they were subdivided into spelling-classes, and from these some advanced to reading-classes. Now ten more are able to read so well as to join in the morning devotions; and there are none, even of the youngest, who were scholars at the beginning of the year, who either have not learned to read well, or who are not far advanced in spelling lessons. The study of the Benga Primer, Questions, and Testament, has occupied the first part of school-time; in the second half are heard English classes—two geography, three spelling, and four reading. No attention has been paid to arithmetic, philosophy, &c., the effort being to preserve them from the confusing effect of many studies, and to insist on the perfect apprehension of each page, before the pupil is allowed to turn to another. In this effort we have succeeded.

A judicious rearrangement of hours deserves notice. The children take a slight breakfast by themselves. The school-hours are from eight to half-past nine, and (after a recess of fifteen minutes) from quarter to ten to eleven o'clock A. M. Attention is paid to regularity of meals; their dinner is promptly ready by twelve o'clock, at which meal, and also at supper, one of us always sits with them. A fruitful cause of quarrels and petty thefts about food was removed by providing safe places of deposit, and requiring of the older girls responsibility, care, and regularity in the preparation of food. To a variety of victuals, and its careful preparation, is in a large measure due the good health of the girls. There has been no death, and not much sickness, excepting some severe coughs during the change from the rainy to the dry season.

In deportment the girls have in the main been well-behaved. The Ukuku excitement caused many of them to run away; but they all returned, and their subsequent conduct has been orderly. The "care of the girls" out of school hours, the supply of their numerous little wants, the settlement of their little difficulties, has fallen to the share of Miss Mary C Latta; and she has bound them to her by an affectionate interest that, becoming mutual, has made them look to her as to a mother.

The sewing hours of the afternoon, in charge of Miss Latta, have been occupied in the sewing of shirts and other garments, and in the making and repairing of their dresses, under her eye and with the assistance of Mrs. McQueen. By such efforts the girls have raised considerably more than enough to support one of their number. Out of school-hours they have earned by their needles over nineteen dollars for monthly missionary collections, besides sewing for half of their number, who were too small to sew much for themselves.

Besides the female pupils, I have had with me during the year four boys, the remnant of Mr. Ogden's Advanced School, as boarders; irregulars, five in number, joined at intervals as day scholars. After the establishment of the Public School at Evangasimba, these irregulars very properly transferred themselves to it. Of the boarders, one was dismissed for misconduct; two left without permission—thus leaving but one with me at present. They were all intelligent boys, and made excellent progress in spelling, reading, geography, Scripture questions, and English grammar.

I have endeavoured to teach the native Christians, connected with the station, who have not had the advantage of instruction in their youth. Five evenings in the week, three men have spent an hour and a half in my study, reading the Scriptures in Benga and English. An hour has also been given in the afternoon, for most of the year, in specially instructing one who hopes some day to be a Bible reader on the mainland. It requires great perseverance for an adult to learn to read. He has advanced in both languages.

III. Spiritual Improvement.

We feel that this training in civilization and inculcation of knowledge is in vain, without God's sanctifying influence. Our pupils are therefore made to feel that the morning and evening devotions are for them. Hymns and the Scriptures in their own language are much used; and those who can read, take part in the reading in the evening, and at the same time a verse is recited by all who can learn one.

Miss Latta has spent an hour, four evenings in the week, in imparting religious instruction, before they kneel in the good-night prayer. On Thursday evening, an hour is occupied in singing Sabbath-school songs, and on Friday evening a short time is passed in a prayer-meeting for their special improvement. In "the morning" is seed sown, and in "the evening" the hand is not "withheld." Sowing thus beside "all waters," we believe, trusting in our God, that we may reap. In the month of March, we were cheered by a hope that God's time of blessing had come. The seriousness that pervaded the whole school, the tearful eyes, the opened Bible read voluntarily every hour of the day, the requests for prayer, and the inquiries as to the way, gave promise of good. But the volatile thoughts soon forgot. Nevertheless, upon hearts of three, some permanent, hopeful impression seemed to have been made.

IV. Household Arrangements.

I have already mentioned Mrs. McQueen's assistance in the school-room, and in the care of the girls. Her principal duty has been in the orderly and comfortable arrangement of the Itandaluku household. Cut off as we are in this land, from so many temporal comforts, her provident provision has, we believe, been a large instrumentality in God's hands, of preserving the life and excellent health by which the year has been marked. Only one of our number has been kept by sickness from special duty for more than a day; and at no time have we had fever of marked type, or of symptoms such as should cause anxiety—though indispositions, probably some of fever's protean forms of manifestation, have at times given pain, and reminded us of human weakness. This good report of health we are able to make, after close occupation in a growing school, and with business that fell from the hands of some of the absent members of the mission. We thank God. For this, and for the success he has vouchsafed the station, we will trust and take courage.

INDIA—LODIANA MISSION.

Itinerations from the Station at Lodiana.

Mr. Thackwell, who also attended two fairs in the vicinity of Lodiana, reports of his itinerations as follows:

"In November last Qadir Bakhsh and myself went on a preaching tour towards the south as far as Kotla, and thence to the south-east, by way of Nabha and Patiala, to Ambala. Being a season, when the villagers generally were engaged in their fields, we gave our chief attention to the larger villages and to the district towns along the route; in which places we found large audiences of the non-agricultural classes, who generally received us kindly, manifesting a spirit of cordiality and good-will which was very encouraging.

The City of Nabha visited.

"We availed ourselves of opportunities offered, to present to the Nawab of Kotla and to the Rajah of Nabha, each, a copy of the New Testament, together with some books of a controversial character, which they promised to reserve for their own reading. The city of Nabha is one of the nicest and cleanest in Northern India. The inhabitants also appear happy and prosperous. A good English school at Nabha is a desideratum. This was brought to the notice of the Rajah, and he at the time declared his intention to establish one. Such schools may be made valuable auxiliaries in Christianizing the country; for although nothing but the grace of God can implant in the heart a saving faith in the Saviour, still means must be used for introducing knowledge into the understanding; and this may be accomplished not only by the preacher, but by schools.

"A large proportion of the people at Nabha can read. They eagerly sought our books, and so great was their importunity, that they literally besieged our tents; and as many years had elapsed since the last visit of a missionary, several hundred volumes of the gospels, tracts, etc., were given away.

A different reception at the City of Patiala.

"Thus far our itineration was marked by the absence of that opposition which we usually meet with from the more bigoted of the Hindus and Mohammedans. Here and there an opponent appeared, but the great majority of the people received our message kindly. As soon, however, as we began to draw nigh to the city of Patiala, we perceived unmistakable symptoms of a change in the disposition of the people towards us. We were met by a spirit of resistance, which at times could scarcely be controlled, and in the city we found the people under the influence of a power which was evidently inimical to the cause which we represented, and we could not but feel that our presence was unwelcome. The people seemed to dislike even to deal with us. Every one asked us double the value of everything we needed, and at their valuation we were compelled to purchase, or go without. We found it more difficult to procure provisions there, than at villages remote from any bazar."

Thanesar and Pahoe visited—A Sikh Fair.

In December, Mr. Thackwell, accompanied Mr. Carleton of Ambala, on a preaching tour through the Ambala district. He says, "We visited Thanesar and Pahoe. Had large audiences in the former place; which is remarkable, inasmuch as Thanesar is a great centre of Hinduism, containing a celebrated shrine, and where we might consequently have expected to find a violent spirit of opposition. That it was not so is the more gratifying, inasmuch as such a spirit was undoubtedly met there in former years. Nevertheless, the people listened to us well, and we met with no more opposition there, than we often experience in cities where the gospel has been daily preached for years."

Mr. Thackwell also visited the Nandpur Sikh mela in March, accompanied by the Scripture reader, Qadir Bakhsh, and had large audiences in the villages by the way. He remarks, "The mela was largely attended, and for five days, from morn till eve, the gospel news was proclaimed to the assembled pilgrims. I more than once heard individuals strike up a hymn in praise of Jesus as the Saviour, which, to say the least, marks an absence of that prejudice against Christianity, which is so characteristic of the Mohammedan. The Sikhs are an interesting people, and, to my mind, they present the most encouraging field for the missionary."

Six weeks among more than a hundred villages and towns.

Early in January, Mr. Rudolph started on an itineration, which occupied him about six weeks. He visited above one hundred and twenty villages and towns, and writes as follows:

"During the first part of this itineration, I was accompanied by Qadir Bakhsh, and when his presence was required at the station, John Dales took his place. We went towards the east and southeast of Lodiana, visiting daily from three to five villages. Some of these were but small, and our audiences frequently consisted of but ten or twelve hearers. In other places, and often where we least expected it, we had large assemblies. Many villages had never been visited by a missionary, but the gospel had, nevertheless, found its way into some of them by means of the press. In most of the villages to the east of Lodiana we found numbers of people still suffering the effects of the fever, that had prevailed toward the close of the rainy season. An old town, Bahlolpur, especially, had been much affected by this visitation of a chastening Providence. The account that the people gave of the number attacked by the disease, almost surpasses belief. An old, dilapidated place, nearly depopulated, and half in ruins, it looked, with its filthy, narrow lanes, as if it had been built on purpose to breed sickness; for the very first sanitary rules had been disregarded. The sight of so many feeble, emaciated figures, dragging themselves with difficulty along the streets, and dropping down half exhausted on the spot where we stood to preach, was touching, and furnished us matter for our discourses.

"In smaller villages, the fever had called for fewer victims, and as we came further south, we found that the people had suffered less in proportion. They were mostly Hindus, and were found busily engaged in their various avocations. They appeared to be a thriving people, so far as worldly prosperity went, but they knew nothing of the happiness of the true believer. We were well received almost everywhere. In the larger villages crowds of intelligent men would collect; they would listen with marked attention to all that we said about the transitory nature of earthly things, the deceitfulness of riches, and the danger to which they expose their possessors, the necessity of repentance, and preparation for death, &c. There was nothing to object to in all this; the people could subscribe to every word. It seemed so hard to ruffle the calm, and to tell them what we knew would change the aspect of affairs. Why then mention the stone of stumbling and the rock of offence, Christ, the only Mediator and Saviour, and salvation through him alone? Might it not destroy the good impression that had been made? There was no help for it, the truth must be told, and the whole truth. The gospel plan of salvation must be exhibited, whether they would hear or whether they would forbear. That stone of stumbling, though rejected by the Mullahs and the Brahmins, must be laid as the corner-stone in all our addresses, even at the hazard of being gainsaid everywhere. As it was, frequently our fears were not realized, and the hearers listened even to this part of our discourses quietly, and without manifesting any dislike to it.

Hindu indifference—A singular example.

"The Hindus, as usual, showed much indifference, when their errors were attacked. There was a disposition to put all religions on the same level, on the principle that every one likes his own best; and they maintained that, in the end, the mainspring of all religious action is but self-interest. They were ready to prove this by examples. One of them told of a woman, who performed various rites for her soul's benefit, at the advice first of a Brahmin, then of Sanyasi, and afterwards of a Bairagi. By this time she had been fleeced of a large part of her property. Finally she went to Qazi and consulted him. She paid him his fee, but made up her mind that the whole business was a cheat, and all religions alike false.

"The Hindu that related this story before a large audience, plainly showed that he believed Hinduism and Mohammedanism alike worthless; his candid acknowledgment was relished by all, and I seized this favourable opportunity to show that I agreed with him, but at the same time to remark, that while it was true that generally all sought their own, there was yet one exception. For 'the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many.'"

Qadir Bakhsh attended the fairs at Jwalamukhi both in the spring and in the autumn.

INDIA—FURRUKHABAD MISSION.

A MISSIONARY TOUR.

The Rev. R. S. Fullerton wrote the account here inserted, in January last. It will be read with interest, not diminished by the delay in its insertion in the Record.

The missionary tour to which I refer, was made in company with brother Scott, and some eight or nine native Christians. We went up the right bank of the Ganges as far as Quaim-Ganj, then turned to the southwest, and kept this course until we reached Aliganj; thence we travelled in a south-easterly direction until we reached Mohamadabad, and from that place we marched in an easterly course until we reached home. During our absence we visited some two hundred and fifty villages, and preached in places where the voice of the missionary was never heard before.

Each day's order of travelling and work.

We took two pals, (very small tents,) one for the native Christians and one for ourselves. These we sent on early in the morning to some point ahead, and the native Christians usually visited all the villages within one or two miles, leaving the more remote villages to brother Scott and myself, who were on horseback.

We generally reached our camping ground late in the evening; had our dinner about dark, and met immediately after for prayer, after which we spent an hour in recounting the labours and incidents of the day. This was an hour to which we all looked forward with interest, as we were anxious to hear how many villages had been visited, how the people received the truth, what course of argument had been pursued, what opposition had been met with, and how overcome, &c.

Plan of proceeding at a village—Apparent interest.

Our plan on reaching a village was to send for the watchman, and ask him to tell the people that some persons had arrived who were about to preach the gospel at the choupar, the place to which strangers always resort on entering a village, and that they were invited to attend. In some cases the whole village turned out. The men gathering around us and taking their seats on the ground, the low caste women standing or sitting on the ground at some distance, and the more respectable women (in the estimation of the villagers) listening from the tops of the neighbouring houses, or behind an adjacent wall. Our catechists say that they never preached to so many women before. They listened with evident interest, and in one or two instances called our people back, and asked them to repeat the name of the Saviour whom they had preached, saying that henceforth they would worship him alone; and they were left, some of them at their spinning wheels, and some of them drawing water at the wells, repeating the name of Jesus, for fear they should forget it.

"But little opposition"—Ignorance of the people.

We met with but little opposition anywhere, usually had large attentive audiences, and after preaching to the simple minded villagers they often pressed us to take something to eat. The ignorance of the people is deplorable; we visited scores of villages in which there was not a person who could either read or write. They serve their idols from fear, not from love. They more than once entered bitter complaints against them, and said that they were only restrained by fear from breaking them up and throwing them away; that they had never done them any good, and that they feared they never would. When asked what they had to fear from such idols, their reply was that while they had but little power to do good they had power to do a great deal of evil, that their fields would become unproductive, and that sickness and death would enter their families as a consequence of their forsaking them.

Their distressed condition—Their only relief.

They are usually very poor, are oppressed by their priests, who have a thousand ways of extorting money from them, and hence they have to work from morning until night, and often until seven and eight o'clock at night, for a mere subsistence upon the coarsest fare. Poor people, they serve a hard master, who binds heavy burdens and lays them upon them, and who makes them no return for their labour. O that they would forsake his service for the service of Him who says, "Come unto me all ye that are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest." It is a precious privilege to be permitted to direct these poor heavy laden wanderers to such a Saviour. May the day soon come when they shall all be made free with that liberty which makes free indeed.

Ruins of an ancient city.

In our tour we passed over the ruins of Sankusa. It is known to have been an important city long before the birth of our Saviour. Coins of the fourth century are still dug out of its ruins, and some of a later date. It is thought that it was a Boodhist city before the Hindus got possession of the country, that it was first destroyed by the latter, and then rebuilt by them; and that it was afterwards taken from them by the Mussulmans and destroyed, there is ample evidence in the heaps of broken idols about the place.

CHINA—CANTON MISSION.

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.

There is a missionary physician connected with the Canton Mission, John G. Kerr, M. D., whose labours form an interesting and most valuable department of the work. The number of out-patients of the Canton Hospital and the Fuh-Shan Dispensary, last year, was 22,133. An immense amount of distress was relieved, and a most happy influence was exerted thereby for the Christian religion. We make two extracts from the report of 1862.

Interesting Notices.

An unusual number of officers have applied for treatment during the year. One of these, who was formerly a Tautai in the province of Kwangsi, came from Hunan, his native province, for the purpose of having his eyes operated on.

Another officer of high rank was visited at his residence at the temple of Longevity, and was successfully treated for a dropsical affection of the lower extremities. The district magistrate of Tien-peh was under treatment for an old stricture; and when he returned home, he took with him a young man who had formerly been connected with the hospital, and who was able to continue the treatment.

During the literary examinations, many scholars from various parts of the province visited the hospital, to obtain medicine for themselves, or to consult about some cases in their families. A remarkable case occurred, in which a literary man was indebted to the hospital for his success in obtaining two degrees. Some time last year, an old man, above eighty years of age, was operated on successfully for cataract. After the annual examination in the spring, he called to inform me that he had been successful in obtaining the first degree, and to express his gratitude; "for," said he, "how could I have seen to write, but for the doctor's skill?" After the recent examination for the second degree, the old man called again to communicate the joyful intelligence that he had been successful a second time, and to inform me that he was making preparations to go to Peking to compete for the third degree, which he had been assured by the literary chancellor he could obtain.

Applications by letter for medicine and advice are not uncommon. One of the most remarkable examples occurred in the following translation of a letter from a native physician, which is also interesting as exhibiting the fact that foreign things are undergoing an investigation and exciting a degree of attention of which we have not been aware. Accompanying the letter from the native physician was a long one from the family, with a history of the case. I was compelled to say, in reply, that the plan proposed would be of no avail:—

"Dr. Tsâi Tui-yuen, of Shun-teh district, sends his compliments to the physician of the Benevolent Hospital. I am aware, from having read Dr. Hobson's 'Physiology,' that your honourable country has a mode of healing called 'transfusion of blood.' Now, for those who are exhausted and debilitated by long and dangerous sickness, this is certainly an excellent means of prolonging life. I have often advised my relatives and friends to go to your honourable hospital, but hitherto various reasons have prevented. Sometimes there has been urgent business, and sometimes they have been too poor to get persons who would supply the blood. In some cases the disease has been too severe to admit of going so far, and others have been prevented by fear; while there are many who delay so long as to be beyond the reach of remedies. These things make me very sad, and I am, therefore, exceedingly anxious to learn this excellent mode of healing diseases, so that I may be able to cure the sick who are far away, and thus assist in carrying out the intentions of your benevolent hospital, and in spreading abroad the remedies of western countries. But I feared that one so stupid as myself could not learn, and I did not know if your exalted brightness would be willing to teach.

"Now, I have a friend fifty years old, who, by reason of sorrow and anxiety, is very much weakened, and is daily becoming worse, so that I fear he is in danger of an attack of paralysis, and that, if transfusion of blood be not resorted to, he cannot be cured. He has two sons, who are willing to furnish the blood for their father. If this is done, the sons, without sustaining much injury, may be the means of restoring their father to life—for the blood of the children is like that of the father, and therefore the best to be used. Having given a full account of the case, the patient's nephew is sent to the hospital to request the doctor to return a clear answer, and if he is willing to apply this remedy, then the patient will be at once taken to the hospital, and perhaps I myself will accompany him." . . .

Religious Instruction.

The religious department has been, as heretofore, in the charge of the Rev. C. F. Preston. Public preaching, for both out and in-patients, has been kept up on four days of each week. The morning service for in-patients and others connected with the hospital, and our families, has been kept up during the year. The number of persons attending this service has been from thirty to fifty. The exercises consist in reading a portion of Scripture, with familiar explanations to enforce the truths taught upon the minds and consciences of the hearers. Including the attendants of patients, not less than 500 persons have thus enjoyed regular daily instruction on the all-important subjects revealed in God's holy word. Some of these persons were from distant provinces, and many of them from remote parts of this province. On returning to their homes, they are supplied with Christian tracts and books. Among their friends and neighbours, these books and the doctrines taught at the hospital naturally become subjects of conversation; the knowledge received is imparted to others. In this and a thousand other ways, truth is silently and imperceptibly undermining the great systems of error and superstition which shroud this great land in worse than Egyptian darkness. Sooner or later they must fall, and men will be astonished, because they do not see the agencies at work, or do not consider that God works out mighty results with apparently very inadequate means. . . .

Four pupils have been under instruction during the year. Two of them have been connected with the hospital long enough to be quite familiar with its duties, and to be of much assistance in dispensing medicines.

It is considered an important part of the objects of the hospital to educate young men in the science and art of medicine and surgery. This cannot now be done to the extent desired, but the practical knowledge acquired by the pupils is such as places them far in advance of native physicians in the treatment of many forms of disease, and especially in every department of surgery.

KIDNAPPING THE SOUTH SEA ISLANDERS.

A number of vessels have been for some time cleared from the port of Callao, South America, under the pretence of bringing hired labourers from the South Sea Islands, which have seized and carried off all the inhabitants of some of the smaller islands, with their hogs, poultry, and whatever they found desirable; they have also taken a great number of people from the larger islands, on some of which there are missionary stations. The French government is now, however, actively engaged in putting a stop to the traffic from those islands under their protection, and a petition has been transmitted from the inhabitants of Sydney, New South Wales, to the House of Lords in England, asking their interposition for the suppression of this slave-trade.

OUR SOLDIERS AND PRISONERS.

The various Synods and Presbyteries will soon hold their usual fall meetings. We beg them not to forget the many calls now made upon the Board of Publication on behalf of our sick and wounded soldiers, and the many thousands of prisoners now in the hands of the United States Government. So numerous and pressing are these calls upon the Board, that its Distribution Fund is exhausted as fast as it is replenished. Would the churches furnish us a far larger amount for this use, it could all be used most advantageously, and would carry blessings to tens of thousands of those classes of our fellow citizens. We trust the several Presbyteries and Synods will take such action as to secure increased contributions for this noble work.

Should any of our churches desire to have their contributions expended through the Agency of the Christian Commission, we hope they will do it in the way pointed out in the following resolution of the last General Assembly, viz:

"Resolved, That it be recommended to our churches, in making contributions for the purchase of books and tracts for the benefit of our brave soldiers and sailors, that they forward the amount contributed to our Board of Publication, with the explicit request that the Board supply the Christian Commission with books and tracts, for the benefit of the army and navy, to the amount contributed for that purpose."

ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

The Board of Publication very thankfully acknowledges the donation of $1000 from Messrs. R. L and A. Stuart of New York, "to be distributed to our army and navy, and the rebel sick."

The sum has already been distributed as follows, viz. $500 to the soldiers, sailors, and prisoners in the camps, hospitals, and military prisons of the northwest and on the Mississippi river; $300 to those in Ohio, Kentucky, and Tennessee, and $200 to those east of the Alleghenies.

LETTER FROM VICKSBURG.

THE BOARD OF PUBLICATION'S BOOKS.

The following letter is from a chaplain, who has, during the past months, been labouring in the vicinity of Vicksburg. He has distributed a large number of the books and tracts of the Presbyterian Board of Publication among the soldiers, both black and white, and in the hospitals in that region.

BIG BLACK, rear of Vicksburg, Miss., August, 1863.

Rev. and dear Brother—The last box of books sent, reached me at or near Vicksburg, and has afforded me great pleasure. At Chickasaw Bayou I found some gentlemen of the army, who were organizing coloured regiments, and wished very much to get reading-books for them. I was very grateful that I could supply them from your box. They admired "My Own Primer" very much, and thought the boys, as all the black men are called, would soon learn to read, with such facilities. In the hospitals in the rear of Vicksburg, before our conquering army left them, the coloured men begged for books, and were supplied. Officers from Young's Point and Milliken's Bend, commanding blacks, were also partially supplied from my store. On the 6th of July, I came from Young's Point to Vicksburg, in company with the chaplain of the forty-seventh Illinois. We had laboured near each other in Arkansas,—we had rejoiced in the stillness of the memorable Fourth, after the roar of a six weeks' bombardment, and in the quiet of the Sabbath, the 5th. And having rested and laboured that day, according to the commandment, on the next day we took our horses on the boat, and visited the conquered city. We rode through its caved streets, and amidst its mighty guns, shelled churches, and shattered palaces, and torn dwellings, and blasted fortifications, and hunger-stricken inhabitants; we thanked God for what his own hand had done—for striking right here the death blow to the rebellion! We visited the City Hospital, a most conspicuous mark from our own breastworks, before the surrender, being on the heights of the city. Shells had entered, and wounded and killed some in it, though our guns did not designedly hit it, after it was recognised as a hospital. The poor, sick, and half-famished prisoners rejoiced to see us, and get some of your beautiful publications. Our regret was, that our supply could then meet not one-tenth of their wants. I remained to labour in the rebel hospitals, these having near five thousand sick and wounded, and to witness scenes of woe, of want, of wasting, and unburied dead, as well as the dying, that were most heart-sickening.

Said a citizen of Vicksburg, as I rode to a burying-ground where were six uncovered dead, waiting for a place in the shallow trench, several of them wrapped in their fly-swarming blankets—these making fifteen that had come from rebel hospitals that day—"Is not this enough to make one sick of war?" "Yes," I replied, "and they who instigated and brought it on, have resting on them a tremendous responsibility!" To this he made no answer.

Passing the same Potter's-field last week, while attending the funeral of the wife of an old citizen of Vicksburg, who took her death-cold in the damp cave to which he fled, with his wife and six children, in the straitness of the siege, I asked a lieutenant, watching the coloured burial detail there, how many bodies had been brought that day—he said, "twenty six!" Yet we were shipping north many of our sick, and to the south and interior most of the sick of the rebel army. O, it is enough to make one sick of war! And then the walking shadows of coloured men, women, and children—their sunken cheeks, and hollow eyes, and ghastly features—with the painful conviction that thousands and tens of thousands of that doomed race must die before the war can end; and those about us even cannot be saved from death, after all that Government and private benevolence can do, because their masters will not suffer them quietly to labour on healthful plantations, and earn their own bread, and raise their own vegetables and meat, led us almost to say; "O that I could fly away and be at rest; that I might hide myself till these calamities be overpast!" And yet I am thankful that I can remain to cry, "These dry bones may live!"

I succeeded in getting printed handbills posted through Vicksburg, inviting chaplains, officers, soldiers, and citizens, to meet in the Presbyterian church, in the spirit of the President's Proclamation, on the 6th, for thanksgiving. We had a noble sermon on "the principles of religious liberty, and our causes for thanksgiving," from Rev. Professor Russell, of Jacksonville, Illinois, of the United States Christian Commission, and a good, appreciative audience; though the former Methodist pastor of Vicksburg, being present, said to me, that he felt more like keeping a day of fasting than of thanksgiving. So, doubtless, felt all the sympathizers with rebellion.

I am thankful that I live to labour. I have some of your books with our regiment here, fifteen miles east of Vicksburg, and am aiding chaplains in a camp-meeting in our magnificent grove. We have prayer daily at half-past eight, and preaching in the evening. The Spirit witnesses to the preaching and prayers with power; and a great work, we trust, has commenced, to gladden many wives, and mothers, and churches at home, and give great joy in heaven over sinners repenting.

Yours, truly, J. P.

N. B.—The Distribution Fund of the Board of Publication, from which these grants of books for the soldiers, sailors, hospitals, &c., in every part of the wide field are made, is now entirely exhausted. Any who desire to aid the Board in carrying forward this good work, should send their contributions to Winthrop Sargent, Treasurer, No. 821 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

A BLIND GIRL.

Some time since, a colporteur of the Board encountered, in the State of Delaware, a very interesting young girl, who was entirely blind, and who exhibited intense anxiety to possess and read for herself the word of God He reported her case, and a New Testament for the blind, in raised letters, was procured for her as a gift from the American Bible Society. The following is a notice from the same colporteur, of a subsequent interview with her.

"Please allow me the favour of expressing through the columns of the Home and Foreign Record, to the American Bible Society, the thanks of Miss ——, the blind girl in Delaware, for the gift of the large Testament in raised letters for the blind.

"O that you had been with me, a few weeks since, when I called on her, and had seen the expression of her face, and heard her thanks to the Bible Society, and to those who had assisted in procuring for her what she termed 'the precious blessed word of her dear Saviour,' in a form that a poor blind girl could read for herself. She told me she had just finished both volumes. She then sat down and read a chapter to me quite understandingly, which, when we consider the short time she has been learning to read, with but very little instruction from any one, is, I think, truly remarkable, and shows what patience and perseverance may accomplish. Now, instead of being dependent on some one to read for her, as she was a little over one year ago, she can read for herself."

FROM A COLPORTEUR IN ILLINOIS.

Illinois.

Dear Brother—I have now been engaged in the colporteur work two months, and every day I am more and more impressed with its importance as a means of supplying the country with a pure Christian literature. Oh how much there is that is not Christian! I have often been asked the question, "Have you any novels?" Satan has his Board of Publication in those houses that furnish the yellow-backed literature of the day; and he has his colporteurs too, so that his publications, like "winged seeds," find their way into every part of our land, polluting it with this poisonous stuff, so congenial to the natural heart. While the enemy is so busily sowing tares, should we not be as busy in sowing the good seed?

One great advantage of this system is, that it conveys the truth to the people. There are many who will accept the truth when brought to their doors, who would never have sought for it themselves. I am confident that I have supplied hundreds with the books and publications of the Board, who otherwise would never have seen one of its publications. I have had them say to me, "If I am not religious, I like to read good religious books when I can get them." We cannot reach all, but we can reach many of the destitute. W. S. V.

FROM AN ARMY CHAPLAIN.

Hopewell Cotton Works, Pa., Sept. 5, 1863.

My Dear Sir—I write to acknowledge the receipt of a donation of books for the 29th Pennsylvania Volunteer Militia. They reached us safely, and were distributed and joyfully welcomed by our boys, who are from intelligent Presbyterian, Quaker, and Methodist families, of Chester and Delaware counties. The regiment had been kept on the march a good deal, with no reading matter, nor opportunity for reading. When they got to Loudon, fatigued by a long march from Clear Spring, Indiana, I went among them, as they were lying in their tents, with your publications. Soon the whole camp was vocal. I do not believe there was a tent where some were not singing from the beautiful little pieces of sheet music, or the hymns in the "Soldier's Pocket-book." Your donation was well bestowed, and if our term of service had been continued, I would have felt warranted in asking another gift.

Respectfully yours,

W. F. P. Noble.

THE CONFESSION OF FAITH.

A SUGGESTION.

I claim the attention of every Presbyterian, in behalf of a good cause, and one dear to the hearts of all such.

The Board of Publication having, some time back, issued a tract edition of our Confession of Faith and Shorter Catechism, at the price of five cents per copy, have supplied a great and acknowledged want. This wholesome form of sound words can now be bought by every child of the church.

But more than this is needed. It should be thrown into every family in the land. Two thousand pastors working in our field, by spending only one dollar each, could thus annually circulate forty thousand copies; giving to forty thousand families the outline of the knowledge of God unto salvation, in a plain, simple, connected form, together with a constant appeal to the Scriptures for its support. This tract has the advantage over all other so-called doctrinal tracts, of presenting all the doctrines of the Bible in one view; and constantly referring to the Scriptures which support the various parts of that view.

This age, boasting of its thinking, needs something of this sort to furnish pabulum for its thinking. The multitude, moreover, will read pamphlets and tracts. Let them then have one as intensely scriptural as possible; one containing the seeds of things in religion.

Yours truly, S.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

N. B. Under a new regulation of the Board, any of its publications will be sent by mail, prepaid, on receipt of the catalogue price.

I. Rebella; or the Shining Way. By Nellie Graham, author of "Whispers from Dreamland," &c. 18mo. pp. 144. Price 25 and 30 cents.

This is an allegory, in which in a clear, intelligible, and pleasing manner, is depicted the return of a young girl, named Rebella, from sin and wretchedness, to God and heaven. The allegorical dress is very well sustained, and the book is adapted to make deep and permanent impressions of saving truth.

II. Lessons in Flying, for our Home Birds. By the Rev. William P. Breed, author of "The Book of Books." 18mo. pp. 164. Price 25 and 30 cents.

The author of this little book has a rare and most happy faculty of conveying instruction to children in a very lively and attractive form. We predict that this book will be a great favourite with all the Sabbath-school scholars who may see it.

III. The Inevitable Contest. Tract No. 255. "There is no discharge in that war." Eccl. viii. 8.

IV. The Soldiers' Hospital. Tract No. 256.

V. Watch. Tract No. 257.

VI. Do you intend to be a Christian? By the Rev. S. S. Potter. Tract No 258.

VII. Plain Speaking. Tract No. 259.

VIII. Sudden Death. By the Rev. Jonathan Greenleaf, D. D. Tract No. 260.

IX. A Right Spirit. Tract No. 261.

X. The Middling Man. Tract No. 262.

XI. Our Own Efforts Failing. Tract No. 263.

The above are all excellent tracts, and well adapted to do good among various classes of readers.

BOARD OF CHURCH EXTENSION.

Corresponding Secretary—Rev. H. I. Coe.

Treasurer—David Keith, Esq.

Rooms of the Young Men's Christian Association, corner of Fifth and Olive Streets, St. Louis, Mo.

Communications on the subject of Church Extension should be addressed to the Corresponding Secretary, Corner of Fifth and Olive Streets, St. Louis, Mo.

Donations should be sent to David Keith, Esq., St. Louis, Mo., or, if more convenient, to J. D. Thorpe, Esq., Cincinnati, Ohio: A. Davidson, Esq., Louisville, Ky.; S. D. Powel, Esq., Treasurer of the Board of Domestic Missions, No. 910 Arch Street, Philadelphia; T. H. Nevin, Esq., Pittsburgh, Pa.; Mr. J. B. Kirtland, Memphis, Tennessee; or to William Rankin, Esq., Treasurer of the Board of Foreign Missions, 23 Centre street, New York.

APPROPRIATIONS FROM THE GENERAL FUND.

No appropriation is made without the recommendation of the Presbytery, or the Church Extension Committee of the Presbytery within whose bounds the church applying for aid is located.

No appropriation is paid until the Board receives a certificate from the Trustees of the church aided, stating that their church lot is properly secured, and that the amount appropriated will complete their house of worship, and leave the whole property free from debt.

Appropriations not called for within two years of the date thereof, are regarded as withdrawn.

INSPIRED WITH NEW ENERGY.

Our friend, the Rev. J. C. Caldwell, who ministers to the churches of Hudson and Stillwater, Minnesota, in a letter covering contributions to the Board, says of a promise of aid from the Board:

"We hope in time to repay the Board for their kindness to us. The hope of getting out of debt has inspired the church at Hudson with new energy, and we have indications of the presence of the Spirit. Pray for us, that the good work may go forward."

New energy is the almost universal result of freedom from debt, and the reviving influences of the Spirit follow with significant frequency.

WESTERN CHURCHES AND THE WAR.

The following statement was made, we believe, concerning the Congregational churches in the States named, but we presume will apply to nearly all the churches in the West.

"Out of one hundred and ten churches in Illinois, one-eighth of the members have gone to the war. Out of one hundred and sixty-nine churches in Wisconsin, five ministers have gone as chaplains; twenty-eight sons of ministers are in the ranks; fifty students of Beloit College; one in nine of all the church-members are in the war. Out of forty-three churches heard from in Minnesota, one-seventh of the male members are in the army, among whom are eleven church officers, and seven sons of ministers."

MAKING A PLACE.

There was nothing which used to stir the blood of old Dr. Lyman Beecher so quickly as the manifestation, on the part of any minister of the gospel, of an over-sensitiveness about a "place." "Place!" he used to say, when young men asked him if he thought they could get "places" to labour in at the West. "Place! the West is all 'place;' you can't go amiss of a 'place'—make one anywhere!"

OPEN THE PEW DOOR.

It is told of an individual now advanced in life, and distinguished both in the political and religious world, that when he first came up to London to study for the bar, he casually (as men speak) entered St. John's Chapel one Sunday evening. After standing for a long time in the aisle, and failing to get a seat, he felt vexed and chafed, and was retiring. One of the settled congregation, however, seeing him going, followed him to the outer door, brought him back, and made room for him in his pew. The sermon that he then heard was instrumental to his conversion, and he walked from henceforth in the way that leadeth unto everlasting life. The incident is not only encouraging to ministers, but instructive to pew-holders.

GIVE A CERTAIN PROPORTION.

Some, who have little money at command, who keep few accounts, and who live mainly on the products of the ground they cultivate, or other fruits of their industry, judge that they conform to the spirit of the divine rule, by giving at longer stated periods of such things as they have. One statedly consecrates a certain proportion of the products of his farm; another of mechanical labour; another of the needle, or other domestic industry—every one using his Christian liberty in giving statedly as he sees best in his own circumstances, according "as God prospers him."

ANOTHER DEBT REMOVED.

In the midst of the distractions and embarrassments entailed on the country by the stupendous civil war in which we are engaged, it is pleasant to record the fact, that the people in so many places are "coming up to the help of the Lord," in the discharge of church indebtedness. The Old-school Presbyterian church of Rock Island, Illinois, has just cancelled a large debt of $14,000, which for several years has rested like an incubus on its energies and usefulness. The pastor, the Rev. S. T. Wilson, temporarily laid aside from his legitimate duties by an attack of bronchitis, devoted himself to efforts to raise the money for the lifting of this heavy debt, and in a few weeks was entirely successful, and the church recently, with prayer and thanksgiving, celebrated the happy occasion. It is well to "owe no man anything but love"—especially is it true of the institutions of the gospel. M. W. B.

NOVEL MODE OF LIGHTING CHURCHES.

A novel mode of lighting has been introduced in the First Baptist church, just built in West Philadelphia. There is no gas-burner in the audience-room. In the panels of the ceiling are circles of ground glass, two feet in diameter. Above each of these, in the loft, is an argand burner, and over the burner a powerful reflector. The effect is just about the same as if there were thirty full moons shining in the ceiling. The light is not sharp and intense, but abundant and mellow, and not painful to the eyes.

THE HOME AND FOREIGN RECORD.

By order of the General Assembly, the publication of the Home and Foreign Record in the quarto or newspaper form will cease with the December number. It will from thence be printed only in the octavo, or pamphlet form, which will be advantageous to those who annually bind it in a volume. The matters it presents have a permanent interest. It is our duty, as Christians, to know what, as a church, we are doing now; and, if preserved, it will be a valuable record of the progress of the church to succeeding generations.

The change presents a favourable opportunity for pastors and others interested in the welfare of the people, to make a new effort to circulate the Record among them. It is now several years since any considerable accession has been made to the list of subscribers, and it is thought that in many churches there are numbers, recently added, who know nothing of the existence of this periodical. It is hoped that the action of the Assembly will meet the approval of the church, which could be shown in no better way than by a great increase of subscribers.

The Central Presbyterian, of May 28th, has the following items in relation to the meeting of the Presbyterian General Assembly of the Confederate States, in Columbia, S. C., in May last.

"The subject of a charter was brought before the Assembly by a committee previously appointed. A charter was adopted, and trustees named. One of the most important subjects that will demand the attention of the Board at their first meeting, will be the property in danger of sequestration. 'It is ascertained,' says the Report of the Committee on the charter, 'that there is a large amount of valuable property, both real and personal, within the Confederate States, which was originally donated to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian church in the United States, or to the several Boards of that church, all of which justly and equitably belongs to the Presbyterian church in the Confederate States of America. The incorporation of Trustees for the Assembly is important to preserve this property from sequestration.'"

BOARD OF DOMESTIC MISSIONS.

LETTERS relating to Missionary Appointments and other operations of the Board, should be addressed to the Corresponding Secretary, No. 910 Arch street, Philadelphia.

WILLIAM RANKIN, JR., Mission House, 23 Centre street, New York.

MISSION ROOMS, 910 Arch Street,
Philadelphia, October 1, 1863.

Dear Brother—The late General Assembly, anxious to test the power of simultaneous and systematic efforts, directed that the attention of all our churches be called to vigorous exertion in behalf of our several Boards, and that a day be designated, on which the entire church, as far as practicable, and so far as not interfering with arrangements already in successful use, should contribute to some one of these great causes. The first Sabbath in November was appropriated for the Board of Domestic Missions; and we were directed to remind you of the fact.

The necessities of the Board were never greater, or the hopes of success never brighter. The increased price of the cost of living, would induce the Board to advance, even if unasked, the salaries of our toiling missionaries, if the liberality of the churches would warrant such movements. The justice of it is submitted to your church, and we respectfully ask you to urge increased liberality on this ground, among others.

The war, which afflicts us, has added to our wants—Mission Churches have been broken up in many cases—in others so crippled as to compel the missionary to leave.

The work of reconstruction in the Border States will go on as the Union Armies advance, and the expense will be unusually great. Such is their desolated condition, that years of commercial prosperity will be required to restore things as they were.

In this brief reminder, sent you by the express order of the Assembly, allow us to state, without enlarging, a few reasons for increased liberality:

1. Our field is this continent with its teeming millions. From part of these, for the present, the war precludes us, but, we hope and believe, only for the present. Take up your maps and survey this magnificent domain—the States and Territories which fill up with almost fabulous rapidity. As a church then, we must keep abreast of other evangelical bodies in sending forth the word of life.

2. The need of speedy action. While men slept the enemy sowed tares. Error in its many-faced forms grows apace. Old heresies, snatched from their putrescent tombs, and arrayed with new names, are sent forth to blight and destroy. Infidelity is earnest with the keen and somewhat reckless men, who, urged by indomitable energy, go forth to the regions toward the setting sun.

What we do is to be done speedily. Action now, will supersede agony hereafter.

3. Our collections are inadequate. They have increased hardly any for several years: we mean, while there are some glorious exceptions, the churches generally have not added to the amount contributed.

Our population doubles every twenty-five years, and to keep pace with this increase, the yearly offerings of God's people must advance. The measure of former years will not answer now. May God hearken to his servants and pour out on the people this grace also.

4. The ability of our church to increase its contributions to this cause, at least three-fold, is unquestioned. The gold and the silver are hers in solemn trust. It would not tax her much to double this year the offerings of the last. It remains for the pastors to enforce this, and present this blessed privilege of doing what we can for Jesus, with the means which have been entrusted to our care.

5. The evangelizing of our land will greatly favour the conversion of the gentile nations Our geographical position, fronting the world from the shores of the two oceans which wash them, will cause the influence of a land like ours to be eminently blessed or eminently pestilential. We are set for the rise or fall of many. To plant Christian churches, to diffuse the influence of the gospel through the masses of a people on whose movements the anxious eyes of all nations are now turned, watching the solving of the great struggle which absorbs us, will exert on the world a power unlike any which time has produced.

For these and other reasons which might be given, dear brother, do we urge you to give prominence before your people to the claims of our Board. Spread before them the privilege of giving. All can do something—the little flock on the frontier, as well as the metropolitan church into whose lap God has poured such wondrous wealth. In ancient Israel none could come before God empty. The two young pigeons were not disdained in sacrifice—the two mites of the widow were counted as precious by Him who witnessed the fervour of her heart and the costliness of her offering.

We have no fears for our cause, if properly presented. Domestic missions have a deep hold on the hearts of our people. There is no reason then for timid approach. Your people will respond to earnest appeals and intelligent descriptions of the wondrous character of the work. If all your people be called on after a strong appeal, the result will surprise you—yea, it will cheer the toiling labourer in his distant field. There is no sacrifice too great for Christ. The Son of God suffered all, gave all for us. Take your people to the cross, and there bid them give what they can—the offering of a sinner's gratitude for a Saviour's love.

Yours, in Christ,

LABOUR AMID DIFFICULTIES.

Pennsylvania.

Another three months of time and toil has passed away, and I am called upon to report my labours in the field assigned me. The little flock to which I minister is located on the top of the Allegheny mountains, and is surrounded by a host of papists, who form by far the largest part of the community. But there is, besides our people, a small band of brethren belonging to the Methodist Episcopal church; between them and ourselves a very pleasant state of feeling exists, and the several services of each that are held, are generally attended by the members of both congregations. It seems to be the aim of all to convince the papists that, notwithstanding the diversity that exists, there is a substantial unity among Protestants, differing from the uniformity so much boasted of among the papists, which may be compared to the stillness of the graveyard, where all are quiet, because all lie dead together.

We have had another communion season since my last report, but were disappointed in an addition to the church which we had expected. As I preach here but a part of my time, a prayer-meeting is sustained by the ruling elders on the Sabbaths that I am absent, and a Sabbath-school conducted upon the union principle is kept up at one point on every Sabbath. Of the few men among us, four or five have been taken away by means of the terrible civil war that rages in our once united and happy country; whether they shall ever be returned to us, except in their coffins, is known only to God.

On the whole, there is here a loud call for earnest, patient labour, urged by the command, and sustained by the assurance, "be not weary in well doing, for in due season ye shall reap if ye faint not."

SOWING IN HOPE.

Iowa.

At S. we have no church-building. The school-house in which we worship is crowded every Sabbath of preaching.

Most of the congregation, old and young, tarry for Sabbath-school and Bible-class. It is interesting to see the fathers, and mothers, and children of all ages, from four years old to three-score, all studying the catechisms and the Bible. We hope that much good seed is being sown, and much fruit will in due time be reaped. Unless by emigration, we cannot expect rapid increase in either of the churches to which I minister. Almost everybody has some religion, positive or negative. True Christians are divided into many sects. Those who hear me preach from Sabbath to Sabbath, are, a great many of them, church members, and those who are not church members are settled down on some error—Deism, Universalism, or some other ism. But there are belonging to the families of the church a very interesting flock of youth, whose minds are being trained, as we hope, for future usefulness. And the youth of other and irreligious families are in our Sabbath-schools, and under the preaching of the word, being brought under the power of truth. There is a great work to be done, the fruits of which we may not see for a time; but we have confidence in God that the good seed will not be wasted.

We have been encouraged by the reception of one, a young man of promise, into the church of T., on examination, in the last quarter.

A CHURCH BUILT.

Ohio.

The public labours of another, and the last quarter of the year for which I am under commission, are closed. In the review I find many things to be grateful for, and certainly many to lament over. It has been a year of public calamity and distress, and, at the same time, one of the right-hand of the Most High. The church has sympathized deeply with our suffering country, and in many ways has been seriously depressed. Weak churches, like those composing my field, have felt the effects of the presence of the war in such a manner as seriously to embarrass their operations. When I consented to enter the field at ——, I had many misgivings; but the Lord has blessed us, and caused us to prosper. We commenced our church-building upon the strength of faith. Two or three brethren, richer in faith than in money, felt that the church must either build or disband; and after much prayer resolved, in God's help, to arise and build. They began, and have kept steadily onward, until at length they have been rewarded in seeing a neat little church occupying their late vacant lot, surmounted by a handsome spire, with a fine-toned bell, and all finished, furnished, and paid for. Under God, this is due to the two Boards of our church which have aided us—the Domestic Mission Board, which aided in supporting the ministry, and the Extension Board, which assisted in the building. Without these agencies, the field must have been abandoned.

Since we entered our house, the congregations have been pretty good, and we are assured of some addition to our numbers at no very distant day. We now need a refreshing from the presence of the Lord, and our place of worship will be filled, while sinners are led to inquire what they shall do to be saved. Pray for us.

MEETING OBLIGATIONS.

Wisconsin.

The summer months, just closed, have been attended with much sickness in our community, and much of my time has been absorbed in attending upon the sick and the dying, and in burying the dead. But my own health and that of my family, has been mercifully spared, and I have been able to meet all my appointments without interruption.

We still have to lament a low state of piety in our church, and I see little fruit of my labour. Our congregations, on the Sabbath, are on the increase slowly, and the attention to the word encouraging, but beyond that, we seem to make little progress.

It is proper, however, that I should mention a manifestation of regard and attachment on the part of the people, this last week, which has been very grateful to me. It was in the form of a voluntary increase of their subscriptions for my support, to the amount of $300 per annum. This I think is no more than just, in view of the increase in price of almost everything that is used in a minister's family. But such a cheerful acknowledgment of their obligation to meet the advance in everything else, by an advance of salary, was none the less pleasant, and was still more gratifying to me, because most of it comes from men who are not members of the church.

ENCOURAGEMENT.

Pennsylvania.

Our weekly prayer-meeting in private houses, even during the throng season, mostly numbers from fifty to seventy-five, and nearly all young people. I am continually asked, "When will you have the prayer-meeting at my house?" The attendance at church on the Sabbath is one-third larger than when I came among them. We have put ten new pews in the church; they are all taken. The ladies of the congregation have raised money to paper the walls and carpet the aisles of the church. We have marked evidence that the Spirit of God is among us. Our communion was on last Sabbath. Though there was five hundred present, I believe one-half of them shed tears. We received seven persons to the communion of the church on examination, and one by certificate—all young people. One was the head of a family. Four of them had not been baptized. Four others were prevented from joining at this time by sickness. I also baptized twelve infants. Our attendance at Sabbath-school was a little over one hundred during the summer.

BOARD OF EDUCATION.

Letters and Communications for the BOARD OF EDUCATION on the subject of Ministerial Education, or of Schools, Academies, and Colleges, may be addressed to the Secretary, Rev. Dr. CHESTER, or Rev. THOMAS MCCAULEY, No. 821 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

Remittances of Money may be made to WILLIAM MAIN, Esq., Treasurer, No. 821 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

I. MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

WE MUST HAVE MORE MINISTERS.

Is it necessary? All who will read these lines will probably answer in the affirmative, but like many other things theoretically believed in, the action would seem to contradict it. For instance, can the church believe it, when, on examination, with increasing demands for its exercise, the number in preparation to fill its sacred office is diminishing.

SELDEN'S ADVICE TO PREACHERS.

Old Selden, the most learned man of his age, and one of the wittiest, gives this sensible counsel to preachers:

"First, in your sermons, use your logic, and then your rhetoric. Rhetoric without logic is like a tree with leaves and blossoms but no root. That rhetoric is best which is most seasonable and most catching. An instance we have in the old blunt commander at Cadiz, who showed himself a good orator. Having to say something to his soldiers, which he was not used to do, he made them a speech to this purpose: 'What a shame it will be, you Englishmen, that feed upon good beef and brewers, to let those rascally Spaniards beat you, that eat nothing but oranges and lemons!' And so put more spirit in his men than he could have done with the most learned oration. Rhetoric is either very good or stark naught. There is no medium in rhetoric. If I am not fully persuaded, I laugh at the orator."—Selden's Table Talk.

GLORY OF GOD.

We all speak much of the glory of God, and entertain a common belief that that's the only end for which we were all made; and I wish we were all more inwardly moved with a true and lively sense of it. There can be nothing else that either God could propound to himself, or that we ought, if it be rightly understood. But we must not think that God, who is infinite fulness, would seek for anything without himself. He needs neither our happiness, nor our misery, to make himself more illustrious by; but, being full in himself, it was his good pleasure to communicate of his own fulness.

When he made the world, because there was nothing better than himself, he shadowed forth himself therein, and, as far as might be, was pleased to represent himself, and manifest his own eternal glory and perfection in it.

God does then most glorify and exalt himself in the most triumphant way that may be out of himself, if I may so phrase it, when he most of all communicates himself, and when he erects such monuments of his own majesty, wherein his own love and goodness may live and reign.

And we most of all glorify him when we partake most of him; when our serious endeavours of a true assimilation to him, and conformity to his image, declare that we think nothing better than he is; and are, therefore, most ambitious of being one with him, by an universal resignation of ourselves to him.

What fire is this that so warmeth my heart? what light is this that so enlighteneth my soul? O fire! that always burneth, and never goeth out, kindle me: O light, which ever shineth, and art never darkened, illuminate me; O that I had my heat from thee, most holy fire! how sweetly dost thou burn! how secretly dost thou shine! how desiredly dost thou inflame me!—St. Augustine.

PRAYER.

Some of the greatest men of the world have been men of prayer—men distinguished for their intellectual growth, for the depth of their researches, and the value of their discoveries in philosophy. Bacon, the father of inductive philosophy, was wont to look to the Father of lights for assistance in his philosophical inquiries. A prayer preserved in the preface to his Novum Organum, "the Christian simplicity of which is very touching in so great a man, afterward be came," says Chateaubriand, "his habitual prayer when he addressed himself to study." We quote a portion of it:

——"This, also, we humbly and earnestly beg, that human things may not prejudice such as are divine; neither that from the unlocking of the gates of sense, and the kindling of a greater natural light, anything of incredulity or intellectual night may arise in our mind towards divine mysteries. But rather that by our mind, thoroughly cleansed and purged from fancy and vanities, and yet subject and perfectly given up to the divine oracles, there may be given up to faith the things that are faith's. And lastly, that being freed from the poison of knowledge infused into it by the serpent, and with which the human soul is swollen and puffed up, we may be neither too profoundly nor immoderately wise, but worship truth in charity. Amen."

Kepler, on the completion of his chief work, poured out his feelings of thankfulness, supplication, and humility, in strains of the most fervent devotion, in a tone and style indicating that prayer had accompanied the several stages of its preparation. He has expressions like these: "I thank thee, Lord and Creator, for all the ecstatic joy which I have experienced in the contemplation of the work of thy hands. I have now finished this book, which contains the chief of my labours, and I have employed in its composition the whole sum of intelligence which thou hast given me. I have declared to men all the greatness of thy works; I have unfolded to them their evidences, as far as my finite mind has been able to comprehend their infinite amplitude. I have exerted all my efforts to raise myself to truth in the way of philosophy; and if I, a miserable worm, conceived and nourished in sin, have chanced to say anything unworthy of thee, make it known to me, that I may blot it out. * * * Oh, if it has been thus with me, of thy mercy and clemency receive me, and grant me grace, that the work which I have completed may be the means of no evil, but may contribute to thy glory and the salvation of souls."

How appropriate and expressive is the language of Cowper—

> "Philosophy baptized
> In the dear fountain of eternal love,
> Has eyes indeed."

Those eyes receive their clear-sightedness and keenness of perception from divine illumination, in answer to prayer.—Christian Mirror.

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

IN SCHOOLS, ACADEMIES, AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

EDUCATION IN THE UNITED STATES.

In the American Annual Cyclopædia for 1862, just published by the Appletons, we find the best exhibition we have yet seen of the state of education in the United States. We have hitherto had, as we believe most persons have, the general impression that the Americans, by legislation and otherwise, have made very liberal provisions for the purposes of education. But we have nowhere seen the facts relating to this subject brought together in so clear a light, and within so brief a compass. Two facts seem pretty well established by these figures; first, that the diffusion of education in the United States has been greater than in any other country of the world, excepting, perhaps, in the kingdom of Prussia; and secondly, that the expenditures for educational purposes is at the present time greater than in any other country. The whole number pursuing their education, from children in primary schools to students attending professional schools, is nearly six millions; the amount of school funds and endowments held in trust for the support of these schools, is fully sixty millions of dollars; and the annual expenditure for the purpose of education is over fifty millions of dollars! These statements, furthermore, it should be remembered, contain no reference to what is being done by the Sabbath-schools of the United States, which embrace certainly not less than three millions of scholars, taught gratuitously by three hundred thousand teachers, whose services, if paid for at customary rates, would amount to at least ten millions of dollars. Perhaps, however, the magnitude of the educational interests of the United States will be better appreciated, by giving some of the statistics in detail. These statistics are brought down to the beginning of 1862.

The whole number of children in attendance upon the common schools was 5,211,000, or one in every five and a half of the free white population. Of these, 4,560,000 were in what are now designated as the loyal States, with a population of about 18,000,000, or one in every four of the population. In the other States, where large plantations prevail, and population is scattered, the number of children attending common schools was only 651,000, in a white population of about 9,000,000 or nearly one in every fourteen. The expenditures for the public schools was $23,461,000, or about 87 cents to each white inhabitant. This, too, was divided very unequally between the two sections, $2,385,000 or $1.13 to each white inhabitant, being paid by the former, and only $3,076,000, or 34 cents to each white inhabitant, being paid by the latter. The largest expenditure for school purposes in any State, in proportion to the population, is in Illinois, where it reaches the rate of $1.58 per head. The next largest is in Massachusetts, where it reaches $1.34 per head. Illinois, however, has the advantage of a very large school-fund. The amount raised by taxation in these two States is, in Illinois 76 cents per head, in Massachusetts $1.21 per head. The average annual expenditure in most of the Northern States is $1 per head of the inhabitants.

The number of private schools, high-schools, academies, and boarding-schools, cannot be ascertained with the same certainty as that of the public schools. They are estimated, however, at not less than 20,000, with an attendance of not less than 600,000. These schools were numerous in the Southern States before the war, and supplemented, to some extent, the lack of common schools. The expenditure in these 20,000 schools has been not less than $20,000,000 per annum, the boarding-schools alone receiving over $10,000,000.

The number of colleges (not counting polytechnic and agricultural schools) is 240, and the number of under-graduates a little over 20,000. The average cost for board, tuition, room-rent, and incidentals, is $161 a year, making a total expenditure of about $3,220,000. But as many of these institutions are largely endowed, the actual expenditure is not less than $5,000,000.

There are 92 theological seminaries, having 4,120 students. As tuition in these seminaries is generally free, the annual expenditure for board, room-rent, and incidentals, will average about $125 a head, or about $515 for the whole. The added expenditure from endowments for the salaries of Professors, will increase the yearly expenditures to more than $1,000,000.

The number of medical schools is 55, having about 7000 students, whose average annual expenditure for lectures, hospital and dissection tickets, and board, is never less than $200, and the aggregate yearly outlay $1,400,000.

The number of law schools is 18, and the number of students 1300; the annual expenditure of each about $200, or $260,000 in the aggregate.

The number of normal schools is 16, and of normal students 2740. Their average annual expenditure is about $120, making an aggregate of $340,800. But as a portion of the salaries is paid by the States, the entire annual cost of maintenance cannot fall below $500,000.

The number of scientific schools, polytechnic and agricultural colleges, &c., is 15, with an aggregate attendance of 1500 students. The aggregate expense is $200, amounting to $300,000, which is increased by the income from endowments to $400,000.

There are 53 institutions for the instruction of the deaf, blind, and idiots, having in all 7850 pupils, the average annual cost of whose education is $150, making a total of $1,177,500.

A near approximation, therefore, to the annual amount expended in the United States for education, and to the number of students enjoying its benefits, may be stated as follows:

	Scholars.	Cost.
Common schools,	5,211,000	$23,461,000
Private schools, academies, &c.,	600,000	20,000,000
Colleges,	20,000	5,000,000
Theological Seminaries,	4,120	1,000,000
Medical schools,	7,000	1,400,000
Law schools,	1,300	260,000
Normal schools,	2,740	500,000
Scientific schools,	1,500	400,000
Blind, deaf, &c.,	7,850	1,177,500
		$53,198,500

The amount of funds for common schools, held by the several States, of which the new States hold the chief share, is over $50,000,000, while the endowments of colleges, theological seminaries, and other professional schools, cannot be less than $8,000,000 more.

The consumption of school-books is enormous. A few items will give some idea of it. The annual sale of Mitchell's geographies, including all the series, is 600,000; Smith's English grammar, 120,000; Town & Holbrook's text-books, 500,000; Goodrich's Pictorial Histories, 110,000; Cornell's geographies, 250,000; Thompson's arithmetics, 150,000; Colton & Fitch's geographies, 120,000; Webster's spelling-books, 1,500,000, &c., &c. If we include hymn books, question books, and library books, at least 2,000,000 are consumed annually by the Sunday-schools of the United States. The number of school books of kinds consumed annually, both in Sabbath-schools and week-day schools must be somewhere between seven and ten millions of volumes. To this we may add, that in the elementary studies no nation in the world has produced more excellent text-books. They are far superior to those in Great Britain in accuracy, attractiveness, and adaptation to the advanced state of public opinion in regard to primary education.

FINISH THY WORK.

Finish thy work, the time is short;
The sun is in the west;
The night is coming down—till then
Think not of rest.

Yes, finish all thy work, then rest;
Till then, rest never;
The rest prepared for thee by God
Is rest for ever.

Finish thy work, then wipe thy brow;
Ungird thee from thy toil;
Take breath, and from each weary limb
Shake off the soil.

Finish thy work, then sit thee down
On some celestial hill,
And of its strength-reviving air
Take thou thy fill.

Finish thy work, then go in peace;
Life's battle fought and won,
Hear from the throne the Master's voice,
"Well done! well done!"

Finish thy work, then take thy harp,
Give praise to God above;
Sing a new song of mighty joy
And endless love.

Give thanks to Him who held thee up
In all thy path below,
Who made thee faithful unto death,
And crowns thee now!

THE TORN TRACT.

Legh Richmond, in walking up a hill to relieve the horses of the coach in which he was travelling, distributed several tracts to such persons as he chanced to meet. One was received and torn in two, and thrown upon the ground. A fellow-traveller smiled, and said,

"See how your tract is treated; there is one, at least, quite lost!"

"I am not so sure of that," said Mr. Richmond; "at any rate, the husbandman sows not the less that some of the seeds may be trodden down."

Reaching the top of the hill, and turning round to view the scenery, they saw that the wind had carried the torn tract over into the field among the haymakers, and that one of them was reading it to the others. The devil had done his work imperfectly, as the two parts of the tract were held together by a thread; and in hindering one man from reading it, he had introduced it to a whole company. The reader of the tract was led to reflection and prayer, and became an earnest Christian and tract distributor. Three others soon became diligent labourers in the Master's vineyard.

Pass the tracts along; they will not be lost!

DEATH OF THE REV. HENRY V. RANKIN.

It is with great regret that we have to report the death of Mr. Rankin, at Tungchow, July 2d; —see an extract from a letter of Mr. Nevius in another column. He was in the 38th year of his age, and had been a missionary in China about fifteen years. Mrs. Rankin and her two youngest children in China, and her oldest son, at school in this country, will meet with much Christian sympathy in this bereavement. The removal of such a man, in the prime of his life and in the midst of his work, is one of the mysteries of Providence. We have always regarded him as a man of singular loveliness of character, and of great devotedness and usefulness as a missionary. But his work was done, and he has entered into the joy of his Lord.

MOVEMENTS OF MISSIONARIES.

The Rev. Walter H. Clark and Mrs. Nassau, of the Corisco mission, arrived on a visit to this country, on the 12th of October, after a good voyage. We are glad to learn that their health has been improved. They bring the latest news from that mission. The missionary work was going on well, but more labourers are greatly needed. The Rev. W. A. P. Martin, D. D., and his family, had left Shanghai, to visit Pekin, with the hope of forming a permanent station at that city, which in some respects is the most important in the Chinese empire.

ADMISSIONS TO THE CHURCH.

At Ningpo, on Sabbath, the 14th of June, five persons were received into the church, two of whom were scholars in the girls' boarding-school, and one in the boys', as we learn from a letter of Mr. Green. A fortnight afterwards, three women were baptized at Bao-ko-tah, as Mr. Dodd informs us. Thus the brethren are meeting with precious encouragement at this important station. Mr. Forman reports the admission of three hopeful converts to the church at Lahor; he also expected to baptize the wife of one of the teachers soon. Mr. Priest mentions that two of the recaptured Africans had been received into the church at Sinou, and he expected to admit a third on the first Sabbath of August.

NOTICES OF A LICENTIATE PREACHER AND AN ELDER.

Mr. Forman writes concerning a young man lately licensed to preach the gospel by the Presbytery of Lodiana, and employed as a teacher also in the school at Lahor, as follows: "He was formerly a pupil in Dr Duff's school, and afterwards a teacher and catechist, whom the Free Church intended to ordain, but on account of ill-health he came to the Punjab about four years ago. During the whole of this time he has been a teacher in our school. He is a man of excellent talents and education."

Mr. Farnham thus speaks of an elder of the church at Shanghai: "Our native elder is preaching and pursuing his studies. We have just fixed upon a course of theological instruction for him, to extend through two years." Mr. Farnham also speaks of a young man from the school, who is rendering good service to his own people in various ways, besides teaching in the school, and he adds: "We have two or three other boys who I hope will pursue a similar course. I do hope God is about to bless us with a good number of well-qualified, faithful native helpers."

ANOTHER MISSIONARY MUCH NEEDED AT LODIANA.

Mr. Newton calls special attention to the need of another missionary at the station of Lodiana. The oversight of the press and bindery, the charge of the orphan girls' boarding-school, and of the large day-school, the stated preaching services, the bazar, and itinerant work to be done, require at least two missionaries to be stationed at that city, besides as many native labourers as can be obtained. Mr. Newton himself can spend only a part of the year there, on account of his health, so that Mr. Rudolph has more work on his hands than any one man ought to undertake. We hope when Messrs. Morrison and Henry arrive, another labourer can be placed at this station; but more men should be sent to both the missions in India.

THE NEWS FROM JAPAN

is not of any later date than was quoted from the newspapers in our notice last month. Dr. Hepburn mentions in the letter, acknowledged above, that the English and French would protect Yokohama, so that our missionary friends are not in personal danger. They were going on in their work of preparation. The Dr. adds: "Mr. Thompson preaches regularly every Sabbath afternoon in our little chapel, to a small congregation of foreigners. We like him very much. He is busy at the language. I am doctoring the Americans here, besides having a few Japanese daily."

THE LAST ILLNESS AND DEATH OF MR. RANKIN.

In a letter written at Tungchow, July 6th, the Rev. J. L. Nevius thus communicates the death of Mr. Rankin:

"After the intelligence which has already reached you, you will hardly be surprised to hear of the death of Mr. Rankin, which occurred last Thursday, the 2d inst. This is another mysterious providence, which we should lay to heart. Another of our missionaries has been removed in the midst of his years and usefulness; making three in one year, one from each of our northern stations. We would bow with humble acquiescence under this severe stroke, thankful that our dear brother was spared so many years of earnest and effective labour, and say, "It is the Lord. Let him do what seemeth him good."

When Brother Rankin arrived here from Ningpo, about five weeks since, his disease had progressed too far to leave much hope that he could derive permanent benefit from the climate, as he seemed to be already in the last stages of a decline. It was a mournful pleasure to have him with us during the last weeks of his sickness. Through all his illness he was remarkably cheerful, thankful, and resigned. The word of God was his constant companion and solace, and he was full of peace and joy. While his outward man was perishing, his inward man was renewed day by day. God grant that while earthly helps are being taken from us, we may learn more to rely on him, and the power of his Spirit."

The Rev. S. Dodd, writing at Ningpo, July 20th, thus refers to the removal of Mr. Rankin, whose station was at that city:

"We have the sad intelligence that Mr. Rankin died on the 2d inst. His latter end was peace. As a mission, we have sustained a severe loss. He was a man of good judgment and extensive information. He was kind, self-denying, active, and zealous in his Master's service; and his efforts have been much blessed to the infant church here. All the missionaries here deeply mourn his loss. "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord, from henceforth." He rests from his labours and his works will follow him.

We add an extract from a letter of one of the native converts, written to a lady formerly connected with the mission. It contains a touching tribute to the memory of a faithful missionary.

"The Ningpo pastor, Mr. Rankin, was affected with sickness since last year; on the fourth month, fourth day, he came to Tungchow to alleviate his sufferings. His disease was continually severe, and yesterday at twelve o'clock the Heavenly Father called him to leave this world. But his death was such as we may all eagerly wish for—calm and joyous, without the least appearance of anxiety. Three days before his death, he spoke with me, exhorting me, and saying that while I was well I should do the Lord's work diligently; and again he said, 'To serve the Lord is far better than to serve any other.' Besides he exhorted me with many other words, all which I cannot now write."

INDIA—LODIANA MISSION.

The Lahor Station: 1855—1863.

The following paper has been sent to us, with a request that it should be printed in one of the missionary periodicals. We insert it in the Record, as it is connected with the "Remarks on our Missionary Work," in the August issue, and also with the paper in the July number, on "Our Missionary Work not Retrograding." In the speech referred to, however, we have reason to know that the speaker thought his remarks were badly and erroneously reported; he would not be willing to give up any of the stations, and certainly not the one at Lahor.

But this article has distinctive value, apart from its reference to the speech. It shows the importance of Lahor as a missionary station. Its statistics are valuable. It sets before us especially the native labourers, who are too often overlooked, but who are really the main source of supply for the great harvest. It refers also to the very liberal support received from European friends in the Punjab. But we need not say more to secure for it an attentive perusal.

Lahor, August 10, 1863.

In the reports of the proceedings of the last General Assembly, published in the Observer and Presbyterian, it is stated that the Moderator, in his speech on Missions, said that "the mission at Lahor has received no accessions since 1855, and it is suggested that it be abandoned." These words conveyed the first intimation received at Lahor that such a retrograde step had been suggested. It would be a lamentable circumstance if, in consequence of the low state of our Treasury, any of our Indian missions should have to be abandoned. But if it should be necessary to give up one or more of our stations, would it be wise to begin with Lahor?

Lodiana was occupied nearly thirty years ago by missionaries of our Board, because it was regarded as the door to the Punjab, then inaccessible under a native king. As soon as that country was annexed to British India, (in 1849,) when the whole land was before us, we selected Lahor as the place in the Punjab, which of all was the most important in a missionary point of view. As the capital of the province, its influence is extending, as numbers of people are continually visiting it from every quarter. With the exception of Amritsur, where there is a Church of England mission, it is the largest city in the province, containing a population of about eighty thousand. For hundreds, if not thousands of years, it has been the heart of the country. Another consideration, which adds considerably to the importance of the place, as a sphere for missionary operations, is, that it is the seat of the Punjab Bible and Tract Societies, and of several committees formed to assist missionaries in their work, at which it is very desirable that our Board should be represented. All things considered, Lahor is, I think, unquestionably the most important of all our stations in this part of India.

But the feeble state of the mission here, "which has received no accession since 1855," seems to have been the reason for suggesting that it should be abandoned. The station has received accessions since 1855. J. Newton, Jr., M.D., joined it on his arrival from America in 1858, and removed to Kupurthalla in 1859. The Rev. J. Newton, Sr., rejoined the station in 1860, and is still attached to it. As to our being in a feeble state, the following table will clearly show, I think, that we never were so strong as we are at present.

Bible Women,													1	1
Licentiate,														1
Total.	2	2	1	5	5	6	6	4	6	10	9	9	12	18

A glance at this table should convince any one that instead of being disheartened, we have reason to thank God and take courage, for we now have half as many more labourers than we had last year, twice as many as we had the year before, and three times as many as we had in 1858.

Indeed, so far from being so feeble as to think of giving up the station on this account, we are so strong as scarcely to need reinforcement, though another missionary, of the right kind, would meet with a hearty welcome, and find enough to do. It is, however, a great mistake to estimate the strength of a mission merely from the number of foreign missionaries located at it. As our missions become older, and converts multiply, of course more and more of the missionary work will be done by the native Christians, and less and less by the foreign missionaries, till at last the latter will withdraw altogether.

As the number of labourers was never so great, so the amount of work done was never so great as at present. "Seven Christian teachers, including the licentiate, who is also the head master of the school, are engaged every day in giving a thoroughly Christian education to nearly five hundred pupils. In the evening, from seventy to ninety pupils are gathered into a school for adults, who also are taught the Bible, with other books, and once a week hear a religious lecture from one of the missionaries. We have also one branch English school; and another private school is taught by one of our assistants, as well as the Poor-House school. Three of the native Christian women have recently begun two schools for heathen girls, and one for the children of Christians. So that we have eight schools, in connection with the mission taught by thirteen Christian teachers.

Every evening the gospel is preached in the highways and bazars to all who will stop to listen to it. In this work, I am happy to say, some of the teachers voluntarily take a part. One of the female members of our church is employed in visiting heathen women, wherever she can find access to them, to read to them the Bible, and to explain to them the first principles of Christianity. On Sundays one of them holds a service in the school for the benefit of the pupils; and another, the licentiate, Mr. Guru Das Moitra, takes one of the two services for the native church. On Wednesday evening a missionary prayer-meeting is held, the object of which is to pray for a blessing on our labours among the heathen.

Another interesting feature in the work here, is the amount of funds collected on the spot. We have property here worth about forty thousand rupees, for which I believe one rupee has not been drawn from America; and we are now receiving about four thousand rupees per annum from our friends in the Punjab, and three thousand six hundred from government, making in all, seven thousand six hundred, which is about half the whole amount expended at the station.

Is it not clear, then, that of all our stations in this part of India, Lahor should not be the first abandoned, if retrenchments should be unavoidable? The only reason I can think of for making it the first, is, that it would in all probability be occupied at once by some other society, while others might long remain unoccupied if we should abandon them. This is indeed a consideration of considerable weight, as it matters little by whom the gospel is preached, provided it be preached faithfully. C. W. F.

A Letter of the Rev. C. W. Forman.

Notices of Persons lately baptized.

The Rev. C. W. Forman writes as follows, under date at Lahor, of July 7, 1863:

My dear ——. Since the last annual meeting of our mission, in January last, we have had some evidence of God's presence among us. The members of our native church have seemed to feel more than ever, that they had something to do for their countrymen. They have shown a greater disposition to help themselves also, by appointing meetings for prayer, and attending to the secularities of the church. We have had the privilege to admit four heathen to the communion of the church also.

The first of these was a young man from Calcutta, who had received a good education in the school of Dr. Mullens; but he had manifested no particular interest in the subject of religion, until he was attacked with what he supposed would be a fatal disease. He first went for instruction and counsel to one of our good missionary brethren of the Church of England, at Umritsur, and afterwards came to us, and was baptized by Mr. Newton. He showed the greatest anxiety about his soul, and was delighted by our readily granting him baptism. Since then his health has greatly improved, and he is now usefully employed as a teacher in our school.

A few weeks after, another Bengalee, who had been educated in an English school at Calcutta, from which the Bible is excluded, applied to us for baptism. He had tried idolatry, and afterwards deism also; but neither of them contained anything to satisfy him; and he was sure, he declared, that Christ, and Christ only, was the Saviour of sinners. He also received baptism, and is now engaged in teaching in our school. A few weeks ago, a third Bengalee, who had been educated in Dr. Duff's school, presented himself as a candidate for baptism. He too has been received into the church. Last Sunday, the heathen wife of a Christian servant was admitted to the church by baptism.

The Case of two Young Men—Scholars convinced that Idolatry is vain.

I have been very much interested, for several months, in two young men who have repeatedly visited the mission, and have seemed to be most anxious about their souls. One of them was a pupil in the government school at Firozepore, and the other is now studying in the Lahor government school. Their convictions of sin seemed very deep, and their belief that salvation could be obtained only through Christ, they have often expressed to me. I still hope to be permitted to receive them both into the church, though they seem to shrink from taking the step which must so completely separate them from all their friends. They have both given such evidence of faith in Christ, that I should have been ready to baptize them, if they had asked me to do so. The trial that such persons have to undergo are very great, and Christians should pray much for them, that they may have strength to come out on the side of Christ.

There are many intelligent lads in our school, who know that their own religion, or rather the religion of their fathers, is worthless, and that Christianity is the only religion that is worth anything; but still they hold back, being unable to renounce all.

Besides our principal school, we have a school for adults. There are nearly a hundred persons studying in this school, who are so engaged during the day that they are not able to attend the other. I have begun, for their benefit, a series of lectures on the life of our Saviour, to which they listen with apparent interest.

"The Fruit of Education"—A Plan of Itinerant Preaching—Other Means not disparaged.

You will no doubt notice, that almost everything of an encouraging nature which I have mentioned, is the fruit of education. This is not because nothing is done for the benefit of the uneducated. The gospel is preached regularly to the masses; but it does seem that a course of systematic teaching was necessary, to remove the gross darkness that covers the people. It would appear more apostolic, to go from town to town, scattering "the precious seed." But when we do this, the result, so far as seen, is almost nil; while our English schools (vernacular schools have proved almost worthless) do work great changes in the minds of the people. I would like, however, very much to see an unmarried missionary, with a few native preachers and vernacular teachers, occupy a rural district, say of two hundred square miles, containing a population of about sixty thousand souls, far away from European influence. They could within a few months make almost every man in the district acquainted with them; and by acts of kindness, particularly to the sick, make them regard them as friends. And every village might receive a visit from one or more of the party once in two months.

I would not think of giving up our city missions, and would not detract anything from the efficiency of our large English schools; but why might we not try at least one mission of the kind I mention? If you think it worth while, you might call the attention of the mission to the subject, and ask the opinion of the missionaries. I feel quite sure it would meet with the hearty approbation of some of the oldest and wisest among us, if not of the whole mission. I do not suggest this as anything new. Such a plan has been adopted in Southern India, and the results have, I believe, been most happy.

JWALA-MUKHI AND ITS WORSHIP.

Inflammable Gas Deified.

Jwala-Mukhi is a diminutive volcano, or a place where inflammable gas breaks forth from the soil. That in the Kángrá Valley, at the foot of the lofty Himalayas, is always on fire, and is believed to be fed by a limpid, bituminous liquid (probably naphtha) which exudes from the earth at that spot. When I say it is believed to be fed, you must not think that the natives of the country share in this belief. On the contrary, ever attributing to the supernatural what is unusual and beyond their understanding, they have for ages past deified the place, and have thrown an arched chamber over the spot whence the flames issue.

The Brahmans, ever greedy of gain, soon saw in nature's vomiting forth her noxious gases, an opportunity, not to be lost, of satisfying their cupidity at the expense of the credulity of their ignorant and superstitious countrymen. Accordingly, long before the time of Akbar, who, they say, endeavoured in vain to quench the flame by turning a mountain stream on it, the place was held in high repute, not only as a cure for sin, but as a panacea for every ill to which flesh is heir.

The Various Classes of Worshippers.

Here, then, might be seen old and decrepit mothers, led by devout and loving sons, whose elastic, springy steps speak of robust health and vigour; fathers carrying their little ones on their shoulders; young and tender maidens, footsore and tired out by the fatigues of the journey, dragging their wearied limbs along, that they may be present to make their requests known to the Devi. Many suffering from grievous diseases, and despairing of a remedy at the hands of the native physician, are induced to test the reputed efficacy of their all-potent, because all-belauded, titular deity.

With such a multitude, having such a variety of requests, it is no matter for astonishment to those who know the art and adroitness of the Brahmans, to find that they realize a very handsome revenue from the offerings made at the shrine.

The Offerings.

These offerings are of two kinds: one an expiation for sin; the other a sort of douceur, to induce the Devi to grant the petitions of her votaries. Each petitioner approaches the Devi, or goddess, through the intervenient power of blood, (bearing in this particular a marked resemblance to the Mosaic economy.) Each sacrifices a he-goat of the first year's growth, paying a certain fixed sum (seven pice) for the privilege—one-fourth of which goes to the man who slays the sacrifice, and who is attached to the temple for that purpose. The animal is never slain by the person who offers the oblation. The head is retained, but the carcase is carried away by the owner, for his own use.

The Missionary Visitors.

In the autumn of each year, during the continuance of the great Mela, Jwala-Mukhi is visited by those missionaries who occupy the region round about. At such times efforts are made to direct the deluded pilgrims to a sacrifice that speaketh better things than the blood of goats. By the living voice of the preacher, and the free distribution of the word of God, they are directed to the bleeding form of Him who was slain on Mount Calvary, as the only atonement for sin, and the only means of obtaining the favour of God. With what result, the Judgment-day alone will reveal. In the meantime the missionary endeavours to labour on in faith, though often under much discouragement.

The rehearsal of the scene at Ephesus often occurs in his experience. The people of that city drowned the voice of the converted Jew with the cry, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians!" And these ignorant worshippers of false gods often, in the same way, oppose the preaching of the word, by vociferating, "Devi ji ki jai! Devi ji ki jai!"—"Victory to Devi! Victory to Devi!" But as the power of the Holy Ghost prevailed over Diana of the Ephesians, and, instead of the idolatrous and impure rites of the Ephesian goddess, established the true and holy worship of the one living God, and our Saviour Jesus Christ; and as the hearts of the Ephesians were so influenced, that instead of setting apart a month for the observance of the Artemisiac Panegyris and Hieromenia, they were led to set themselves apart as temples of God, "builded together for an habitation of God, through the Spirit"—may we not feel assured that the same power will yet prove mighty at Jwala-Mukhi, to the pulling down of the stronghold of the Devi? Let us pray, then, that God may sustain the faith of his servants, that they may go on preparing the way for the manifestation of this power; and may the time soon come, when, instead of crying "Devi ji ki jai," the inhabitants of Hindustan, with hearts overflowing with joy at their emancipation from the power of the Devi, shall, in accents of gratitude and love, shout "Jehovah Nissi!" CHINA—CANTON MISSION.

A Letter of John G. Kerr, M. D.

A Visit to Shiklung.

The following narrative will be read with much interest, as showing the good influence of medical missionary work among the Chinese, and the door open for many more labourers amongst that people. It was written under date, at Canton, of July 10th, 1863.

You may be pleased to hear something of a short trip I made to a city called Shiklung, about fifty miles east of Canton. The place is noted for the violent and turbulent character of the people, and for their hostility to foreigners. The city has been visited several times by the German brethren, and others have passed by, not venturing to stop. Two English missionaries were, I believe, sent away from there by the Mandarins.

I was invited by the Rev. A. Krolczyk to go with him to Shiklung, and try what could be done to conciliate the people by distributing medicines. We started on the 17th of June, and reached our destination a little after midnight. We were up by daylight, and while we were arranging our toilets, our boatmen announced to those who were attracted by the presence of foreigners, that we had come to dispense medicines without charge. Our presence and our errand soon became known. As soon as we could get ready, we started on a tour of observation, taking with us several packages of Christian almanacs. We distributed these to the shops as we passed along, but were obliged to pass by many shops and thousands of people without giving them books. We went to the residence of the principal Mandarin, and sent him some books; but as it was early, we did not ask for admission.

Returning to our boat for breakfast, we were followed by a large crowd of men and boys, who were generally very civil. After breakfast we went to a large temple close by, and asked permission to use it, which was readily granted. One-half of the door was closed and barricaded, and the other half of the doorway was occupied by Mr. Krolczyk and his native assistants, to keep out the rabble, and let in patients. I had not been long seated before patients began to come in. The crowd at the door increased, and my German friend found his hands full, with the double task of keeping the people outside, and keeping them in a good humour. After I had been prescribing for two or three hours, I went to the door to relieve him a little while, and I soon discovered in the crowd a familiar face. It was that of a man on whom I had performed the operation of lithotomy, and he had only been discharged from the hospital about a month. He of course greeted me with smiles, and had brought two of his friends for medicine. After I had prescribed for between two and three hundred patients, Mr. Krolczyk was becoming exhausted with his labours at the door, and we considered it prudent to desist. My stock of medicines was getting low, too, and we announced this fact, but the people were all the more eager to get in. We walked through the crowd to our boat, and were treated very civilly. I then got some tracts from the boat, and distributed them, standing on a pile of stones on the bank of the river.

After distributing books for some time, I spoke of the object of our visit, and asked if they desired us to return again. To this the response was unanimous in the affirmative, and the boys were particularly emphatic in their approval. The native assistant then delivered a short address on salvation through a crucified Redeemer, which was listened to with the ordinary attention of Chinese crowds, and we returned to our boats for the purpose of starting home. We had proceeded but a short distance, when we were hailed by a canoe which had two patients in it, and they were hailing to another canoe to hurry up. We found that patients were being brought in from the country, and there were no doubt many hundreds who would have been brought, had we remained a few days in the place.

Before leaving, Mr. Krolczyk had directed his assistant to seek for a house, with a view of opening a dispensary there, either by himself alone, or with my assistance. About a week after our return to Canton, the assistant brought word that a house had been offered by the wealthiest and most influential firm in the city. A few days ago, two elderly men from Shiklung visited me for the purpose of learning what my intentions were about opening a hospital in their city, and what diseases I proposed to cure. They said it was the design of the gentry of Shiklung to furnish me a house, and invite me to go there for the purpose of opening a hospital. Whether these men were really in earnest, or whether they were merely spies to find out our intentions, and effectually prevent our getting a foothold, remains to be seen. In the mean time Mr. Krolczyk is attending the semi-annual conference of his Mission, and they will take action on the matter. My brethren here have signified their approval of my visiting the place once a month, and endeavouring, in concert with our German friend, to open the way for the settlement of permanent labourers there.

Many large cities and towns in the south of China might be occupied, if there was a medical missionary to open them for a few years. Truly the harvest is great, and the labourers are few. How much better would it be if the men and money killed and wasted in war, could be used in spreading the gospel of salvation!

MISSION IN SIAM.

A Letter of the Rev. D. McGilvary.

A good Report of Petchaburi—The Laos; labours for them—Need of Missionaries—Trying question of duty—"We are much encouraged."

Mr. McGilvary writes, under date of July 25, 1863, from his station at Petchaburi, which he says means, in the Siamese language, "the city of diamonds," or "the diamond city."

. . . I am thankful to state that God has still been gracious to us all. Our dear little daughter, who was sick when I last reported, is much better. She is growing in interest daily—a bright little

"sunbeam," truly, to us. Mrs. McGilvary's health has also been better, though she is not strong yet. I had a slight attack of chills and fever for a few days, but am now well. How thankful I should be for the good health that God has given me! Slight as that chill or two was, it was the worst attack of sickness that I ever had. Mr. and Mrs. McFarland, with their fine little boy, are all well. Our three native church-members are well, and seem to be doing finely.

We have begun a weekly prayer-meeting in Siamese, on Wednesday evening, for their benefit. It is a voluntary exercise. No one is compelled to come, but all are invited and encouraged to do so. We began it with some hesitancy, but it has been a perfect success so far. All who are in our compound have attended every time, so far, and seem really to be more interested than on the Sabbath. The reason is to be found in the nature of the exercises, which are made as short and pointed as possible. One of us alternately presides and conducts the meeting. It opens with singing and prayer, followed by a few appropriate verses of Scripture; a prayer by one of the church-members, another short hymn, another prayer, a remark or two, and dismission—the whole exercise not an hour long. Our native church-members seem to have entered into it heartily. Next after the great object of all prayer-meetings, it was designed to train them; and we look for much good from it.

Samier Chap, the Laos man of whom I formerly wrote, has not lost his interest, and is now an applicant for baptism. Mr. McFarland and myself went out to see him the other week, at his home, and I have gone several times alone. I have visited every one of the Laos villages of any size in this neighbourhood. The last two months I have devoted most of my time to them, in which I have been favoured by the lateness of the rains this season. Usually at this time of the year, but few of them could be visited with any comfort; but even as late as last week I went out to the farthest of them, with no very great inconvenience. The roads are somewhat muddy; but as we can get a good horse whenever we want one, from our kind friend, the lieutenant-governor, we get along very well. The last time, I was gone two days; enjoyed the rude hospitality of one of their headmen at night; answered hundreds of questions in reference to country, race, manners, customs, &c., as well as on religious subjects, and distributed a large number of books.

I think there is beginning to be quite a spirit of inquiry awakened among the Laos. Another officer in the same village is inquiring, of whom we have much hope. But here arises a question, a serious one, that will be a source of great trial to us, when the Laos shall begin to embrace the gospel. The day we were out to visit our friend, he had a summons to bring two hundred men the following Sabbath, to do the king's work. He says he keeps the Sabbath when it is his own time, but that often he has to work for his masters; that a refusal would be attended with disastrous consequences to himself, and probably to his people, and might be to us. We could not, of course, advise him to refuse to obey those in whose power, under God, we all are placed; yet we feel that it is a question of much interest, and will become more and more so, as the Laos become Christians. It is one of those numerous questions which arise for the missionary to determine, for which he needs much of the "wisdom that cometh down from above." What is duty in such a case? On one side we have the principle that we ought to obey God rather than man; on the other, "Servants be obedient to your masters, not only to the gentle, but also to the froward." One thing is very evident. Any interference on our part, or any advice that would lead them to come into collision with the authorities of the land, would end in prohibiting us from having anything to do with them; or, at any rate, what would amount to the same, a prohibition to them of hearing us. So, with the light before us, we advised our friend to obey his summons, whenever required to do so; to keep the Sabbath in spirit, if not in letter; and to keep it both in spirit and letter, when he is master of his own time. That seemed to be what he felt himself to be duty also.

We expect to have our second communion in about two weeks. As our Laos friend has never been at one, we advised him to attend our first, and wait for baptism until the next, which will be two months.

I wish to write a longer article on the Laos. I look on them as the most interesting part of our field. And the fact that the Laos, in their own country, are accessible to the missionary, and have none, is one of the most interesting features, just now, in the whole missionary work.

On the whole, we are much encouraged. God has given us what might be called a little revival in our own hearts. All the members of our station have been greatly awakened or quickened to a spirit of prayer, and faith in prayer too. This is really more encouraging than the few accessions to our church. I have felt more during the last month or two, as I used to think I would feel on a mission-field, than ever before. More as I did when God poured out his Holy Spirit on us and our dear charge, and watered us with a precious shower of refreshing.

My dear brother, pray for us—pray for the Laos. What a thought, that probably the first one of their race is now first coming to the light of the gospel! Who will go up into their own country? I feel like saying, "Here am I, send me." From the similarity of the languages, in a great many things amounting to identity, the entrance must first be made through Siam. Must another generation pass without their having the Bible? I trust not.

NEW ZEALAND POETRY.

Some of the natives of New Zealand can write very nice verses. The following were written by one of them, in the Maori language, and have been translated into English very nearly word for word.

Whose mournful voice is heard to cry
High o'er the Mount of Calvary?
Ah! 'tis the Lord's, whose dying throes
Proclaim the acuteness of his woes.

His hands were nailed to yonder tree;
And then his side was pierced! Oh see
The streaming blood from every wound,
Now stains the cross, now stains the ground.

Wherefore was He, the Holy, slain?
For whom did he the load of pain
And grief endure? 'Twas in our stead,
Messiah, Prince of Glory, bled.

'Twas love that brought Him here below
To save from everlasting woe;
To save from every blot and sin
Each guilty man that comes to Him.

NEW SABBATH-SCHOOL BOOKS.

During the last few months the Board has been making a large addition to its Sabbath-school Library. A large number more have been approved, and will be published as rapidly as possible.

We ask the attention of pastors and Sabbath-school superintendents and teachers to these new publications.

In the first place, we are fully persuaded that no books for Sabbath-school libraries, superior to these, can be found in the land. The constant effort of the Board in this branch of its publications, is, to issue nothing which will not tend to enlighten the understanding, and draw the young heart to Christ and his salvation. To this end it is believed that its later Sabbath-school books are admirably adapted.

Secondly, they are not only instructive in their subject matter, but highly attractive and interesting in their style. While the narrative and conversational form is freely used as a vehicle for conveying truth, everything like romance or exciting plot is entirely excluded. Those who have judged of the attractiveness of the Board's books only by its earlier issues for Sabbath-schools, will, we hope, examine those of the last few years.

Thirdly, they are uncommonly neat and inviting in their exterior. The engravings are not surpassed by those of any volumes of juvenile reading we have seen, and there are several in every volume. Several of the latest contain coloured lithographic frontispieces, which are very beautiful.

As this is the season of the year when many Sabbath-schools are adding new books to their libraries, we hope they will examine these new volumes from the presses of the Board.

COLPORTEURS WANTED.

The Board of Publication will commission a few more good colporteurs in Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa, Illinois, and Nebraska, and also in the States further eastward. Those willing to engage in this good work will please address the Secretary of the Board of Publication, who will at once furnish to applicants all needful information.

The great motive for engaging in this service ought always to be, to glorify God, by diffusing his truth, and saving souls. The principal motive of a colporteur should never be, to make money, either for himself or for the Board. The Board desires to commission no one as a colporteur, who is willing to regard himself, or allow others to regard him, as a mere vender or pedler of books. The great work of the colporteur is to do good by the circulation of printed truth, accompanying the pages sold and given away, so far as practicable, with personal religious conversation and prayer. He is expected to do this in the constant hope and desire that, above all, God will bless it to the conversion, edification, and salvation of immortal souls.

Satisfactory testimonials will, in every instance, be required, before any applicant can be commissioned. These testimonials must be furnished by a Presbytery, a Colportage Committee of a Presbytery, the session of a church, or by at least two ministers of good standing in our own or some other evangelical church. They must bear testimony to the piety, prudence, industry, and business qualifications of the applicant.

THE GOOD WORK.

The following extract is taken from a letter a few days ago received from an active Christian labourer at Memphis, Tennessee.

"Your valuable publications for soldiers are much prized. I wish we could obtain a plentiful supply. The 'Soldier's Pocket Book' is much called for.

"The good work is progressing well in this department. We have sent out very large numbers of the leaves of the tree of life, since the 7th of August.

"Revivals are in progress in four of the regiments about this city. The interest is spreading. Our daily service is one of great interest."

HOSPITAL DISTRIBUTIONS.

A minister, providentially laid aside from pastoral duty, has for several years laboured as a colporteur of our Board in southern Iowa. In the following letter, he describes one of his periodical visits to the military hospitals at Keokuk, in that State, where from ten to fifteen hundred of our sick and wounded soldiers may always be found. This is but a brief page among many longer ones, which make up the daily history of this work of the Board. Will not every church and Sabbath-school—every church-member and scholar—take part in such a work as this?

Keokuk, Iowa, September, 1863.

Dear Sir—At the earliest opportunity after leaving the hospitals at Keokuk, I write you, giving a statement of my visit to that place. At each of these I spent some time, participating in public religious services in each; conversing personally with the well and convalescent, and especially with the worst of the sick and wounded, and praying with them.

I can bear testimony, along with many others who have been similarly employed in various places over our afflicted country, that I found the work promotive of my own spiritual benefit. It does the soul good to mingle with those noble men, who, in sustaining the government, have imperilled their lives on the battle-field, or in the camp, and endeavour to point them to Christ; mingling our emotions with theirs, in view of the wonderful manifestations of redeeming grace, as displayed in the call and conversion of the soul. "Amazing grace, how sweet the sound," or, "Why was I made to hear thy voice?" would be the sentiment of the heart, and sometimes the utterance of the lip, in words or in song, while we told of what God had done for us.

I was very much assisted by the books and tracts sent me from the Board for distribution. Besides the direct influence for good from a book or tract, (as the case may be,) it greatly assists the distributor. And here I feel disposed to pay a tribute to those who have had a share in getting up those packages of tracts designated "The Soldier's Series." I had never seen them before, and certainly they are admirably adapted to their mission. "The Pass-word," "The Drummer Boy," the Wounded Soldier," and others, are highly appropriate. This kind of matter will produce good results.

Then, too, the hymn and tune, (in card form) were disposed of with a happy effect. In some cases, before public or social worship, I distributed among the soldiers assembled, numerous copies of "Happy Day," or "Come unto Me," or "Just as I am," and at the close had it sung. Sometimes the effect was truly animating; the swell of voice, and the welling up of deep emotion, as read in the eye and face, invested the whole service with more than ordinary impressiveness. We sing these sweet familiar hymns in our religious gatherings, and we feel their power. But, superadded, here are all the surroundings of martial life, and some of them in their most affecting form, as the tune is borne along by the strong, manly voices of the soldiery.

Let me narrate some of the incidents that occurred during my sojourn in the hospitals, in which I was myself interested.

As I entered one of the sick chambers, I noticed a fair and very youthful-looking man reading the Testament. I said to him that I was glad to find him reading that book, and asked if he thought he loved the book and its Author. "Oh, yes—reading the Bible and prayer gives me more pleasure than anything else." He had not hoped he was a Christian until after he entered the service, but had determined to follow out the advice of his mother. He said that, for a time, his comrades would jeer him; but, with a simplicity and earnestness which impressed me very much, added, "But what is that?" What consummate folly for a brave soldier to cower before temptation!

In another room was a man of more than middle age, much emaciated by disease, who, from his own statement, had been a reckless despiser of the gospel when he entered the service. He was now rejoicing in Christ as his portion. By his side was a man almost blind, and very feeble, who seemed to have a very imperfect conception of the gospel and its obligations. His attention was directed to Bartimeus, and Bartimeus' portion; and as we knelt between these two couches for prayer, the scene was deeply solemn. On the one hand lay a fellow-mortal almost blind as to bodily eyes, and we feared spiritually blind; on the other, as we hoped, an heir of salvation, plucked as a brand from the burning.

In another ward I had become interested in the case of a Christian man who had been in hard service. He said he did not know how he would have been sustained on the battle-field, but for the precious hope of the gospel. He had been low, but was now better, and hoped to start in two days to see his four children. His wife was with him. Twenty-four hours after, he was thought to be dying; the cold sweat in large drops was standing on his face. Said I, Is all well? "Oh, yes—all is well!" He rallied again, and was living when I left Keokuk.

On a couch, in a different part of the same building, was an intelligent young man, from northwestern Iowa. His father and two brothers are ministers. He spoke with gratitude of early religious instruction. To the question, Have you not found it difficult to lead a religious life in the army? he replied, "Yes; but it is possible. It can be done." One of the late recruits from Vicksburg was a young man of more than usually pleasant countenance, who had lost one leg. He was thankful that his life was spared, and said that he would consecrate it to the service of his Maker and Preserver.

One of the most impressive incidents of my sojourn was at the couch of a large, muscular man, who was not much wasted by disease. When I first saw him, he conversed freely and tenderly upon the subject of religion. He had not been a professor; the chaplain thinks he was a Christian. When I entered his room the next day, he fixed his large wild eyes on me, and talked loudly but incoherently. I asked if he knew me. "No, I don't know you," and he talked on wildly. His sister remarked that he had been out of his mind for some hours. Said I, will you be still and let me talk? I repeated several texts, and among others, "In my Father's house are many mansions," along with six or seven verses in the same chapter, told him if we were Christians, and reached heaven, we would know each other, and asked him if he understood me. "Oh, yes, I understand that!" giving "that" a peculiar emphasis. During all the time I was talking he kept perfectly still, with his wild glaring eyes fixed on me, scarcely winking. What interested me was, that the man, while apparently unconscious of all things around him, could comprehend the Scripture and divine things. When I called a few hours after, he was dead.

The various shades of character often stand out in bold relief. I had frequent interviews with those soldiers who were nearly well. They always received me with courtesy, and would listen with apparent attention to what I had to say. I tried to guard the mind against the dreadful deception, that I fear has place with many in the army, (and at home too,) that to be a soldier in such a cause, is, of itself, a sufficient passport to eternity.

One day while I was at Keokuk, there arrived, fresh from Vicksburg, 346 additional sick and wounded. As I stood on the sideway, and noticed the men passing on foot or in the omnibus, haggard and worn, and then the worse sick and wounded, one after another in long procession, on their stretchers, carried each by four men, I felt more than ever before, that the soldiers had a large claim upon the gratitude and sympathy of the nation, and steeled and obdurate must be that heart that feels no obligation, and manifests none.

In numerous cases I found the Bible a prized book with soldiers who once did not value it. And here let me say, for the encouragement of those who are called upon to furnish religious reading for the army, that the statement is made by soldiers themselves, that when, on violent marches or retreat, almost every encumbrance is thrown away, the Bible never is—any other book seldom. The call waxes louder and louder. Labour on, and labour faithfully. You may put in train influences for good, that will not stop this side the judgment-day. J. K.

BOARD OF CHURCH EXTENSION.

Corresponding Secretary—Rev. H. I. Coe.
Treasurer—David Keith, Esq.

Rooms of the Young Men's Christian Association, corner of Fifth and Olive Streets, St. Louis, Mo.

Communications on the subject of Church Extension should be addressed to the Corresponding Secretary, Corner of Fifth and Olive Streets, St. Louis, Mo.

Donations should be sent to David Keith, Esq., St. Louis, Mo., or, if more convenient, to J. D. Thorpe, Esq., Cincinnati, Ohio: A. Davidson, Esq., Louisville, Ky.; S. D. Powel, Esq., Treasurer of the Board of Domestic Missions, No. 910 Arch Street, Philadelphia; T. H. Nevin, Esq., Pittsburgh, Pa.; Mr. J. B. Kirtland, Memphis, Tennessee; or to William Rankin, Esq., Treasurer of the Board of Foreign Missions, 23 Centre street, New York.

THE FIRST SIX MONTHS.

From April 1st to October 1st, 1863, the Board of Church Extension has received donations amounting to $12,532 57. During the same period forty-one churches have sought aid through the Board. As they have not all yet stated the exact amount of aid they will need, we cannot give the precise aggregate of applications. It will, however, exceed $13,000. It is a gratifying fact that the contributions during this period have so nearly equalled the demands.

This liberality encourages us to respond with equal liberality to the appeals of the needy; and enables us promptly to make glad the hearts of suffering applicants. Let the prayers and gifts of God's people continue, and many a sanctuary will be built, even in these troublous times.

"WITHHOLDING DOES NOT ENRICH."

I knew a church that voted to give nothing for benevolent purposes until their church debt was paid. After three years' trial, and years of drouth and pain they were, they changed their policy—began to give, and then they began to pay their debt. I knew another, where they took regular collections for various objects, but turned all to the account of their debt, until their contributions were reduced to almost nothing. They have given up paying their debt in this way. I knew another church, which had a debt of some thirteen thousand dollars. Contributions continued, and gained in amount, with a comparatively small congregation, for five years, averaging about two thousand a year. In the mean time, the debt was reduced to about ten thousand dollars, and all expenses paid. Now some good but mistaken men thought, if they could only have the two thousand a year for five years, which had gone for other and excellent purposes indeed, that would have paid off the debt. So for three years or more the debt has been thrown into the foreground, and with a larger, perhaps a less able congregation, contributions fell off at least two-thirds, and of course the debt was nearly paid! Not a bit of it. The debt the meanwhile increased from ten to thirteen thousand again. "Withholding does not enrich." It tendeth to poverty. Oh, when will men cease to play the child on this great subject! God's promises mean something. There is a field for faith in this matter of giving. It is safe to trust where we cannot see in the line of plain duty. Let all the churches arise and pay their debts; then all the people will have occasion to say, Amen and amen!—Viator.

CHURCHES IN EASTERN CITIES.

In New York there is one church to every 2641 inhabitants; in Philadelphia, one to 2056; in Baltimore, one to every 1249; in Boston, one to 1586. The number of churches in New York is 305; in Philadelphia, 275; in Baltimore, 170; in Boston, 112; Brooklyn, New York, and Newark and Elizabeth, New Jersey, are said to have one church to every 1000 inhabitants.

OUT OF DEBT.

"Out of debt, out of danger," remarks one of our exchanges, is a good rule for individuals and churches. A modern writer says that the apostle was careful to owe no man anything, and then asks: "Had he been in debt to Felix, does any one suppose he could have made Felix tremble?"

There is great power in that independence of man which one may feel who is out of debt. "The borrower is servant to the lender." And no church or individual can be wholly free from the trammels of slavery, unless free from the burdens of such an evil as debt. This is the season that many of our churches have improved to deliver themselves from these burdens, and the more rapidly and successfully they push on their work, the better it will be for them and the cause.

DR. GUTHRIE ON CHURCH ARCHITECTURE.

The foundation-stone of the new church at Crathie was laid on the 15th of July, last year, by the Earl of Dalhousie. The site for the new church was granted by the Prince Consort, and was the last act of his public life in Scotland. The spot selected is one of the minor hills about a mile to the south of Balmoral, and the church is placed about halfway up the slope, at the upper edge of a thick plantation. It is a very neat Gothic erection, with lancet windows and slender spire, and is intended to accommodate about four hundred people. The interior has been finished in a very superior manner. The entire cost will be about £1000. The church was formally opened, August 6th, by the Rev. Dr. Guthrie, who took it on his way in his return to Edinburgh from Thurso and the north, where he had been spending his holidays. After the sermon, the Dr. said:

"I highly approve of the resolution of our friends that led them to build such a house as this; because there is no greater mistake in the world than to fancy, that while God is a God of holiness, a God of power, and of justice, he is not also a God of taste. I say that God is a God of taste, just as much as he is a God of anything else that is lovely and good. And how do I prove that? you may ask. I prove that by just asking you to go to the sea-shore, and find out for me a shell that is not pretty. I prove that by asking you to go to those meadows, and find out a flower that is not pretty. Let me tell you that the flowers would have produced their kind according to the law, although they had never been painted. It is not necessary for the rose and the lily, that the one should blush so beautiful a red, and the other bloom as white as snow. God has made a useful flower—a useful rose and a useful lily—and then painted them. It is as certain as that the Bible is true, that he is a God of taste, as much as he is possessed of those other attributes. And therefore it is, I say, that I rejoice in the erection of such a building for God's service. Our old stupid notion was—we abhorred Popery so much that we recoiled to the other side—that God was never so well worshipped as in an ugly house. It is a great mistake; a mistake contrary to the Bible, contrary to reason and common sense. I like to see a man have the best of books in his library gilded, though every other book there should be in plain binding. I like to see an honest working man, or a servant girl—I like to see any humble poor person keep his or her best dress for the Lord's day, or for attendance at the Lord's table. Now, I want to see everything connected with God's service becoming. I do not want to see money uselessly thrown away upon it. But I want to see things that are in accordance with taste, and that give evidence of it."

THE HOME AND FOREIGN RECORD.

By order of the General Assembly, the publication of the Home and Foreign Record in the quarto or newspaper form will cease with the December number. It will from thence be printed only in the octavo, or pamphlet form, which will be advantageous to those who annually bind it in a volume. The matters it presents have a permanent interest. It is our duty, as Christians, to know what, as a church, we are doing now; and, if preserved, it will be a valuable record of the progress of the church to succeeding generations.

The change presents a favourable opportunity for pastors and others interested in the welfare of the people, to make a new effort to circulate the Record among them. It is now several years since any considerable accession has been made to the list of subscribers, and it is thought that in many churches there are numbers, recently added, who know nothing of the existence of this periodical. It is hoped that the action of the Assembly will meet the approval of the church, which could be shown in no better way than by a great increase of subscribers.

SICKNESS—BRIGHTENING PROSPECTS.

Iowa.

Dear Brother—I expected to be absent to-day preaching at P—— a sermon preparatory to the observance of the Lord's Supper on the approaching Sabbath, but a violent wind and storm have prevented me from crossing the Missouri river; so I will occupy a portion of my time to-day in giving you a brief outline of my labours the last quarter.

We have had more sickness in my field during the last three months than usual, especially among children. The hooping-cough has carried off more children than is common with that disease, while the diphtheria has also prevailed, as well as typhoid fever. One of the best families in my charge in N—— T—— lost their four youngest children, all sons, from one to twelve years of age, within three weeks, from diphtheria. The father and mother united with us, at our last communion, upon the profession of their faith. It was a cheerful, prosperous, and happy family; but this has been a severe stroke to them, removing suddenly one-half of their joyful number. May the Lord sustain them under it, and sanctify it to them.

I have been called to preach a number of funeral sermons, but divine providences often work for the eternal profit of those who experience them. As evidence of this, last Sabbath, at our communion season at ——— ———, we had an aged father to take his seat with us for the first time, upon profession of his faith and hope in the Redeemer. That father has had a good Presbyterian education, has acted as judge of the county in former years, and is about being elected again. During the last year he lost a beloved son in the army, and then met with the sad misfortune of shooting another; and his trials have been so multiplied and heavy, that they have at last brought him humbly and penitently to the foot of the cross, and he now rests alone on Jesus. To-day, if I had been permitted to hold a sessional meeting at P——, we expected to receive into our number a mother, who has lately buried a beloved little daughter. She is the wife of a so-called Universalist, and he has written me to preach the funeral sermon of his child as early as convenient. Thus it is

> "Behind a frowning providence
> God hides a smiling face."

With but slight interruptions, my own family have been much favoured in regard to health, for which we desire to be truly thankful to the Giver.

The above facts, with others that might be mentioned, of a somewhat encouraging character, indicate that the cause of Zion is not stationary among us. But we could wish, for our own sake, and that of many others, that it was tenfold in advance. Still, we see something here, as in innumerable other instances, of the healthful and growing influence of our excellent Board of Missions, in helping to sustain, even in troublous times, and in waste places, the blessed gospel of the Son of God. It is sending forth its streams continually to make glad the city of God. And in the great day of final reckoning, many, sought out, nurtured, and saved, through its instrumentality, will rise up and call it blessed. From several providential absences, I have neglected thus far to lift any collections for it in my present field, but I shall endeavour to do so the present quarter.

During the last month I had a pleasant, and I trust profitable absence, attending at Des Moines upon the sessions of the Synod of Southern Iowa. It was the first Synod it has been my privilege to attend since coming to Western Iowa. The distance heretofore has been so great, and the expense of attending so heavy, that I have felt it necessary to forego the pleasure and profit of its sittings. The brethren, at a previous meeting, were so considerative of our circumstances along this western frontier, as to arrange at their last meeting to meet us at Des Moines, about midway between the Mississippi and Missouri rivers; and the next year they purpose to be still more accommodating, as they will hold their next meeting at Council Bluffs, within the bounds of the Missouri River Presbytery, and will spend two Sabbaths, with the entire intervening week, there. May it prove a rich and lasting blessing to all this western Zion.

The impression made at Des Moines by Synod I think was entirely favourable for its devotional and spiritual growth. The Old-school Presbyterian church there at present is small, but I am persuaded that, with the divine blessing, there is good foundation for a vigorous and successful effort. The town is beautifully located, already embraces some eight or nine thousand inhabitants, is improving rapidly, and is no doubt destined, as the centre of railroad influence, as well as being the capital of the State, to exert in time a controlling power. So fully persuaded am I of all this, that I have consented to accept their invitation to labour among them, from the first of January next, for three-fourths of my time, and at Indianola, the county-seat of Warren county, the other one-fourth of my time, provided those churches and the Board of Missions can raise a sufficient amount to enable me to devote myself wholly to the work of the ministry among them. This I hope, and I may say I believe, will be done; for I feel that God is calling me more strongly to go to that field than to any other, and I trust it is for his own glory that I have such inclination and sense of duty. And I do hope the Board will do all they can, at least for the coming year, to enable me to move my family to Des Moines, and begin successfully my labours among that people. In accepting their invitation, I have been compelled to decline a very cordial, and repeated, and earnest invitation to become the pastor of the Presbyterian church at Brownsville, Nebraska Territory; but in doing so, I can only say that I felt that God so directed.

With much love to you all, I remain as ever,
Yours truly,

DISINTERESTED LABOURERS—EARNEST APPEAL.

Missouri.

You will not think it strange that I should address you, when you hear my story. Some twenty-five years since, I came to this place from the Old Harmony Mission. The country was then new. Five families then composed our whole community. Believing it to be my duty to preach the gospel to many or few, I commenced my labours. The settlement soon increased to a respectable number of families. These labours had not long been continued before some manifest fruits were seen. Most of the first families who settled in this vicinity had been brought up under Methodist influence, and of course when an opportunity offered, they joined themselves to that church. Some five or six years passed away before any effort was made on my part to organize a church. It was finally done in a grove, as we had no house large enough to accommodate the assembly. The organization consisted only of eight members, and but one elder. The elder was a godly man, and rendered most efficient service. From the first the children were gathered into Sabbath-school, and were in some good measure brought under the influence of the gospel.

Things went on surely and slowly until we had crowded houses, and a good influence was everywhere manifest. The number of members increased until, in 1859, we numbered between forty and fifty members. The people from the first were poor, and did but little for my support. Besides, we had no house of worship. Being a practising physician, and receiving something in this way, I resolved in my own mind to begin a house of worship, and if Providence should favour, to urge it to completion.

In 1859 it was completed and dedicated. Its cost was not far from eight hundred dollars, seven hundred of which I paid out of my own income. It was free from debt. From two hundred to two hundred and fifty can be comfortably seated in it. At the time of its dedication some eight or ten were received into full communion.

At this time I thought it best to relinquish the charge of the church, that some one less infirm, and better prepared to increase its efficiency, might take my place. But this was not done as I hoped. Month after month passed away, and no supply was obtained. I continued my labours for some time, labouring under the greatest discouragements.

In the meantime, some disagrecable circumstances arose, which brought every thing to a stand-still. Before the church had recovered from this shock, the war commenced. The most of the time since, the house has been closed and nothing done.

By removals, deaths, and other circumstances, things have so changed that I cannot say that an organized church remains. Some, however, of the best members still remain, and often may be seen weeping over the desolations of Zion. My health is quite precarious, and my voice quite broken down, so that to preach to be heard would be almost impossible.

The house might soon be put in good order, and would be, could we but have a good man to fill the pulpit. At present our worldly prospects look forbidding. A man of firm faith in the promises of God might labour here with good hope of success. Should we be again blessed with peace, we have every reason to believe the country would again fill up by a population that would prize the privileges of God's house.

The government is now doing what it can to rid us of all the disturbers of our peace. What I desire is that the D—— church may be kept in remembrance, and when a suitable man can be found who may be willing to undertake so arduous a work, let him be sent forthwith. Should he come in the spirit of his Divine Master, seeking not his own, but the things of Christ, I feel an assurance that in due time he will reap, if he faint not. Many are the earnest petitions which are still on record, which will scarcely fail to be answered in due time. This beautiful country must eventually be planted with flourishing churches. I may not live to see that day, but the promises of God warrants it.

Do, dear sir, remember our wants not only before the churches, but before a prayer-hearing God.

Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this.—Isa. ix. 7.

BOARD OF EDUCATION.

Letters and Communications for the BOARD OF EDUCATION on the subject of Ministerial Education, or of Schools, Academies, and Colleges, may be addressed to the Rev. Dr. CHESTER, or Rev. THOMAS MCCAULEY, No. 821 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

Remittances of Money may be made to WILLIAM MAIN, Esq., Treasurer, No. 821 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

CANDIDATES! CANDIDATES!

In view of the alarming and increasing deficiency, which, through a series of recent years, has manifested itself in the number of pious youths that are prompted to offer themselves for the service of God in preparation for the ministry, the following practical and forcible appeal of the venerated Dr. Miller, of the Theological Seminary at Princeton, delivered in behalf of the Board of Education almost thirty years ago, is so pertinent to our present condition as a church, and the urgent prospective demands of the rapidly whitening harvest, that its reproduction, it is thought, will be altogether beneficial to the mind of every minister, pastor, elder, and church-member, that will give it a calm and prayerful perusal. Brethren, something must be done, and that speedily, to increase the number of candidates for the ministry.

This is also deemed an opportune occasion in which to remove a most unjust impression, somewhat prevalent in various parts of our Zion, that one cause of the diminution of candidates has been the inability of the Board to aid them while prosecuting their studies.

On the contrary, it is a historical fact, never more true than at the present time, that not an instance has occurred, during our forty-four years of existence as a Board, in which the following rule and pledge has not been most faithfully observed and redeemed.

Article 11th of the By-laws: "As a universal principle, the Board will refuse no applicant merely for want of funds."

BRETHREN READ THE APPEAL!

"The subject before us demands the solemn attention, not merely of the Board of Education, but of every member and friend of the Presbyterian church. Are there any of this large class who are ready to ask—'What can we do?' I answer—There are, probably, at this hour, from four to five thousand young men scattered through our churches, of hopeful piety, and of sound, improvable minds; who might, in seven or eight years, from the present time, be brought into the ministry, if proper measures were forthwith taken to effect the object. Now, let ministers and church-sessions search out all such young men; —carefully discriminating between those who have good native talents, and those who have not; and also between those who are modest, humble, prudent, and teachable, and those who, though hopefully pious, have not these qualities. Let them immediately recommend the FORMER to the Board of Education, and encourage them, by all suitable means, to seek the ministry; while they, as carefully, discourage and keep back the LATTER. Let presbyteries and synods take order on this subject, at every meeting, keeping it constantly before the minds of all the ministers, and elders, and churches, within their bounds, and recommending unceasing attention to it, as one of the most vital parts of their stated business, as judicatories of Christ. Let every congregation ask—'Can we not furnish from our number, and support in study, at least one pious young man, to be trained up for the ministry of reconciliation?' Let every wealthy Christian, who feels that he cannot preach the gospel himself, ask—'Cannot I indirectly become a preacher, by selecting and sustaining one, if not more, beloved youth, 'strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus,' who may go forth, and be made 'a blessing to perishing thousands?' Let pious fathers and mothers ask—'Have we no sons, and if we have none, have our neighbours no sons, whose hearts the Lord has enlightened and sanctified, and whom we should be glad to see bearing the gospel far hence to the Gentiles?' And let ALL—ALL—male and female, who desire the speedy conversion of the world, ask—'Can we not, nay, are we not bound, to take a deeper interest and agency in this great subject than we have ever yet done? Can we not pray more, and give more, and make more efforts to rouse and animate others to come to the help of a cause so vital in its character, and so dear to the heart of every intelligent Christian?' You see, my friends, that this is a cause in the prosecution of which every one, without exception, may contribute some aid. Yes, every one who has a heart to pray, a tongue to speak, or a cent to give, may be a 'worker together with God,' in this great concern, which may be said to lie at the foundation of all enlightened efforts for promoting the best interests of mankind. For it is only when ministers shall be raised up by tens of thousands, that the gospel can possibly be preached 'to every kindred, and people, and nation, and tongue.'"

EXAMINATION OF CANDIDATES.

The following letter embodies the views and experience of the Board, in explanation of the recent injunction of the General Assembly, concerning the ANNUAL EXAMINATION of all her candidates for the gospel ministry: as such we commend it most earnestly to all our ministers, but especially to the Stated Clerks and the Chairmen of the Educational Committees of our Presbyteries.

EDUCATION ROOMS, 821 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, November, 1863.

REV. —— ——:

Dear Brother—Yours of a recent date is to hand, and the contents duly noted. In reference to Mr. ——, one of the candidates of your Presbytery, allow me to say that some misapprehension must exist, inasmuch as your March recommendation, as Chairman of your Presbyterial Committee on Education, was received and favourably acted upon by the Board, and our Treasurer informs us, that his quarterly appropriations have been regularly forwarded to him.

This misapprehension may have arisen, however, from the fact of our calling attention to the injunction of the last Assembly, which requires that all re-recommendations of candidates, by their Presbyteries or Presbyterial Committees, in the future, must be based upon their re-examination.

The design of this injunction is to cultivate a more frequent intercourse, personal and by correspondence, between the Presbyteries and their candidates. These examinations, it is granted, do not necessarily involve a personal appearance before the Presbytery, (annually,) which is greatly to be desired, if practicable; but they can be efficiently and satisfactorily conducted by the exchange of suitable letters between the Presbytery, or its Educational Committee, and the young brethren under their watchful care and supervision.

We feel that any authorized member or Committee of Presbytery can suggest eight or more practical questions—so constructed as to prevent monosyllabic answers—on the fundamental issues involved in a preparation for the glorious work of the gospel ministry, which will effectually draw out the mind of the candidate, and elevate the entire tone of his thought and feeling concerning his life-work.

This rule is the result of the long experience of the Board in its continued efforts to raise the general standard and ministerial character of the candidates of our church. It is believed, and we have found it, to work well in every particular.

More frequent contact of a Presbytery with her candidates, is better for the Presbytery; the brethren then learn what kind of young men they are commending to the enjoyment of a sacred fund, devoted to a specific purpose; it is better for the candidate, as it more or less associates him with the officials of the church, acquainting him with the business forms and proprieties of church order, while it offers the finest advantages for spiritual development and growth of grace; it is vastly better for the credit of the Board in the eyes of the church, to which we have to look for the means to carry on the good work; and you see at a glance how greatly all this must redound to the welfare of the cause of Christ in all its bearings upon the world.

May we not, therefore, ask your kind official coöperation in the observance of this important injunction of the General Assembly, and hope that you will secure the annual examination of the young brethren applying to your Presbytery for its commendation. In your reports please state that the re-recommendation is based upon a re-examination.

Thanking you for your past interest in our Board, and hoping for your continued support and coöperation,

I am fraternally yours, &c.

DIAMOND GATHERING.

Where the waters of the Delaware return to their fountain, and mingle once more with the parent waters of the Atlantic, there is a beach well known to Cape May excurtionists as Diamond Beach. The beach is so called from a peculiar species of pebble, in which it abounds, which, though differing very little, in appearance, from the pebbles found on almost any beach, becomes, under the transforming hand of the lapidary, a sparkling brilliant, vieing in beauty with the diamonds of Golconda.

Apart from these pebbles, washed by the tidal waves of the Delaware, the Beach has few attractions. It is reached by a most uninteresting route, which winds through sand-hills and clumps of stunted pines, whilst the shore is strewn with the unsightly carcases of decaying crabs, which, after furnishing repasts to greedy vultures, remain to taint the atmosphere, and offend the eye. The excursionist is not likely to visit Diamond Beach except to gather diamonds. The motive which impels him is the value which he attaches to the stray pebbles to be found on that barren and noisome shore. Nor is he drawn to the scene by the present appearance of these pebbles. It is not the pebble as it lies among its fellows of the beach that lures him, but the pebble as it shall be, when it has passed through the hands of the lapidary, and sparkles in its setting of gold.

Dear Christian reader, there is another beach where diamonds of no equivocal value may be gathered, to which we would gladly lure your footsteps. It lies where the river of time rolls forth into the boundless ocean of eternity. It is the old diamond beach of Earth. Upon its shores the waters of this mighty river are continually casting up pebbles of priceless value. They are not unfrequently passed by because of the rudeness of their guise, or the repulsiveness of their surroundings. The rich deposits of this ancient stream are often found where nothing but a deep persuasion of their inestimable value could induce the gatherer to go. In the solitary cot, in the by-places of the crowded city, in the dark places of heathenism, under the vertical rays of Africa, and amid the eternal snows of Greenland, these priceless diamonds await the advent of the gatherer's feet. Go forth upon this time-washed beach, and gather these diamond-ornaments for the brow of thy Beloved. Be not repelled by the sable hue, or the savage mien, or the moral deformity, or the squalid poverty of their present guise. Undeterred by such considerations, go forth to the work of gathering, and placing the rude pebbles in the hands of the great spiritual Lapidary, fear not the issue. Assured of their value by the Saviour's own estimate, as attested by the sufferings he endured, in order to secure them for his crown; and confirmed in that assurance by all that thou hast thyself experienced of his workmanship in cutting and transforming thine own hard heart, take thy place upon the beach, despite the repulsiveness of thy surroundings, and gather diamonds for the diadem of the Redeemer. By the voice of that blood which cries to thee from Calvary, by the peace and hope imparted through the application of that blood to thine own soul; by the Macedonian cry now echoed back from all lands, as these priceless pearls sink beneath the flood to rise no more upon the shores of time, thou art invoked to enter upon, and prosecute, with all thy might, the task of gathering assigned thee by thy now absent, but soon returning Lord.

STALWART SOULS.

We find by experience that our souls cannot live on that thin and spare diet which they are entertained with at their own home; neither can they be satiated with those jejune and insipid morsels which this world furnisheth their table with. . . . The more we endeavour to extract an autarchy out of our own souls, the more we torment them, and force them to feel and sensate their own pinching poverty. Ever since our minds became so dim-sighted as not to pierce into that original and primitive blessedness which is above, our wills are too big for our understandings, and will believe their beloved prey is to be found where reason discovers it is not; they will pursue it through all the vast wilderness of this world, and force our understandings to follow the chase with them—nor may we think to tame this violent appetite, or allay the heat of it, except we can look upward to some eternal and almighty goodness which is alone able to master it.

It is not the nimbleness and agility of our own reason which stirs up these hungry affections within us, (for then the most ignorant sort of men would never feel the sting thereof;) but indeed some more potent nature which hath planted a restless motion within us, that might more forcibly carry us out to itself, and therefore it will never suffer itself to be controlled by any of our thin speculations, or satisfied with those airy delights that our fancies may offer to it; it doth not, it cannot, rest itself anywhere but upon the centre of some almighty good, some solid and substantial happiness.

The whole work of this world is nothing but a perpetual contention for true happiness, and men are scattered up and down the world, moving to and fro therein, to seek it. Our souls, by a natural science, as it were, feeling their own original, are perpetually travailing with new designs and contrivances, whereby they may purchase the scope of their high ambition. Happiness is that pearl of price which all adventure for, though few find it. It is not gold or silver that the earthlings of this world seek after, but some satisfying good which they think is there treasured up. Neither is it a little empty breath that ambition and popularity soar after, but some kind of happiness that it thinks to catch and suck in with it.

It must be some divine efflux running quite through our souls, awakening and exalting all the vital powers of them into an active sympathy with some absolute good, that renders us completely blessed. It is not to sit gazing upon a deity by some thin speculations; but it is an inward feeling and sensation of this mighty goodness displaying itself within us, melting our fierce and furious natures, that would fain be something in contradiction to God, into an universal compliance with itself, and wrapping up our amorous minds wholly into itself, whereby God comes to be all in all to us. And therefore so long as our wills and affections endeavour to fix upon anything but God and true goodness, we do but anxiously endeavour to wring happiness out of something that will yield no more than a flinty rock to all our pressing and forcing of it. The more we endeavour to force out our affections to stay and rest themselves upon any finite thing, the more violently will they recoil back again upon us.

The foundation of heaven and hell is laid in men's own souls, is an ardent and vehement appetite after happiness. The soul of man was made with such a large capacity as it is, that so it might be better fitted to entertain a full and liberal happiness, that the divine love and goodness might more freely spread itself in it, and unite it to itself.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Mission House, 23 Centre Street, New York.

News received to November 13th, 1863.

LATEST DATES AT THE MISSION STATIONS.

Chippewa, October 31st; San Francisco, October 14th; Shanghai, August 20th; Ningpo, August 17th; Canton, August 10th; Futtehpore, September 19th; Mynpurie, September 1st; Landour, September 19th; Lodiana, August 31st; Kapurthala, September 14th; Lahor, September 19th; Rio de Janeiro, September 8th; Bogota, September 10th; Corisco, August 18th; Monrovia, September 4th.

SELECTED NOTICES FROM THE LETTERS.

At Grand Traverse station, Chippewa mission, we regret to learn the death of Emily, daughter of the Rev. P. Dougherty, nine years of age—a child much beloved, whose death is "the first break in the household." A former pupil in the school was received into the church at the last communion season.

At San Francisco, Mr. Loomis mentions the expected return of a valued Chinese teacher to China, whose place he was anxious to see soon supplied.

At Shanghai, there had been much sickness and mortality among the natives, but it was passing away. Mr. Roberts and his family were on a visit to Tungchow, for the health of his wife and child. Mr. Gamble was making excellent progress in executing a font of beautiful small-sized type, which will be of great service.

At Ningpo, Mr. Green speaks of inquirers and of the schools, as still doing well. The native church-members, as well as the missionaries, deplore the death of Mr. Rankin, which was reported last month.

From Canton, Dr. Kerr reports the opening of a dispensary at Shiklung, which he expects to visit once a month. A German missionary will thereby be enabled to labour at that place.

At Futtehpore, Mr. Johnston regrets the indifference shown to the gospel. His eyes were improved, so that he could resume some of the services.

At Mynpurie, Mr. Wikoff mentions, with warm interest, the opening of five schools for girls and women, under Mrs. Wikoff's superintendence.

At Landour, Mr. Scott reports his health as much improved, and Mr. Fullerton's as also better.

The marriage of Miss Mary Anna Campbell, daughter of the late Rev. Dr. Campbell, to Captain Alexander B. Morgan, H. M. 19th regiment, is reported by the Rev. J. S. Woodside. The school at Kapurthala had over two hundred scholars in attendance when re-opened.

A Missionary Book of much interest was nearly finished at the Lodiana press, under the supervision of the Rev. John Newton—the Proceedings of the Lahor Missionary Conference. Its carefully prepared papers, and reports of discussions on various missionary topics, will possess great value, and be of special interest to many of our readers. Copies will be sent to this country for sale.

In Brazil, Mr. and Mrs. Blackford were expecting to occupy the station at San Paulo, and Mr. Schneider would remain at Rio with Mr. and Mrs. Simonton. These changes it was believed would increase the influence of the mission. More labourers are called for in this country.

To Bogota, Mr. Wallace and his family had returned from Fusugasuga. He mentions the sale of a considerable number of Bibles, Testaments, &c., to the same man who, some months ago, bought a supply of books. Opportunities for conversation with individuals, on the subject of religion, were still enjoyed. The latest newspaper accounts speak of political affairs as quiet.

At Corisco, Mr. Mackey speaks of the missionary force as being quite inadequate to the work. There was much danger of the few labourers now on the ground being broken down by overwork—see his letter in the Foreign Missionary of this month. We regret to learn that his own health had "not been very good recently."

In Liberia, Mr. James, whose experience and good judgment give much weight to his opinion, expresses strongly his sense of the importance of the Alexander High-school. He desires to see it in vigorous activity, as an indispensable auxiliary to our church in that country. As our readers are aware, measures are in progress for this purpose.

THE MISSION IN JAPAN.

We are often asked, whether our missionaries are safe in Japan. Serious troubles exist between the Japanese government and some of the foreign powers. At one time the foreign residents at Yokohama were at the point of taking refuge on the ships in the bay; most of those at Nagasaki left that place for China. Our missionary friends at Yokohama had some of their luggage packed up, and were expecting to go on board ship almost every hour, leaving most of their property and the mission-house to their fate, which would have been speedy destruction. But the danger appears to have passed away. It is understood that Yokohama will be protected by the French, and perhaps other foreign powers. The missionaries are not considered now to be in personal danger.

The relations of the Japanese and the foreign powers being unsettled, the work of the brethren will be restricted for the present; but it is believed that they can still proceed in learning the language, and when this is acquired, doors of usefulness will be open to them, especially through the press. The language is one which is very difficult to be learned, but the missionaries are not discouraged by this. Besides learning the Japanese, it appears that a knowledge of the Chinese will be almost indispensable.

As to the state of public affairs in this country, it is not easy to speak of them satisfactorily in a few sentences. There is virtually a state of war between some of the foreign powers and some of the daimios, or feudal chiefs; but this may not lead to a general war—it may even be a state of things not unacceptable to the central government, and it may perhaps tend to the removal of obstacles in the way of access to the people. On the other hand, it may readily come to pass that the existing disturbances will result in war with the government, unless foreigners should consent to withdraw from the country, and leave it to its former isolation. A result not likely to occur.

Whatever the immediate issue of these conflicts may be, and whatever the great difficulties which hinder the introduction of the gospel, we are sure nevertheless that the thirty millions of this people shall have the gospel preached to every creature amongst them all. And with all their refinement of a certain kind, and their progress in certain industrial pursuits, no people ever stood more in need of salvation—salvation in this world from lying, impurity, oppression, and reckless disregard of human life, as shown in suicide and murder—and salvation in all its momentous meaning for the world to come. Of life and immortality they are in the deepest ignorance.

A THANK-OFFERING—AN EXAMPLE.

We take pleasure in placing in our columns an extract from a letter, which was lately received at the Mission House from the pastor of a church in one of our western cities.

"I enclose you a check for ($500) Five Hundred Dollars, which please divide among the Boards of Foreign Missions, Domestic Missions, Education, Publication, and Church Extension.—One hundred to each. It is a thank-offering of Christian parents for providential guidance and care given to a youthful son, who has just returned home after nearly two years' service in the Union army. This is especially for friends raised up in every time of need, in sickness and in health; for protection from death or wounds through the three days of terrible conflict at Stone River; and for deliverance from dangers most imminent in an untenable position at the battle of Chicamauga, without any greater injury than a gunshot wound through the wrist."

INDIA—LODIANA MISSION.

The Missionary Work at Dehra, 1862.

The Missionaries—Loss by Fire—Changes.

This station is under the charge of the Rev. David Herron and his wife, assisted, during the period covered by this Report, by two native Christian labourers. Miss Catharine L. Beatty is now also connected with this station as a teacher.

On the 30th of December of last year, our range of Native Christians' houses, a building 150 feet long and 35 feet wide, was set on fire, and about one-half of it left in complete ruins. In the beginning of April, just the day after the damage done by this fire had been repaired, and when the missionary and the native assistants were absent from the station, attending the Hardwar Fair, the building was fired again, and entirely consumed. After each of these fires, we made an appeal to the English residents of the station for aid, in making the necessary repairs, and also in carrying on our missionary operations. These appeals were responded to by donations amounting to eight hundred and five rupees, (about $400,) for which we would here offer our grateful acknowledgments. The repairs are now completed; and the building, covered with a fireproof roof, is much more substantial and comfortable than it was before the fires.

Soon after the beginning of the year, the station sustained a great loss, in the removal of Mr. Calderwood to Ambala. The necessity of filling the vacancy that had occurred at that station, being urgent, and he being the only person available at the time, we cheerfully consented to the change as a temporary measure. When, however, the mission afterwards proposed to locate him permanently at that place, we agreed to the proposal, only on the condition, that we be allowed to employ a head-teacher for the city school. This permission being granted, we commenced at once to make inquiries for a suitable person for the post. After some time, we were successful in securing the services of Babu Brijnath Mittar, who had received his education in the Free Church Institution at Calcutta, and who had had experience in the teaching and management of schools, both in Bengal and the upper Provinces. We feel grateful to the brethren of the Free Church, for training such men to be assistants in our work.

Disappointments—Inquirers.

In connection with our native brethren, however, our experience is not all joyful;—we have many sorrows and disappointments. During the past year, we had to deprive, for unchristian conduct, three of the members of our little congregation, of Christian privileges. The young educated Musalman, of whom we spoke so hopefully in our last report, has bitterly disappointed us. For months, we were led to believe that he was a sincere inquirer after the truth, and to hope that he would become a useful member of this church. But he has returned to his Musalman friends, and publicly renounced Christianity in one of the masjids of the city.

At present we have three inquirers. A great part of last cold season, a number of people, amounting at times to about thirty, attended regularly our daily worship, the Sabbath-school, and other religious services. They called themselves Christians, and were desirous of being employed in connection with the mission. We gave them work on the compound, and, by their labour principally, commenced, in a small way, the cultivation of tea and arrow-root. Feeling our inability to give employment to so many, and the desirableness of having a home and the means of support for Native Christians, we applied to Government for a grant of waste land in the Doon. We selected a tract of six hundred acres, to the east of Dehra. We asked Government to grant it to the people, not because they were Christians, but because they were as truly objects of charity as the thousands that had been fed during the late famine, by the bounty of Government; as they had been, on account of their adopting our faith, excluded from the society and sympathy of their friends, and from most of the means of making a livelihood. After a length of time, we received a letter from the Commissioner, saying that the piece of land we had selected was so unhealthy that it would be no charity to native Christians to give it to them, and advising me to apply for a tract in a part of the Doon, which he highly recommended on account of its healthfulness; but the letter gave us no hope of a favourable reply from the Government. Two or three gentlemen of Dehra and Mussoorie took a very lively interest in the matter, and advised us to solicit the land for the native Christians, not as objects of charity, but as loyal subjects of Her Majesty's Government, who ought to be cared for by a Christian Government, when its laws cannot protect them from the losses and sufferings which they endure on account of their religious belief. In the mean time, however, so many of the people had gone to other places in pursuit of employment, that we did not feel justified in making an application for the few that remained.

Larger Congregations—Missionary Journey—An Affecting Incident.

Our congregation is now larger than it has ever been. About seventy persons, old and young, attend our Sabbath services. Of this number, only fifteen are in full communion. All belonging to our native Christian community, who cannot read the Roman Urdu, are taught to do so, and are also instructed in an easy catechism, in a Sabbath-school, which meets in the morning before public worship. Another Sabbath-school is held in the evening, which all belonging to the congregation attend, either as teachers or pupils.

The gospel, with but few interruptions, has been preached daily in the bazar; one short itineration was made; the melas at Tapkeshwar, Dehra, and Hardwar, were attended, and on these occasions many books and tracts were distributed. At the last place, we tried to sell our books at prices little more than the value of the paper they contained; but from the sales of four or five days, we realized scarcely as many annas. During the remaining days of our stay, we distributed our books as in former years. On this occasion, there was nothing unusual in the opposition or attention of the crowds which we daily addressed. There was one incident of the fair, however, which may be deemed worthy of mention. While the Rev. Theodore Wylie was addressing a crowd, we noticed a woman sitting a few yards from us, on a low wall that served the preacher for a pulpit, and the rest of us for a seat, while we waited our turn to speak to the people. She listened with so earnest attention, that we became quite interested in her. At length we noticed, with regret, that she had gone. In a short time, however, she returned, and coming close to Gilbert McMaster, our catechist, addressed him in almost the very words addressed to Paul by the jailer, "What shall I do to be saved?" and added, "I have come several times to Hardwar, but have received no benefit." The catechist proceeded to explain, in a simple and forcible manner, the way of salvation, till he was interrupted by rude fellows in the crowd, who were amused to see him speaking to a woman. While we interfered to restore quiet, the woman, ashamed of the notice she had attracted, shrank back into the crowd, and in a moment was lost from our sight. We followed in the direction which she went, in the hope of finding her, and instructing her more fully, but we failed to find her. We followed her, however, with the prayer, that God would bless to her the word which she had heard, and lead her, in his good providence, to some one who would teach her more fully the salvation after which she seemed to be earnestly inquiring.

The Schools.

We have already mentioned that we have secured the services of Babu Brijnath Mittar, as head teacher of the boys' school. Shortly after he entered on his duties, the school was changed to an Anglo-vernacular school, in which every boy studies English, and with it either Hindi or Persian, as he chooses. At the time the change took place, the number of boys in attendance was one hundred and fifty-five. Now, only six weeks afterwards, two hundred pupils are in regular attendance.

Year after year we receive renewed encouragement, in conducting the native Christian girls' boarding-school. At the close of the mission year, the number of the pupils was thirty, and should all the new pupils attend of whom we have heard, the number will be between thirty-five and forty for the current year. We continue to regard this school as a department of our labour, which is conferring unspeakable benefits on the native Christian community. We would ask for it the prayers of all the members of the mission.

The heathen girls' school was carried on only about two months of the past year, on account of our not having a competent teacher.

Mission to the Afghans.

The Missionary and his Work.

This mission was commenced in 1857, and its only labourer is the Rev. I. Loewenthal, whose station is at Peshawar, on the eastern border of Afghanistan. His chief work, after learning the language of the Afghans, has been the translation of the Scriptures into Pushto, and he has been permitted to complete the translation of the New Testament into this language, in the Arabic character. We trust his life and health will be spared, so that he can translate the Old Testament also. At the date of his last letter, June 17th, he was not translating, but was employing his pen on other Pushto work, and was engaged in preaching the gospel, as opportunity and his strength permitted. A little book for native Christians, a History of the Church, which he had written, has been translated into Tamil and Telugu, and will be translated into other languages of India. The Madras School-book Society publish it as a Prize Essay, though no pecuniary reward is made to the author. His labour in this way is of great value.

It will be remembered that the Afghans, about five millions in number, are an independent people, half-civilized, fierce, and bigoted in their Mohammedan faith, amongst whom missionaries would not be tolerated, nor indeed could any Europeans or Americans dwell as yet safely among them. But their language may be learned, the Scriptures translated into it, Christian books, to some extent, prepared in it, and thus an indispensable part of the missionary work may now be performed, for the Afghans, if not among them. Moreover, the city of Peshawar and the neighbouring district contains many of this people, and a certain measure of access to them may there be enjoyed, under the protection of the British government. The work of our esteemed missionary, and of a few Christian brethren of an English Episcopal Missionary Society, for such a people, is certainly attended with much discouragement; yet we should feel thankful for the door partially open, and for the progress already made. We regard Mr. Loewenthal's translation of the New Testament into Pushto, as a work, which itself repays the labour of a life-time; and we yield to no discouragement as to the future. Afghan bigotry will be melted down or broken in pieces; the gospel will rule over this people; and their remarkable energy, no less than their geographical situation, will enable them to spread the Christian faith widely in Central Asia.

Mr. Loewenthal is connected with the Lodiana Mission, from the Annual Report of which for 1862, we reprint the following paper from his pen.

Difficulties of Missionary work among Afghan Mohammedans.

As regards missionary operations among the Afghans, there is little to report that is new, less that is interesting, and least that is encouraging. As the missionary gains greater fluency in the Pushto language, a greater readiness in arguing from the Quran, and those verities admitted by the theoretical creed of the Mohammedans, as well as a more intimate acquaintance with Afghan modes of thinking, there is a corresponding increase of hostility and bitterness manifested by his hearers in the bazar. This may seem paradoxical, and to require an explanation, and that the more, as the mission to the Afghans is the only one in Asia, and, with perhaps a single exception, in the world, which addresses itself wholly and professedly to Mohammedans only by the means of street preaching.

Most false religions content themselves with externals, Islam among them. Saying prayers, keeping the annual fast, and having the Mohammedan creed on the lips on all occasions, make up the religion of the Musulman, even theoretically, as far as the mass is concerned. But more important than these, among the Afghans, is shaving the head, trimming the moustache orthodoxly, and wearing the oriental dress. Any one correct in these matters, is a faithful believer, prima facie. Any one not wearing the oriental dress, letting his hair grow, and paying no attention to the ornament of his upper lip, is prima facie an alien, a Faringhi, an unbeliever, a kafir. To the mind of the native, European dress and Mohammed's religion are totally incompatible. The word "Faringhi" implies a foreigner as to birth, and hence, and of course, as to religion. That a European, who speaks a foreign speech, (the Afghan calls Hindustani even, the language of the English,) and has strange manners, should ever be or become a Mohammedan, appears to the Afghan extremely absurd even to suppose.

When he is told, that if the mission of Mohammed be true, it is incumbent on all men to believe in him, he readily assents to the proposition, as "all men" to him, in this connection, means "all orientals;" but as soon as he is reminded, that then the Faringhi also should be obliged to become a Musulman, he will laugh at the preposterous suggestion, be he the gravest

Mullah. The Mohammedan regards the Christians, as the Christians of the Middle Ages regarded the Jews, as the relic of an obsolete religion, whom to convert never enters his thoughts. As long as the Afghan is preached to in Hindustani, he takes it coolly, as not concerning him, and as quite natural that a Sahib, speaking a strange tongue, should preach a strange religion. But when he hears himself addressed in a language, which he has probably never heard from the mouth of a European before, and finds that the preacher knows at least the phrases and formulas and proof-texts of Mohammedanism, as well as he does, and much better than the majority of his own countrymen, he becomes really exasperated. He will first offer money, he will offer his daughter, if the "Faringhi Mullah" would only become a Mohammedan; when these tempting offers fail, he comes to look upon the Pushto-speaking, Arabic-quoting preacher, very much as upon an apostate.

Hence there is no improvement observable in the temper or manners of the audiences, as compared with previous years. Coarse and brutal replies meet the preacher's mildest statements, or most earnest entreaties. Contradiction, contention, insult to religion, is all that his faintly heard utterances call out. They are faintly heard, because the audiences are almost always noisy, after the first ten minutes. If the preacher tells them plainly—as he must sometimes—that he does not wish to argue, and that whoever is not in the humour of listening quietly, may betake himself elsewhere, he is told as plainly that they will not allow innocent people to be perverted, that they will not go away, and that they will make a noise. And well it is, if they proceed to nothing worse.

Fears of some Christian people.—The course pursued by the Missionary.

It is hard, after meeting with this persistent and unyielding opposition on the part of bigoted Pathans, to have another contradiction to encounter, from quite a different quarter, namely, from good Christian people. They object to street preaching, most of all among fanatical Afghans, who say without reserve that they take every word the preacher says, as an insult to themselves and their religion. The missionary is reminded of the wise precept, not to cast pearls before swine; he is told that the manner of his proceeding is opposed to the spirit of the gospel; Christ's church must employ a silent, unostentatious method; "He shall not cry, nor lift up, nor cause his voice to be heard in the street;" that the reverence due to religion implies reserve, and precludes obtrusivenees; and that all this has a tenfold application, among a people, of whom one who has known them longest says, that their next rising will be a religious insurrection, so that preaching to promiscuous crowds not only endangers the life of the missionary, but the tranquillity of the people.

Often as these objections to the public proclamation of the gospel have been replied to before, it may be necessary to state, in a very few words, the grounds on which the missionary is forced to pursue the course he does. To take the latter part of the argument first, namely, that taken from the fanatical character of the people, it may be sufficient to reply, that the same objection was raised, and the same prognostications made, when missionaries first addressed Bengalis and Hindustanis; yet speech has remained free among them, and it may reasonably be expected, that the law which changes intolerant opponents into patient listeners, and patient listeners finally into sincere converts, will also in the end begin to operate among the Afghans. To the more general objection against street preaching, it is enough to oppose the great principle, that it is the mission of all truth, to proclaim itself to all, whether they hear or forbear; that this is pre-eminently the case with Christianity, which is aggressive in its very essence, and intolerant of all systems of error, that live by pretending to be truth. The missionary would probably be most willing to abandon the most wearing, the most irksome, perhaps the most repugnant, part of his duty, if sufficient people could be got together in any other way, to instruct. But people will not visit him, except by stealth, and singly, unless they are those who can afford to brave the opinion of the rabble, and these are but few. He must, therefore, go to the market-place, not only to "bear witness," but to make known his very existence and presence in the place. And moreover, the command to "preach the gospel to every creature," while it may not be confined to the oral proclamation, certainly cannot be construed to exclude it.

There would, perhaps, be less necessity for giving so much time and labour to this branch of the work, if other branches were equally accessible; but they are not. The unwillingness of the Afghan of this frontier to accept anything to read, which is offered him by the missionary, continues without abatement. The gospel has been abolished, why should he read it? is his constant objection. There can be nothing good in a book, if it does not prohibit pork and wine, etc., etc.

The Work of Itineration.

Even the work of itineration appears more backward than it did formerly. During the cold weather of 1861–62, the principal civil authority prevented the missionary from proceeding on a preaching tour, which he was on the point of setting out on, on the ground that the religious excitement among certain clans, to which allusion was made in last year's report, was still in existence, and the time was therefore not well suited for a missionary to venture among them, as this, in some way, would tend to lead to disturbances.

At a later date, the missionary found himself near the camp of a native regiment, consisting largely of Afghans. A native officer and a private in this regiment are professing Christians; they occupied a tent by themselves, which the missionary made it his practice to visit, mornings and evenings, for the purpose of reading and explaining the Scriptures, and conducting worship in Pushto, the language of the persons baptized. Soon other native officers and men attended on these occasions, of their own accord; the explanations of Scripture would lead to conversations and friendly discussions, and some of the men began to manifest much earnest interest; among the latter, were two Siyahposh Kafirs, and one Afridi, men who have so little of anything like religion, that it is easy for them to adopt anything that is seriously offered them. The interest indeed was great enough, for one or two of the more intolerant Mohammedan officers to threaten their men with all sorts of evil consequences, that would follow their giving the Padri a favourable hearing. However, their alarm was needless. The officer commanding the regiment thought it his duty to request the missionary to discontinue his visits to the tent of the native officer. And here the movement was arrested.

A Sojourn in Cashmere—The Religion of the People—Changes.

The summer months were spent by the missionary in a tour to and in Kashmir, undertaken for purposes partly of relaxation, and partly of missionary exploration. The past history and present condition of Kashmir offer very much to interest every religious mind. Few countries exhibit so distinctly the traces of the different religions which have prevailed in them, as Kashmir does. The strata of religious belief, which have gone to make up the character of the inhabitants, as it now is, the by-word of the nations of Asia, can almost be counted by the eye.

The earliest religion of the inhabitants of Kashmir was serpent-worship; this has left its mark in the names of the numerous springs, each spring bearing the name of the dragon or serpent, which was supposed to preside over it. The worship of Siva, the usages of Hinduism, and the power of the Brahmans, began to have their sway, according to native statements, as early as 3700 B. C., or, as this date is modified by European scholars, 2600 B. C. A succession of Hindu dynasties extended down to the end of the thirteenth century, when a Mohammedan, by marrying the widow of a Hindu king, obtained the throne, and soon the whole country was converted to Mohammedanism. Of the monuments of their religion, which this long line of Hindu kings erected, there are but very few whose origin can be placed long before the beginning of the Christian era; but the whole valley is covered with the remains of later days, which are now in every state of preservation and ruin, from the shapeless mound of debris at Avantipur, to the almost perfect structure at Payach. In grandeur of conception and execution, some of the temple ruins of Kashmir may vie with some of the finest remains of all antiquity; in simplicity of style and ornament also, they are much distinguished above what is known as Hindu taste; their style, indeed, is sui generis. However, five hundred years of intolerant Mohammedan rule have left extremely few of these ancient remains to stand upright; temples were turned into mosques and tombs, and where this was not possible, the structures have been carried away, stone by stone, to be put sometimes to most degrading uses. At every step, in Srinagar, [the chief city,] the traveller meets with portions of columns, pediments, friezes, capitals, hewn and squared and carved stones, forming foundations of houses, steps, quays, piers of bridges, fullers' and dyers' vats, and all other imaginable objects. But little more than forty years have passed, since the Mohammedan had to yield to the tasteless Sikh; and scarce fifteen, since a Hindu dynasty once more ascended the throne of Kashmir, and Mohammedan structures, now in their turn, form the quarries for the modern builder. The pretty summer-house on the "Isle of Chinars," erected by the Mogul, has been demolished, to build with its material a hideous Siwala in modern Hindu taste, in which the Maharaja worships, when in Srinagar. The great Hindu temple on the right bank of the Jhelum, which was turned into a Musulman king's tomb in the fourteenth century, has been avenged; for a beautiful Mohammedan structure, on the left, has now been ruthlessly converted into a cenotaph for the late Gulab Singh. The "king's tomb," by the way, is now used as a granary. And the process is going on. In the early days of Mohammedanism in Kashmir, a celebrated spring, consecrated to Kali, was taken from the still remaining Hindus, and a building erected over it to serve as a shrine for a celebrated Sayid, called Shahi Hamadan, now the most picturesque mosque in Kashmir. But the Brahmans of the present day, in the restored "reign of justice," as they call the Hindu rule, (dharm raj,) are claiming the place as their property, and the Mohammedans have had to ransom it once or twice with considerable sums. But this has not saved them from a great indignity. The red mark of Kali has been painted on the very shrine of the saint, on the very wall built by King Sikandar called the Idol-breaker, and the Brahman may be seen rubbing his forehead against the ochre, whilst three steps from him the cowed Islamite is whispering his anti-idolatrous creed.

The Mohammedans of this Valley at the present day—The Hindus.

For, though nine-tenths of the population of Kashmir are Mohammedans, they are not at all like the insolent, swaggering, domineering followers of the prophet one knows in British territory, least of all like the haughty Afghan; on the contrary, they are subdued and humble; for forty years they have not heard the Muazzin's call to prayers, and they have been made more aware that they are no longer the ruling race, than they have ever been in British territory. A Kashmiri Mohammedan does not consider it a grievance even, to be prevented from knocking down an opponent in argument. The present generation, too, are much more ignorant than their co-religionists elsewhere usually are, and they know it, and lament it, but seem to be totally incapable of devising or conceiving of a remedy. Some Maulvis were induced to visit the missionary now and then, during his stay in Kashmir; but they rarely entered into an argument; they assented to everything that was said.

It was somewhat different in street-preaching. After the first hinderances, arising from the narrowness and filthiness of the streets, had been overcome, it was never difficult to gather a large audience in a short time. As soon, however, as the preacher's object was clearly understood, he was continually interrupted by hooting, shouting, and all kinds of noisy opposition. This, one would have been apt to set down as opposition to the truth, enmity to the gospel, etc. This view, easily taken up, would have been quite erroneous. It was not the gospel at which these people were manifesting their displeasure; not the Christian religion, but that which alone they had an opportunity to take for the religion of the Christians. They manifested a most excusable indignation at the effrontery, (as they deemed it,) that a religion should be offered them, as superior to their own, such as they saw practised from year to year, by those whom they considered Christians. It was only by degrees that this initial opposition was overcome, and then the audiences were usually quiet and attentive for a long time. What discussions, on such occasions, did take place, were with Kabulis, or men from the plains; Kashmiris would not argue.

There are also, probably, some thirty or forty thousand indigenous Hindus in Kashmir, who ought to be considered for a moment. They are all Brahmans; but these also have little of the pride of the "twice-born" left. They wear the same dress as the Mohammedans, and do not shave their beard. With much lamentation, they will tell of the good old times, when the Brahmans of Kashmir led such holy lives, in observing all the ceremonies, that they could work miracles in consequence; but when some persecuting Mohammedan king obliged them to let their beards grow, and to change their dinner hour from noon to night, all their thaumaturgic powers departed from them, and now Brahmans were as bad as other people. Their ignorance certainly is nearly as great as that of the Mohammedans. Those even among them who read any of the Shastars, do so in Persian translations. They have a very great number of schools, all very small; and in all, both Hindu and Mohammedan, Persian is the only language taught. Only in one school, of those which the missionary visited, did he find the Devanagari character taught.

Cashmere as a Missionary Field—Translation of the Scriptures.

There are many elements, therefore, of a conflicting nature, which must be taken into consideration in determining the eligibility of Kashmir as a mission field. The character of the natives is mild, not fanatical, easily impressed; but at the same time frivolous, mercenary, and demoralized to a fearful degree. While a mission would probably meet with no fierce opposition of any kind, there would be the dangers of total indifference, and of mercenary eagerness to do anything for gain, to be encountered and avoided. Scores would probably at once become "inquirers" after the truth, if the missionary would only give them money, or a support without the necessity of labour. A species of "converts," of the same character, may also be expected. A school to teach English would at once be filled to its utmost capacity. Books, both Persian and Hindustani, would be accepted with eagerness. But a mission in Kashmir, to be a mission in earnest, should aim at more than attracting mercenary proselytes, establishing a school, or distributing books. The idea, perhaps entertained, that a mission in Kashmir need only be a hot weather mission, must at once be abandoned. The man who thinks of doing mission work for the Kashmiris, must be ready to devote himself to them altogether; the poor creatures have souls in the winter also. Everything possible must be done to show the Kashmiri that the missionary is not a mere visitor in the Valley, like other Europeans. He should, above all things, and first of all, acquire the language of Kashmir. The missionary, on his visit, preached in Persian; this is understood by many; Hindustani is also understood by some; but the vast mass of the people understand nothing but their mother tongue, which is Kashmiri. The missionary, at first, after preaching in the bazars in Persian, used to be pleased to see the large crowd break up into smaller groups, each around some one man, who was apparently repeating to his hearers in the vernacular, what had been said in Persian; the missionary was glad to see so many volunteer missionaries. It was only after a considerable time, when he had acquired enough of Kashmiri to understand what was going on, that he found out that these volunteers perverted almost everything that he was in the habit of saying. The people cannot be reached, unless the missionary is master of the vernacular.

A Kashmiri version of the New Testament was published in Serampore in 1830; this, however, is printed in the Sharadha character, which would, in the best case, be known only to Hindus, who form less than a tenth of the population of Kashmir; but the real fact is, that extremely few of the Brahmans even are able to read this character. Whether any version but the Persian could be used in Kashmir, under present circumstances, seems doubtful; experience alone could determine this question. Kashmiri is very rarely written, and then almost always in the Persian character. Of a literature, the language seems to possess nothing but a number of love-songs, and abridged translations of one or two of the Persian metrical romances.

If a new version of the Scriptures in Kashmiri be undertaken, it will probably be found expedient to discard even the Persian character for it, and to adopt the Roman character. With a contemporaneous system of schools, there would be a fair chance for the introduction of a character which certainly offers to the missionary cause advantages, which have not as yet been sufficiently recognised, or made use of.

For the creation of a literature, the field is wonderfully clear. Of the ancient Sanscrit learning, every vestige has disappeared; of the subsequent cultivation of the Persian language, there are but a few histories to testify now, and these are falling into oblivion among the natives; and the country seems to be waiting, politically, religiously, morally, and industriously, for some mind, or some idea, to revive it in all its interests. There is naught containing the regenerative germ so much needed, but Christianity.

BOARD OF PUBLICATION.

PUBLISHING HOUSE, 821 CHESTNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA.

Letters relating to agencies, donations of books and tracts, the appointment of Colporteurs, manuscripts and books offered for publication, the editorial department of the Record and Sabbath-school Visitor, and the general interests of the Board, to be addressed to the Rev. WILLIAM E. SCHENCK, D. D., Corresponding Secretary and Editor, No. 821 Chestnut street.

All communications, reports, remittances of money, donations, and orders for books, to be addressed to Mr. WINTHROP SARGENT, Superintendent of Colportage, Business Correspondent, and Treasurer.

Subscriptions for the Home and Foreign Record, and the Sabbath-School Visitor, and payments for the same, to be addressed to Mr. PETER WALKER, 821 Chestnut street.

THE SABBATH-SCHOOL VISITOR.

As a new year will soon commence, we beg to call the attention of the readers of the Record to the beautiful little paper published monthly by the Board, for the use of Sabbath-school scholars and other juvenile readers. It is neat in its appearance, is illustrated by handsome wood-cuts in every number, and above all, is filled with interesting and instructive religious reading, suitable for children and youth. Commendations of the Visitor, almost without a dissenting voice, come to us every week, and from far as well as near.

Yet this paper, the paper published by order of our own General Assembly, and specially adapted to the children of Presbyterian Sabbath-schools, has not been taken by a number of the Sabbath-schools of our connection, which procure their papers from other sources. Will not pastors, elders, Sabbath-school superintendents, and teachers, take the opportunity, now, at the beginning of a new year, to introduce our Visitor into the schools and families under their influence? If each of the readers of the Record would do what lies in his power, the circulation of the Visitor might be greatly enlarged, if not doubled, within the next few months.

OUR ARMY WORK ON THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Our great work of giving religious reading to our soldiers in hospitals and camps, and to our prisoners, has been diligently and actively prosecuted during the past summer. Large numbers of freed blacks, learning to read, have been furnished with our elementary publications. Nearly ten thousand volumes of books, and more than three hundred thousand pages of tracts have been distributed on the banks of the Mississippi alone. This work of distribution has been faithfully and discreetly done, with but little expense to the Board, by pious officers and soldiers, and by earnest, working chaplains, of various denominations, whose position enables them to realize its importance and usefulness, and who, appreciating the publications of the Board, are anxious to aid in their circulation. To encourage those who give to this work, and remember it in their prayers, and also to induce others to help us now, when our funds are low and we need help so much, we publish a few extracts from letters recently received from Vicksburg and Memphis.

A Congregational brother, a chaplain of untiring labour in our hospitals and elsewhere, who has, at his own request, received frequent and large supplies of our publications for gratuitous distribution, thus writes from Vicksburg:

"My last to you was written on the 14th ult. on the Big Black River, where I was stopping with my son, and a part of my regiment, and in the midst of a precious revival in camp. After spending three Sabbaths in camp, and fifteen days in those meetings, seeing the power of God in the conversion of many souls, circulating your 'Soldier's Pocket-book,' Tracts, 'Sabbath-school Visitor,' and the 'Primer,' among the blacks learning to read, my stock there being exhausted, I returned and entered on my duties as chaplain of a hospital in Vicksburg. . . . . There is terrible suffering, sickness, and death here among the coloured regiments, and in the camps of the women and children. The 12th Louisiana (coloured) mustered-in two months since with 883 men, is reduced now to about 200 able to do duty. Their average number of deaths was ten a day for a time. Other regiments have not suffered quite so much, but they waste away fearfully. Those who live, and are well, are very desirous of spelling-books, that they may learn to read, and I encourage them that I shall soon have them, to circulate gratuitously among them. Send me Primers, and such books as before, and I will try to put them to good use."

The wants of this brother were anticipated, a large box of books, Primers, Tracts, Visitors, Sheet-music, &c., having been sent to him before the receipt of his letter. These publications are now doing their work.

An agent of the United States Christian Commission thus writes from Memphis:

"We are receiving calls daily for such books, (for contraband-schools,) and could use them to good advantage. Your valuable publications for soldiers are much prized. I wish we could obtain a supply. The Soldier's Pocket-book is much called for. The good work is progressing well in this department. Revivals are in progress in four of the regiments about this city, and the interest is spreading."

The request of this brother was also complied with. Did our space permit we might multiply these extracts. We can give no more at present. Our readers get a glimpse of the work the Board is doing, and of the increasing demands upon it. God is graciously and wonderfully blessing our labours. We are greatly in need of funds. Will not our churches, our Sabbath-schools, and all our friends who love to do good, contribute liberally to the treasury of the Board, and thus enable it vigorously to prosecute this great and good work?

THE ARMY OF THE POTOMAC.

Dear Brother—The parcel of books you kindly granted, and forwarded to me at Washington, for distribution among the soldiers of the army of the Potomac, was faithfully distributed, and thankfully received.

I spent about a month in the army under General Meade, on the Rappahannock, labouring among the various camps, but chiefly in the Second Division, Third Corps. In common with the other delegates of the Christian Commission, I was supplied with the publications of various religious societies; but the thirty dollars' worth you sent me, were the only publications of the Presbyterian Board that came into my hands for distribution. On this account they were very acceptable, as they afforded a pleasant and profitable variety; but they were valued chiefly because of their intrinsic worth. The "Soldier's Pocket-book" is very much sought after; indeed all the books you furnished me were exceedingly appropriate for army distribution, and I hope and believe good was effected through their instrumentality.

Generally there was a very good state of things, morally and spiritually, among the soldiers. Meetings for preaching, exhortation, and prayer, were held every evening in our large chapel tent, or in the grove, and were well attended. I have never seen such earnest and interested congregations before. Quite a number professed conversion, and a still larger number to be reclaimed from a state of backsliding into which they had fallen, some of them since entering the army, and some of them before it. Of course there is much vice in the camps, particularly profanity and gambling; but in many tents in which both abounded, tears were shed, and prayer and praise were sometimes heard.

On the whole, I was pleased and profited by my visit to the army of the Potomac, and have reason to think that the pleasure and profit were mutual. For the reward of my labour, I look forward to that "better land," where the inhabitant shall no more say "I am sick," and the weary are at rest; where God will say to the humblest of his children, "Well done, good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

DISTRIBUTIONS IN INDIANA.

Indianapolis, October, 1863.

Rev. Dr. Schenck.

Dear Brother—I received the package of reading matter for the soldiers stationed here, from the Board of Publication, some time since. These have all been distributed among troops stationed at this place, and passing through, and have been, in all cases, very gladly received. The majority were distributed to Indiana soldiers here in camp or hospital, but quite a number were given to the men of the Potomac army in their recent passage through this place, and some to a battalion of the Invalid Corps stationed here.

Very respectfully, W. A. H.

FROM NEWPORT NEWS.

Newport News, Virginia.

My Dear Brother—Three hours since, I received the package you were pleased to send us. I have just come into my tent from a partial distribution thereof. The papers, tracts, and "Soldier's Pocket-book," which I distributed, were very thankfully received.

For the books and tracts sent, you have our hearty thanks. And if you could monthly forward us reading matter, if only the small papers, it would facilitate our usefulness in the regiment. If a thousand tracts could be distributed weekly, they would be read. The men are, as it were, starving for religious reading, and it would be our greatest pleasure to be able to furnish full supplies.

Be kind enough to recollect us, when you have books and tracts which you can devote to us.

With fraternal regards I am, yours,

J. J. C.

Chaplain 9th Reg. N. J. Volunteers.

THE SYNOD OF IOWA.

The Synod of Iowa, at its late meeting, unanimously adopted the following resolutions.

"Synod have heard the very interesting statements of Dr. Waters in regard to the happy effect of the distribution of the publications of our Board among our soldiers; and, feeling that a wide door for doing good is opened in this direction, would recommend that the pastors of churches within our bounds take special care to bring this subject fully before their people, and that the children of our Sabbath-schools be solicited to contribute to this good work.

"We would also recommend that the collections taken up among our people for the Christian Commission, be given through our own Board of Publication, as far as practicable."

For the Home and Foreign Record.

A SHORT EXHORTATION.

"Every professing Christian, at least all those who have leisure for reading, should endeavour to unite the knowledge of a good theologian with the experience of a real believer. In order to this, let Christians set apart time not only for reading, but studying the Scriptures; let them read theological books which explain and prove the doctrines of the gospel; let them commit to memory the admirable definitions of these doctrines contained in the Assembly's Shorter Catechism; let them attend upon the preaching of the word with a view not only to be comforted, but to be instructed."—J. A. James.

As for theological books to read, there are none better than those published by our Board, as for instance, Divine Purpose, Dickinson's Five Points, Great Supper, Lectures on the Shorter Catechism, Exposition of the Confession of Faith, Fisher's Catechism, Familiar Letters, What is Calvinism? Bible Truth, &c. Let these and others be read and studied, and our people will "unite the knowledge of a good theologian with the experience of a real believer." W. J. M.

NEW COLPORTEURS.

The Board has recently appointed the following new colporteurs, who are cordially commended to the co-operation of the Christian people in their respective fields of labour, and to the prayers of God's people everywhere.

1. Horatio N. Wright, for San Francisco, California, and its vicinity.

2. Joseph Cochran, for Clarion Presbytery, Pennsylvania.

3. R. L. McCune, for White Co., Illinois.

4. James S. Ferguson, for Madison and adjoining counties, N. Y.

5. James Gun, for the Presbytery of Grey, Canada West.

6. Wm. R. Carpenter, for the Presbytery of Carlisle, Pennsylvania.

7. Jacob Webster, for the Presbytery of Connecticut.

8. Eugene Laporte, for the Green Bay region in Wisconsin.

The Board of Publication is ready to employ a few more colporteurs during the coming winter, if suitable men for the work can be found. Application may be made to the Corresponding Secretary. See an article upon the necessary qualifications, in the Record for the last month.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

N. B. Any publication of the Board will be sent by mail, prepaid, on receipt of its catalogue price, with the order. Address MR. WINTHROP ARGENT, 821 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

I. THE THREE HOMES; or, Three Ways of Spending the Sabbath. By Nellie Graham, author of "Diamonds Reset," "Little Annie's First Thoughts," &c., &c. 18mo. pp. 216. Price 35 and 40 cents.

A beautiful story, the product of a cultivated and devout mind. The book is designed and well adapted to impress upon youthful minds the unspeakable importance of a proper observance of God's holy Sabbath, and to show that he will bless those who honour him by honouring his day.

II. WALTER AND ALICE; or, The Mother's Prayer Answered. By Abby Eldridge, author of "Kate Stanley." 18mo. pp. 179. Price 35 and 40 cents.

This little volume illustrates the power of prayer. The prayer of a mother, who died in early childhood, is blest to the conversion of her son, after he has run a long course of wilfulness and sin, and he is brought, by the grace of God, back to Christ and duty. A delightful little book.

III. GRACE ABBOTT; or, The Sunday Tea-Party. 18mo. pp. 144. Price 25 and 30 cents.

This work is intended to impress on small children the duty of keeping the Sabbath-day holy, and in a very touching and pleasing way depicts the early life of a little girl who was led and enabled by God's Spirit to do so, in spite of great temptations and obstacles thrown across her path. It is very interesting and well written.

IV. THE RAILROAD BOY. By the author of "Poor Nicholas." &c., &c. 18mo. pp. 180. Price 35 and 40 cents.

The scene of this story is laid in Prussia. Like "Poor Nicholas," by the same author, its leading incidents have been actual occurrences there. It is the history of a poor boy who loved God and trusted in the Saviour, and was brought through many trials into the ministry of the gospel. It will well repay a perusal.

V. MATTIE'S STORY; or, The Blessing of the Pure in Heart. 18mo. pp. 116. Price 25 and 30 cents.

This is the real life of a young disciple. Its aim is to depict her religious experience, tracing her first approach to the Saviour, and her growth in grace and usefulness, until transferred to glory.

VI. COUNSELS FOR THE SCHOOL-ROOM. A Plain Talk to Boys and Girls on Entering School. By John S. Hart, LL.D. 18mo. pp. 24. Price 5 cents.

A little work full of the counsels of wisdom and experience. We earnestly commend it to the attention of parents and teachers. The latter could not do a wiser thing than to keep some always on hand, and furnish a copy to every new pupil entering school.

VII. OUTLIVED HER USEFULNESS. Tract No. 267. pp. 4.

A tract well adapted to do good. It teaches that God has important work for his old and infirm disciples to do as well as for others.

BOARD OF CHURCH EXTENSION.

Corresponding Secretary—Rev. H. I. Coe.
Treasurer—David Keith, Esq.

Rooms of the Young Men's Christian Association, corner of Fifth and Olive Streets, St. Louis, Mo.

Communications on the subject of Church Extension should be addressed to the Corresponding Secretary, Corner of Fifth and Olive Streets, St. Louis, Mo.

Donations should be sent to David Keith, Esq., St. Louis, Mo., or, if more convenient, to J. D. Thorpe, Esq., Cincinnati, Ohio; A. Davidson, Esq., Louisville, Ky.; S. D. Powel, Esq., Treasurer of the Board of Domestic Missions, No. 910 Arch Street, Philadelphia; T. H. Nevin, Esq., Pittsburgh, Pa.; Mr. J. B. Kirtland, Memphis, Tennessee; or to William Rankin, Esq., Treasurer of the Board of Foreign Missions, 23 Centre street, New York.

APPROPRIATIONS FROM THE GENERAL FUND.

No appropriation is made without the recommendation of the Presbytery, or the Church Extension Committee of the Presbytery within whose bounds the church applying for aid is located.

No appropriation is paid until the Board receives a certificate from the Trustees of the church aided, stating that their church lot is properly secured, and that the amount appropriated will complete their house of worship, and leave the whole property free from debt.

Appropriations not called for within two years of the date thereof, are regarded as withdrawn.

WITHOUT MEAT.

Few realize the sacrifices required to erect sanctuaries by our feeble congregations. The self-denials are usually known only to God, to a small circle at home, and to the Board. At our last meeting, we made an appropriation to a church whose pastor, in explanation of their application for aid, says: "Our people have done all that they could; and some of them more than they are able. One gentleman, who subscribed twenty dollars, has not for a year been able to get a suit of clothes for himself to go to church in, and for weeks past has not been able to buy meat for his family. They are living on potatoes, beans, and rye flour."

UNDER A TREE.

Last week the Board aided a church-building enterprise within twenty miles of Philadelphia, of which a well-known minister wrote: "It started three months since, under a tree. Some of the neighbouring ministers, attracted by the moral destitution of the neighbourhood, began preaching there. In a few Sabbaths the congregation increased to hundreds; a flourishing Sabbath-school was organized; and even through the cold Sabbaths in September, the children have still met, and the congregation gathered under that tree, and listened anxiously to the preached gospel. Winter is now approaching, and there is no house to gather them into. So anxious are the people to secure the regular preaching of the gospel, that they have collected there and in the neighbourhood $300, and offer to lend their teams and personal efforts towards building a church."

DIVIDING WITH GOD.

A merchant, in answer to inquiries, refers back to a period, when, he says, "In consecrating my life anew to God, aware of the ensnaring influences of riches, and the necessity of deciding on a plan of charity before wealth should bias my judgment, I adopted the following system:

"I decided to balance my accounts, as nearly as I could, every month; and, reserving such a portion of profits as might appear adequate to cover probable losses, to lay aside, by entry on a benevolent account, one-tenth of the remaining profits, great or small, as a fund for benevolent expenditure, supporting myself and family on the remaining nine-tenths. I further determined, that if at any time my net profits, that is, profits from which clerk-hire and store expenses had been deducted, should exceed $500 in a month, I would give twelve and a half per cent.; if over $700, fifteen per cent.; if over $900, seventeen and a half per cent.; if over $1100, twenty per cent.; if over $1300, twenty-two and a half per cent.; thus increasing the proportion of the whole, as God should prosper, until, at $1500, I should give twenty-five per cent., or $375 a month. As capital was of the utmost importance to my success in business, I decided not to increase the foregoing scale, until I had acquired a certain capital, after which I would give one-quarter of all net profits, great or small; and on the acquisition of another certain amount of capital, I decided to give half, and on acquiring what I determined would be a full sufficiency of capital, then to give the whole of my net profits.

"It is now several years since I adopted this plan, and under it I have acquired a handsome capital, and have been prospered beyond my most sanguine expectations. Although constantly giving, I have never yet touched the bottom of my fund, and have repeatedly been astonished to find what large drafts it would bear. True, during some months I have encountered a salutary trial of faith, when this rule has led me to lay by the tenth, while the remainder proved inadequate to my support; but the tide has soon turned, and with gratitude I have recognised a heavenly hand more than making good all past deficiencies.

"This system has been of great advantage to me, enabling me to feel that my life is directly employed for God. It has afforded me happiness, in enabling me to portion out the Lord's money, and has enlisted my mind more in the progress of Christ's cause. Happy privilege, which the humblest may enjoy, of thus associating the common labours of life with the grateful service of the Saviour, and of making that which naturally leads the heart from God, subserve the highest spiritual good.

"This system has saved me from commercial dangers, by leading me to simplify business, and avoid extensive credits. It has made me a better merchant; for the monthly pecuniary observations which I have been wont to take, though often quite laborious, have brought me to a better knowledge of the state of my affairs, and led me to be more cautious and prudent than I otherwise should have been. I believe this system tends to enlarge the Christian's views, increase his disinterestedness, and lead him to shun the tricks of trade. My own observation also confirms the belief, that even warm-hearted Christians must determine beforehand on the system they will adopt, if they would secure the benefits of the gospel plan to themselves, under the grace and providence of God, or its happy results to the cause of Christ."

God has appointed no means of extensive usefulness which does not involve the self-denying and persevering exertions of his people; and if this divine system is to be generally adopted, it is essential that pastors of churches and public men, to whom others look for example and counsel, should first themselves put it in practice, and then commend it to others, and help them to form wise plans to render it practically efficient. Especially should all do this who are engaged in any way in raising funds, or collecting for benevolent objects. Every one who is brought to understand the power and efficiency of this system, is bound to spread it among all within the reach of his influence.

THE HOME AND FOREIGN RECORD.

By order of the General Assembly, the publication of the Home and Foreign Record in the quarto or newspaper form will cease with the December number. It will from thence be printed only in the octavo, or pamphlet form, which will be advantageous to those who annually bind it in a volume. The matters it presents have a permanent interest. It is our duty, as Christians, to know what, as a church, we are doing now; and, if preserved, it will be a valuable record of the progress of the church to succeeding generations.

The change presents a favourable opportunity for pastors and others interested in the welfare of the people, to make a new effort to circulate the Record among them. It is now several years since any considerable accession has been made to the list of subscribers, and it is thought that in many churches there are numbers, recently added, who know nothing of the existence of this periodical. It is hoped that the action of the Assembly will meet the approval of the church, which could be shown in no better way than by a great increase of subscribers.
